Thomas Hennessy of Whitneyville, while recently haying in the meadow, heard a fluttering in the brook, and upon investigation found a mink holding a duck under water near some overhanging alders. He made a splash on the water and the mink abandoned the duck, which came to the surface and feebly tried to swim. The fowl, which was easily caught, soon expired from a wound in the neck. Mr. Hennessy placed the duck upon the grass within a few feet of his work, and while yet meditating upon the prospects of a rich stew from his unexpected capture his attention was again called by the agitation of the water. He turned in season to see the mink in full possession of his bird. The thief was hotly pursued, but he hung to his prey and dexterously evaded every effort at capture, and finally mysteriously disappeared from view.—Kennebec (Me.) Journal.

Cheering.

This grewsome tale is told in a French paper: "The flying assassin of M. Carnot was caught and held until apprehended by M. L——, a good citizen of Lyons. Two evenings later he was visited at his home by a pair of well-dressed young men, who announced themselves as Parisian journalists, whose visit was for the purpose of honoring the brave M. L—— and to beg a photograph for illustration of a just article upon his admirable action. The good M. L—— complied with modest pleasure. As soon as the visitors had the gift fairly in their possession, they withdrew, only stopping at the door long enough to say, calmly: 'Sir! we are not journalists, but anarchists. We have your head—look out for it—it is already lost!'"

Wonderful Indian Runners.

A Tarahumaris Indian has been known to carry a letter from Guazapares to Chihuahua and back again in five days, the distance being nearly 800 miles. In some parts where the Tarahumaris serve the Mexicans they are used to run in the wild horses, driving them into the corral; it may take them two or three days to do it, sleeping at night and living on a little pinole. They bring in the horses thoroughly exhausted, while they themselves are still fresh. They will outrun any horse if you give them time enough. They will pursue deer in the snow, or with dogs, in the rain, for days and days, until at last the animal is cornered and shot with arrows, or falls an easy prey from sheer exhaustion, its hoofs dropping off.—Scribner.

Salvation Army Jubilee.

The great American Jubilee Congress of the Salvation Army will take place in New York City between Oct. 20 and 27, when Gen. Booth, the founder of the Army, will visit this country. On Monday, Oct. 22, a monster reception will be given the General in Union Square at 6:30 p. m., and a great welcome meeting in Carnegie Music Hall at 8 p. m. Tuesday, the 23, Gen. Booth will speak on the "Social Scheme," in Carnegie Music Hall. At 2:30 the same day the General will hold a special meeting for members of the Auxiliary League Hall. After leaving New York Gen. Booth will make a grand tour of the continent, occupying the rest of the year, and then visit Canada.

Like "Sweet Bells Jangled Out of Tune," Weak nerves respond harshly and inharmoniously to slight shocks, which would produce no effect upon strong ones. The shrill outcry of a child, the slamming of a door, the rattling of a vehicle over uneven pavement and other trifling disturbances affect weak nerves—sensitive nerves—sorely. Nervousness is largely attributable to dyspepsia and non-assimilation of the food, a very usual concomitant of sleeplessness. Digestion and assimilation renewed by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, soon beget nerve quietude and sound repose. The great alterative causes the liver and bowels to unite in co-operative harmony with the stomach, whereby the general tone of the system is raised to the true standard of health. In malarial complaints, rheumatism and kidney troubles the Bitters produce excellent results.

Those Two Miles.

Last week I asked a Cavan laboring man how far it was to a place for which I was bound. "Two miles, your reverence." "Two miles and a little more?" said I, knowing, by long experience, that my countrymen don't like to discourage a traveler by letting him know that he has still a long walk before him. "Well, your reverence, it's two miles strong and rich, so to spake." —The Spectator.

Transplanting Large Trees.

If you have large fruit trees you wish transplanted, dig around them toward the close of summer, cutting off the larger roots at from three to five feet from the body, according to the size of the tree. Twelve months later they will have made so many small roots to replace the larger ones that transplanting can be attempted safely.

TO PUT ON needed flesh, no matter how you've lost it, take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It works wonders. By restoring the normal action of the deranged organs and functions, it builds the flesh up to a safe and healthy standard—promptly, pleasantly and naturally. The weak, emaciated, thin, pale and puny are made strong, plump, round and rosy. Nothing so effective as a strength restorer and flesh maker is known to medical science; this puts on healthy flesh not the fat of cod liver oil and its filthy compounds. It rouses every organ of the body to activity, purifies, enriches and vitalizes the blood so that the body feels refreshed and strengthened. If you are too thin, too weak, too nervous, it may be that the food assimilation is at fault. A certain amount of bile is necessary for the reception of the fat foods in the blood. Too often the liver holds back this element which would help digestion. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery stimulates, tones up and invigorates the liver, nourishes the blood, and the muscles, stomach and nerves get the rich blood they require.

Spent Hundreds of Dollars with no Benefit.

M. J. COLEMAN of 33 Sargent St., Roxbury, Mass., writes: "After suffering from dyspepsia and constipation with untold agony for at least 18 months, I am more than pleased to say that after using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and 'Pleasant Pellets' for one month, I was entirely cured, and from that day to this I do not know, thank God, what even a slight headache is. I paid a doctor on Tremont St., Boston, in one day (for his advice only) the sum of $10.00 with $3.50 for medicine, and derived no benefit. I got more relief in one hour from your medicines, as far as my stomach was concerned, than from all the other medicine I used.

M. J. COLEMAN, ESQ.

If any person who reads this is suffering from dyspepsia or constipation and will use your medicine as I have done, he will never regret it."

THE LAY OF THE LIVER.

For if thy liver worketh right,
Thy Faith is sure, thy Hope is bright.
But indigestion has the power
To mar the soul's serenest hour,
To crumble adamantine trust,
And turn life's certainties to dust,
To banish faith and hope and love,
Put heaven below and hell above.
Keep only thy digestion clear,
No other foe my love need fear,
So wishing for thee perfect bliss,
The sum-gift of the giver,
I ask thee all in asking this,
My darling, how's your liver?

Acts in Harmony.

Perhaps some of our readers would like to know in what respect Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is better than any other. We will tell you. When this Remedy is taken as soon as a cold has been contracted, and before it has become settled in the system, it will counteract the effect of the cold and greatly lessen it's severity, if not effectually cure the cold in two day's time, and it is the only remedy that will do this. It acts in perfect harmony with nature and aids nature in relieving the lungs, opening the secretions, liquefying the mucous and causing its expulsion from the air cells of the lungs and restoring the system to a strong and healthy condition. No other remedy in the market possesses these remarkable properties. No other will cure a cold so quickly or leave the system in as sound a condition. For sale by Robbins & McCord. 43

Obituary.

Catharine Kugler was born in Maryland August 11, 1809, and died at the home of Wm. Oberlin's, her son-in-law, October 11, 1894, aged 85 years and 2 months. She was married to Wm. King, in 1827. To this union ten children were born, five of whom are now living. She was grandmother to 33 children, great-grandmother to 29 children, great great-grandmother to 3 children. Sister King was happily converted at the age of 32 and united with the Lutheran church. Afterwards in 1860 she united with the M. E. Church at Pleasant Chapel, where she spent the remaining years of her life in trying to do her Master's will. She was beloved by all and always showed forth the gentle spirit of Christ. Sister King has gone through many a fiery trial, and she made especial mention of one to me. God had called her husband and son home, both being carried to their last resting place together, but in all her afflictions she found God's grace sufficient in every time of need. She died as she lived, rejoicing that she was going home to meet Jesus and those precious loved ones that had preceded her to the glory world. The funeral service was conducted by her pastor, Rev. A. J. Duryee, at Hamilton, Ind. The word chosen was from Paul's second letter to Timothy, (II Tim, vi, 4) "And the day of my departure is at hand." A large concourse of friends followed her to her last resting place. Thus ends the life of an excellent and devoted worker for the Master. Let us cherish her memory, imitate her virtues and trust in her Savior, and may the consolation of divine grace be ministered to all sorrowing ones. A. J. D.

Asphalt Mines, Southern California.

From Harper's Weekly.

By far the most interesting, largest and most valuable asphalt deposits yet discovered in this country are the two known collectively as the "Alcatraz," located thirty miles apart on the seacoast of Santa Barbara. The most westerly of these, La Patera Mine some fifteen miles from the city of Santa Barbara, is of rock-asphaltum, which is mined like coal, and breaks off in large chunks, exhibiting a perfect conchoidal fracture. It is found in thick seams, enclosed by walls of shale, and extends to unknown depths. The main shaft of La Patera is now down about one hundred and fifty feet, at which level there is no sign of diminution in the supply. An interesting feature of this unique mine is the steady asphaltic growth constantly taking place in the drifts. The material, being slightly plastic, is forced into every opening by pressure from below, so that last year more than fifty feet of actual growth were cut away in order to keep the workings open.

Ledges of this rock-asphaltum extent far out beneath the sea, and it is interesting to note that specimens broken from the surface of these, where they have been exposed to the action of salt water for ages, show the same chemical and physical qualities as do samples from the bottom of the deepest inland shaft.

Interlined "Celluloid" Collars and Cuffs turn water like a duck's back and show neither spot nor soil. They are not effected by perspiration, and always look as if right out of the box. When they get soiled you can clean them in a minute by simply wiping off with a wet cloth. These are but a few of the advantages of wearing the "Celluloid" Collars and Cuffs. There are many others that you will readily discover the first time you wear one.

They are the only waterproof interlined collars and cuffs made. Be sure to get the genuine with this trade mark

IS PAYING THE DEBT.

Democratic State Government Saving the People Interest.

Nearly a Million Dollars Paid In the Past Eighteen Months—Taxpayers Saved a Large Sum by the Early Payment of the Bonds—Another Testimonial to the Benefits of Democratic Government.

The other day the Indianapolis Sentinel had the following interview with State Auditor Henderson which cannot fail to prove of deep interest to every taxpayer in the state of Indiana:

"I have just mailed letters to New York holders of Indiana securities that on Nov. 1—now only two weeks off—the finance board of the state will redeem $200,000 of bonds that are not payable until March 1, 1895, but on which the state now has the option of paying."

"What do you mean by the finance board?"

"The finance board is composed of the governor, treasurer and auditor of state, into whose hands the fiscal affairs of the state are committed."

"Why are you going to redeem bonds not yet due."

"Because we have the money on hand to do it with, and because by so doing we will save the state interest at the rate of 3½ per cent or $7,000 annually. Nor is this all. On Jan. 1 we shall be able to take up $300,000 more of these option 3½ per cent bonds, thereby saving the state about $5,000 in interest alone—a tidy sum—as well as reducing the public debt very sensibly."

"How much of the public debt has been paid by the present state administration?"

"With this $200,000 payment the aggregate liquidation will be $910,000—and all within one year and a half. Indeed, the January payment of $300,000 will also be made within one year and three-quarters—making a total bond debt extinguishment of nearly $1,025,000 within less than two years. This is a record that we are all proud of, eclipsing as it does the performance of any previous administration in the history of the state."

"How does it happen that you are now reducing the public debt at the rate of more than $500,000 annually, while the public debt actually increased under previous administrations?"

"That is simply and easily accounted for. It is all due to the new tax law, which our Republican friends so solemnly denounce in their effort to hoodwink the plain people. Under the old tax law the public debt was increasing annually at the rate of from $500,000 to $1,000,000 per year. The state was compelled to borrow money every year with which to meet the interest debt of the commonwealth. Why, one of the first acts I was called upon to discharge as a member of the board of finance was to borrow $300,000 to pay interest on the public debt and to issue $340,000 of new bonds to fund an old issue then matured. The state then—in 1891—had 'hard sledding' to meet the ordinary expenses of the state government and, counting interest on the public debt, we were running behind from $500,000 to $1,000,000 annually.

The public debt then—Oct. 31, 1891—aggregated $8,830,615.12 of which $484,000 was domestic. The legislature of 1891 was confronted with this vexed problem, and it had the wisdom and courage to enact the new law, under whose operation the scales have been turned, so that instead of piling up the public debt enormously every year we are enabled to reduce it more than half a million annually besides meeting every requirement of the state government. Nor is this debt reduction of $910,000 since April, 1893, all that has been accomplished. We have saved the state by the refunding law of 1889 $126,912 in annual interest charges, to which must be added the interest saved on bond payments of nearly $30,000 annually, or a total saved on interest alone of $155,000. This is a record of which we are justly and pardonably proud and on which the taxpayers of Indiana may congratulate themselves."

MORE REPUBLICAN TESTIMONY AS TO THE BUSINESS REVIVAL.

Factories Continue to Resume, Thus Furnishing a Refutation of the Republican Calamity Howl—The Phenomenal Record of Resumption Under the New Tariff Law.

The Cincinnati Commercial Gazette, the strongest Republican newspaper in the west, continues to testify to the phenomenal improvement in business in Indiana under the influence of the new tariff law. Its news columns continue to give the lie to all the calamity howling of the Republican orators, whose only stock in trade it is. Under the headlines

AGREEABLY SURPRISED.

TINPLATE WORKERS WILL NOT GET AN EXPECTED REDUCTION.

PAYROLLS INCREASING AT ELWOOD.

A NUMBER OF NEW ENTERPRISES OF LARGE PROPORTIONS AT ANDERSON.

The Commercial-Gazette has these bits of news:

ELWOOD, Ind., Oct. 13.—The situation in this city, relative to labor and the industries continues to grow brighter every day. The American tinplate factory is running full time without the expected cut in wages.

Edwin Stevens of Cincinnati and L. L. Morris of Hammond will erect tinplate mills at Tipton to employ 300 hands.

Work has begun on a new furniture factory to employ 100 men.

The McBeth lamp chimney works are employing 700 men and the McClay company 400.

Child labor has been abolished at the Diamond plateglass works.

The Elwood steam forge works are employing 50 additional high grade mechanics.

Starkey Bros. have located a vitrified paving brick factory to employ 100 men.

Elwood factories pay out $35,000 weekly in wages and will shortly increase their payrolls.

There is an increase in the number of men engaged at Frankton.

MORE MEN AT ANDERSON.

NEW FACTORIES AND ENLARGEMENTS WHICH WILL ENPLOY SEVERAL HUNDRED MEN.

ANDERSON, Ind., Oct, 18.—The Buckeye Manufacturing company will put 250 men at work Nov. 1 and 100 more Dec. 1.

The Riverside agricultural implement works, to employ 150 men, will be completed and in operation by Feb. 1.

many new gas wells are being drilled.

The plant of the Mather tinplate works, to employ 800 hands, will be completed in a few weeks.

Work has begun on the duplicate plant of the Wright Shovel company. It will employ 125 men.

The Raub locomotive works, to employ 5,000 men, will probably be located at Anderson.

MUNCIE, Ind., Oct. 13.—Within 30 days the work of rebuilding the mammoth Whitely reaper works, burned down some months ago, will begin. When the works are rebuilt they will give employment to a much larger number of men than before.

KOKOMO, Ind., Oct. 13.—The industrial situation in this city is improving, and there are good grounds for encouragement. Many of the large factories throughout the city are increasing their working forces, and in many cases the improvement of present facilities is made necessary by the recent revival. The Diamond Plateglass company now employs 600 men and improvements are being made which will result in the employment of a large additional force.

The canning factories have packed about 4,000,000 cans this season, as against 2,000,000 last year.

The United States goblet and tumbler works at Greentown announce that next season the working force of the concern will be more than doubled. About 300 men are now employed.

Converse has secured the location of a large tinplate mill, work on which will begin at once, and it is expected the plant will be in operation by the first of the year. Several hundred men will be given employment.

BRAZIL, Ind., Oct. 13.—The outlook for the future of the manufacturing interests of this city are at present more encouraging than at any time for several months past.

The Brazil Brick and Pipe company is now working full time, with a slightly increased force of men.

FAIRMOUNT, Ind., Oct. 13.—The Enterprise furniture factory is now in operation with a full force.

The King City Glass company will start as soon as the repairs on buildings and furnaces are completed.

The Big Four windowglass factory started last week with a full force of 100 men.

The Fairmount Glass company, manufacturers of miscellaneous wares, will start its factory some time this week. About 100 men will be employed at the start.

J. E. Scroggy, an eastern capitalist, is in Anderson figuring on a location for a shoe factory. He would furnish employment to 75 men.

The Fowler bolt works at Anderson, which have been shut down for two years, resumed operation Monday with a full force of hands.

The Union Windowglass company at Anderson put its plant in operation the first of the week. One hundred and fifty men are employed.

Rev. Covert will arrive in the city Monday morning from Buffalo to meet Anderson real estate men. He will submit propositions for the location of the Raub locomotive works, which he represents, which will in two years employ 3,000 men, and eventually fully 5,000.

At Summitville, a manufacturing town north of Anderson, every house is filled, every plant running and all of the 600 factory men are at work.

A Phenomenal Record.

Commercial-Gazette's reports show that since Sept. 1, under the benign influence of the new tariff law, 116 factories have resumed operations in Indiana, giving employment to 28,542 men. This does not take into account the smaller factories, nor does it include the number of men who have gone to work in factories which were only partially idle. These would swell the total of men who have secured work in the past six weeks in the factories to over 100,000. Many of these had been idle for two years because of the blight put upon manufacturing by the McKinley law.

THREE VIEWS OF THE A. P. A.

As Set Forth In the Platforms of the Parties.

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM.	REPUBLICAN PLATFORM.	POPULIST PLATFORM.
We believe and declare that the policy and principles of what is called the American Protective Association are illiberal, unwise, unpatriotic, undemocratic and unamerican. In the spirit of that religious freedom which characterizes our constitutions and laws, and the spirit of that wise toleration and generous statesmanship which seeks to accord to all the right and privileges of American citizenship, we call upon every man to do battle against such an organization.

Who dare now say that the Democratic party has not made good its historic claim of being the party always opposed to religious persecution against whatever creed?

The McKinley Panic.

The senate tariff bill has been in operation just two weeks. Yesterday Abner Boggs hunted Kokomo over for carpenters, to whom he was willing to give employment at good wages. None could be found. The panic of 1893 was under the McKinley law.—Kokomo Dispatch.

Two Louisiana Purchases.

The Democratic party under the leadership of Jefferson purchased Louisiana in 1803. But now there is a new purchase and sale. This time the Republican party has purchased a portion of the state with a sugar bounty.—Muncie Herald.

Benjamin Harrison threatens to go over into West Virginia and help his friend Steve Elkins down Chairman Wilson in the congressional race. Benny will have his hands full at home, and when matters warm up a little will find that he can spare no time from Indiana if he hopes to keep his party in a respectable minority.

The Republican party for a year past has been a veritable calamity howler. It tried to make the country believe a visitation had been sent upon it because it was choked loose from the offices. It welcomed hard times and blue ruin in hopes that such conditions might enable it to get back under cover without merit, repentance or reform of past sins.

To Vote a Straight Ticket.

To vote a straight ticket stamp anywhere within the large square that contains the rooster, the eagle, rising sun, or the plow and hammer, but stamp NOWHERE ELSE not even the small squares at the left. There is no small square at the left of the words "Democratic," "Republican." "Prohibition," "People's Ticket." So no attention should be paid to these words. Stamp anywhere within the square, no matter if you do hit the rooster, the eagle, the rising sun or the plow. But if the stamp strikes outside the square, the ballot cannot be counted.

To Vote a Mixed Ticked.

DO NOT stamp in the big square at all, but go through stamping the small square at the left of each name you wish to vote for on any ticket.

How to Proceed.

The Poll Clerk hands you three tickets a pink one with state ticket of all four parties on it; a white one with all four of the county tickets on it; a yellow one with all four of the township tickets on it. Go into the booth and stamp each one, in the way directed above, then fold each one separately in such a way that all names are on the inside and out of sight, and the poll clerks' initials will be in sight on the outside, then come out of the booth, and give these three folded, separate tickets to the inspector, and give the stamp to the poll clerk. In addition we might say: Fix one ballot to suit you, first, and after folding it so that all printed names are on the inside, and the initials of the poll clerks are on the outside, lay it down by you and take the next ballot and fix that to suit you; fold it as you did the other, and then proceed in the same way with the remaining ballot. When all these ballots have been prepared, take all three to the inspector, as stated above. The way you vote one ballot does not affect the other. Each ballot is independent of the other. You may vote your state ballot straight, fold it and lay it down. Then you take up the county ballot and vote that either straight or mixed, as you see fit, and having folded and laid that down, take up the township ballot and vote that straight or mixed, as you see fit. One ballot has nothing to do with the other. If in doubt on any of these points, the election board will give information.

ADULTERATED WINE

is injurious, but nothing gives strength, and tones up the stomach like a pure old port wine. "Royal Ruby Port," so called for its royal taste and ruby color, is on account of its purity, age and strength, particularly adapted for invalids, convalescents and the aged. Sold only in bottles (never in bulk) while cheap wine is sold by the gallon and gives a larger profit to the seller but less to the user. This wine is absolutely pure, and has the age without which no wine is fit to use. Be sure you get "Royal Ruby"; quart bottles $1, pints 60 cts. Sold by Election Sheriffs, Etc.

The new election law, the Logansport Pharos says, provides that the board of commissioners must appoint election inspectors, but the chairmen the committees of the two parties casting the greatest number of votes have authority to designate the election judges and the poll clerks, as well as the deputy sheriffs. A list of the persons recommended for judges must be filed with the county board a week prior to the election, and the poll clerk at least four days before election. The county sheriff appoints the deputy sheriffs. They are chosen from the two parties casting the largest number of votes, and the persons appointed must be recommended to the county sheriff for appointment five days before the election.

OWEN'S BAD BREAK.

As Testified to by His Superior Officer of the Treasury.

It Called Forth a Congressional Investigation.

Assistant Secretary Nettleton Charges Owen With Neglect of Duty, Shameful Incompetence and With Trying to Secure the Payment of Fraudulent Vouchers—Owen Nullifies the Alien Contract Labor Law.

Few men who have ever come out for political office have as unenviable a labor record as William D. Owen, the candidate for secretary of state on the Republican ticket. While superintendent of immigration under Harrison, an office which he created for his own especial benefit while a member of congress, he time and time again violated the law against the importation of contract labor. By completely setting aside this law which was passed by the Democratic congress of 1878 he allowed the country to be flooded with cheap labor. This was done in the interest of the tinplate gang, headed by Niedringhaus of St. Louis, who had promised to give remunerative employment to American workmen. American workmen were too high priced to suit them and they demanded the pauper labor of Europe. Owen was constantly in trouble with his superiors because of his insolence and refusal to obey orders. An investigation of his office was finally begun, in the course of which all of the charges that had been preferred against him were substantiated. The following letter of Hon. A. B. Nettleton, assistant secretary of the treasury under Harrison, shows that Owen's methods of conducting his office were most objectionable:

Treasury Department,
Office of the Secretary,
WASHINGTON, March 28, 1892.

To the Honorable Secretary of the Treasury:

SIR—It has become my official duty to invite your attention to the following facts which I am able to substantiate in every particular and to ask that such action be taken by the secretary of the treasury and by the president as those facts may seem to warrant:

1. Mr. W. D. Owen is unfit and incompetent to perform the duties of the office which he holds.

2. He is thoroughly untrustworthy in the performance of his official duties.

3. He has been guilty of circulating malicious slanders against his superior officers.

4. His ideas of official regularity and integrity are slipshod, reckless and a source of great risk to the public funds partially in his control.

A I hand you certain papers marked Exhibit A, which show that on Feb. 22, 1892, John B. Webber, United States commissioner of immigration at the port of New York, transmitted to the secretary of the treasury certain bids received in answer to advertisements for the furnishing of instruments, books, hospital clothing and druggists glassware for the use of the medical department of the immigration service at New York, said letter showing that all the bids received were thus transmitted. Said letter recommended that in each case the lowest bid be accepted and the articles purchased, such lowest bids being clearly set forth and recited with the names of the several bidders and the amount of each bid.

Such lowest bids recommended to be accepted aggregated $628.05. On Feb. 24, '92, W. D. Owen as superintendent of immigration caused to be prepared and checked with his initials, and sent to my address for signature a letter addressed to Commissioner Weber authorizing him to accept all the bids that he had received, reciting said bids in full by names and amounts, which amounts aggregated $619.14, or more than 150 per cent in excess of the aggregate asked for by the commissioner at New York said letter was signed by me on the strength of Superintendent Owen's check, was transmitted to Commissioner Weber and its character only discovered by me upon my arrival in New York a day or two later. Attached to exhibit A is my letter to Superintendent Owen based upon this transaction dated March 1, 1891, and declining thereafter to sign letters from his office authorizing the expenditure of public moneys unless accompanied by the original papers upon which they were based.

I also hand you papers marked exhibited B, which show that on or about the first day of Jan. 1892, W. D. Owen joined Frank L. Larned and other persons in a persistent attempt to put through the department and collect the money upon a false and ficticious voucher for $117.50 for the alleged services of a person not in the employ of the government, and who to Mr. Owen's previous knowledge had not rendered the service for which such voucher was presented. Superintendent Owen's official approval and certificate that said services were rendered are attached to said ficticious voucher, a certified copy whereof forms a part of exhibit A. When said ficticious voucher came to my desk it was stopped and payment prevented. On the 16th of January, the day after it came to my attention, I called upon Mr. Owen in writing for an explanation.

On Jan. 20 Mr. Owen responded in writing, furnishing such explanation which admits the entire transaction and gives no intimation that he did not then regard the voucher as still in force. The original voucher itself is in the possession of the department with Mr. Owens' approval uncanceled, which fact should be considered in connection with his subsequent statement that at a certain stage he had abandoned the attempt to get the voucher allowed and paid. It is left for the proper authority or tribunal to decide whether the transaction in question constitutes a criminal offense under Section 5440, Revised Statutes. In any case the moral standards and fitness for the responsible station of a bureau officer who is capable of engaging in such an attempt, and then submitting such an explanation, are left to the judgment of the secretary.

Ever since W. D. Owen assumed his office in July, 1891, I have been compelled as his superior officer to call his attention very frequently to the blunders and irregularities committed in his office, and for which he was directly responsible. These blunders and irregularities if permitted to go uncorrected would have brought the department into ridicule, entangled the government in annoying complications, and in certain instances as herein shown, would have resulted in the wrongful abstraction of money from the public treasury. Respectfully yours,

A. B. NETTLETON,
Assistant Secretary.

SUGAR UNDER THE NEW TARIFF.

Facts Concerning the Price Per Pound That Will Interest Voters.

The Republican prophecy that the new tariff would increase the price of sugar is effectually disproved.

The official records of the wholesale price of refined sugar in Philadelphia show that the price has not increased, and a comparison of the wholesale prices of refined sugar for the month of September in the last four years reveals the fact that sugar at present is nearly 1 cent a pound cheaper than it was in 1893.

The figures are taken from the official records and quote the price of sugar on Sept. 1 for the past four years as follows:

1891—4 3-10 cents a pound.
1892—5 cents.
1893—5⅝ cents.
1894—5 cents.

On the 15th of the same month, each year, the quotations were:

1891—4⅝ cents a pound.
1892—5 5-16 cents.
1893—5⅝ cents.
1894—5 cents.

The new law went into operation Aug. 28 and on Sept. 15 sugar was 5 cents a pound, whereas on Oct. 1 the price had fallen to 4 11-16 cents a pound.

IS A REVELATION INDEED.

THE OPERATION OF THE WOOL SCHEDULE OF THE NEW TARIFF.

A New Impetus Given to the Sheep Raising Industry—Better Prices For Raw Wool and Cheaper Prices For Clothing and Blankets, With More Work For Employes In the Mills—Free Wool a Blessing to Everybody.

Since the repeal of the McKinley blight and the enactment of the new Democratic revenue tariff the Republicans have ceased to taunt Democrats by the cry of "Democratic times," says the Evansville Courier. The tremendous reduction in all of the necessaries and comforts of life since the new tariff went into operation on Aug. 28 has convinced everybody who has made purchases since then that a Democratic tariff means good times for the consumer however it may affect anybody else. But it also benefits the manufacturer and the wage earner. It enables the mill owner to employ more men at as good, and in some instances at better, wages than they have received under the McKinley curse. Here is a letter which shows that as a result of free wool wages have been restored:

LOWELL MANUFACTURING COMPANY,
95 MILK STREET, BOSTON, SEPT. 21.

Bernard Goldstein, Esq., Milwaukee:

DEAR SIR—In reply to yours of the 18th would say that, in accordance with the understanding the special reduction of wages made to take effect Dec. 26, 1893, was restored Sept. 4, 1894, said understanding being that the wages would be restored if the tariff bill, making wool free, passed.

Yours truly, JOHN HOGG,
Treasurer pro tem.

This is an instance where wages that were reduced under McKinleyism have been restored under the new tariff for it should be remembered that the McKinley abomination was in full force up to Aug. 28, 1894, the day on which the new tariff became a law.

But this is not all. Free wool has stimulated the manufacture of American fabrics and even those who have stoutly opposed it are now warm in its approval. Here is a striking instance of this kind, taken from a letter written by one of the leading woolen manufacturers of Philadelphia, a Republican, to a prominent dry goods merchant of Pittsburg:

The operation of the new tariff has been a revelation to me. We are making more woolens, because of free wool, of a better quality, are selling more goods and employing more men.

The operations of the new tariff are "a revelation" to this manufacturer because he had been deceived by his party leaders into believing that to make raw wool free would destroy the wool-growing industry in the United States and compel all home manufacturers to rely entirely upon foreign wools for their supply. But it is already apparent that the number of sheep will be increased under the new tariff because the increased demand for wool consequent upon the removal of the tariff from wool and the preparation of American woolen mills to turn out goods fine enough to compete with English and French made cloths in the world's markets, has already strengthened the wool market and will undoubtedly advance the price of wool grown in the United States. Domestic wool is not suitable by itself for the manufacture of the finest grades of goods, but mixed with Spanish wools, which now come in free, it answers every requirement and our woolen mills need no longer hesitate to reach out for the best trade in every part of the world.

The Philadelphia mill owner is firmly convinced after two months' experience with the new tariff that he can compete with English and French goods, not only in the United States, but can successfully invade English and French markets with American "all wool" cloths. No wonder the result of free wool has proved "a revelation" to him. He has been following false prophets and never would have known it had not the new tariff law, with its free wool schedule, taught him by actual experience that the Democratic position has always been right; that he can make better qualities of goods at less cost than those of inferior quality have cost and that the increased demand makes it necessary for him to employ more men.

CLAMBAKE AND BARBECUE.

The Former at Peru, the Latter at Salem. Cheap Railroad Rates.

The enterprising and progressive Democracy of Peru is making extensive preparations for a huge clambake Wednesday, Oct. 31. Nobody who attends this unique entertainment will go hungry, as 50 barrels of clams, four tons of fish and 100 head of sheep have been provided. The orators on this occasion will be Vice President Stevenson, General John C. Black, Senators Voorhees and Turpie, Congressman Bynum, Captain W. R. Myers, Hon. John W. Kern, Hon. R. C. Bell and Hon. A. N. Martin. As cheap rates have been secured on all the railroads the attendance promises to be very large.

An old fashioned barbecue will be given at Salem Nov. 3, at which a number of prominent Democratic orators will be present. Among the speakers will be Hon. Asher G. Caruth of Kentucky, Hon. D. P. Baldwin and others.

INTERNAL STRIFE.

The Row Between Ketcham and Gowdy Goes Merrily On.

The Republican camp is being torn by internal dissensions. The Harrison-Gowdy-Journal crowd never did like William A. Ketcham, the candidate for attorney general. The beginning of dislike dates back to the time when Ketcham filed a law brief charging Harrison with selling out a client. The Journal people also had some sort of grievance against Ketcham and fought his nomination vigorously, threatening even to bolt it if made. But they didn't. However, there was no purpose on the part of Harrison, or the Journal, or the committee which is controlled by them to permit Ketcham to become prominent. He is an aggressive, bold fighter who never knows when he is whipped and has ever been in outspoken opposition to Harrison. It was quickly recognized that if he came well to the front he would prove a formidable foe to the future presidential hopes of Harrison. So from the first the machine began to knife him. At the outset he was compelled to pay a $3,500 assessment, though the salary of the office to which he aspires is but $2,500. Then a systematic series of snubs was put upon him. His dates for speaking at large cities were canceled and his meetings in small towns were unadvertised, so that he had no crowds. Then the committee threatened to leave his name off the ticket when it was certified to the election commissioners. But this was not done. Now Ketcham is running his own campaign, regardless of the committee, as Hovey did in 1888 and Chase in 1892 The committee is knifing him where ever it can without hurting the whol ticket, and there is some reason to believe that his friends are doing a littl cutting in retaliation themselves.

WHERE WAS UNCLE MOSES?

When the Lights Went out at the St. Joe News Sanctum?

AS WE have known Uncle Moses Perry for many years, and with everyone, to know him is to admire him, we were somewhat startled to find him figuring as chief executive in what the St. Joe News, calls "A startling fish story. And if one considers the story in all its bearings, it is startling. Consider the size of the fish, then the size of the snake, then the size of Uncle Moses' eyes when the vision dawned fully upon him, and lastly, the size of the News man's excitement when he took in the story and we guess it is startling! Imagine a fine old gentleman like this, raising the hair on the head of a rustling editor like Bro. Olds! But the story will explain itself better. The News says:

We have heard of big fish and snake stories, but the following is the greatest, combination that ever came under our observation. Uncle Mose Perry, our good natured assessor, is the author of the same. He called a reporter for the News aside the other day and related the following remarkable occurrence. Mr. Perry says he went fishing in the river near Ben Hamilton's the other day, and not having much luck in the forenoon, he set his pole and line and went home to dinner. On his return he started to go down the river bank, and when near where his pole was he noticed, to his horror, a large blue-racer snake with its head and part of its body out on the bank. His appearance frightened the snake, and with its head elevated about 2 feet above the water it started across the river, leaving in its trail a streak of water which appeared to be churned and dashed as though something unusual was happening. The snake went directly across the river and crawled out on the opposite bank, with a large fish fastened to its tail. Mr. Perry crossed the river on the bridge, killed the snake and got the fish. We've forgotten the dimensions of the snake, but the fish was pickerel two and a half feet long. It is supposed that the fish undertook to swallow the snake, but couldn't make it, having got its teeth fast in the snake's skin could not get loose again. If any of our readers feel as though they can't swallow this story, let them go for Uncle Mose Perry, as we give it just as we got it from him with perhaps a few slight variations.

Two Lives Saved.

Mrs. Phœbe Thomas, of Junction City, Ill., was told by her doctors she had consumption and that there was no hope for her, but two bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery completely cured her, and she says it saved her life. Mr Thomas Eggers, 139 Florida St., San Francisco, suffered from a dreadful cold, approaching consumption. He tried without result, everything else, then bought one bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery and in two weeks was cured. He is naturally thankful. It is such results, of which these are samples, that prove the wonderful efficacy of this medecine in coughs and colds. Free trial bottles at Robbins & McCord's drugstore. Regular size 50c. and $1. 5

TWO OF A KIND.

Jacob S. Coxey and Tribbie Tribbles are Two Great Reformers.

IN EVERY political campaign there is someone or some party ready to sacrifice himself or itself, on the attar of the old heathen god called by the Greek, "damphool." This campaign it is the populists who take the lead in posing for the prize. Under the leadership of Bliss the Magnificent, the matter has been made easy. Bliss has laid out the plan, and furnished the material. First he pined for Coxey, the leading tramp, fraud and deadbeat of the age and nation. Coxey came, and the proud American citizens of the populist party in this county bowed down and worshiped, and gave him $100 and over of the small sum they had saved from their "oppressors." But this "feast of reason" lasted only for a time. Bliss longed for a higher order of intelligence, and his followers bowed the head, and said "yea." So he hunted over the country and found an Indiana woman, squaw, they are sometimes called. This particular squaw was called "Tribbles," simply we presume, because she is married to old man Tribbles who makes two 2 hour speeches each day, just before Mrs. Tribbles reads her essay on tribulation. We suppose her maiden name was "Cloudly-face," or "young-woman-who-will some-day-bruise the-gold-bug's-head," or "young-woman-afraid-of-the-gold-bug," or "young-woman who-hopes-to-marry-a-white-man-who-is-afraid-of-the-gold-bug." Any of these names would have commended her to Bliss as the proper person to come into DeKalb county and enlighten the populists on the great questions now before the people. So, he secured for Auburn, this second installment of talent to shower its rays of light over our darkness. Well, the 25th day of October came, and new the party came out several hundred strong to hear its new apostle. Drums banged, horns tooted, fifes whistled and flags waved. Old man Tribbles got up just before the noon hour, and scared the English sparrows from the park by his shouts and gesticulations, for nearly an hour. Then he gave the starving audience a chance to lunch. When that was over, he began again, and it was after three o'clock before Mrs. Tribbles got a whack at the audience. Then she arose in all her native dignity and queenly beauty, for Bliss says she is the daughter of a famous Indiana chief. She proceeded to read a little essay, the character of which will not be revealed till the secrets of writings in the pyramids have all been diciphered and there is nothing in that line left for learned men to busy themselves at. She read in a low weak voice that had not even the suggestion of the ancient war whoop of her tribe, and there was much noise. So no one heard a word, unless he was at her elbow. When she was done, there was some handshaking and conversation, and the people disbanded. We should not forget the one banner carried by a wagon that came in from the west. It showed a forlorn looking cow, a democrat holding onto her west end, and a republican holding her east end, and a populist had a rope about her horns, so she would stand still for Coxey, who sat on a stool at the proper place, to milk her. This was the way they came into town. But as Coxey had evidently not got his $100 worth of milk when the time had come to go home, he stuck to her, and the last we saw of him as she went west, he was still at the throttle and hard at it.

COXEY AT THE BAR.

Or, Populists as Temperance Men, Both as to Theory and Practice.

PROHIBITIONISTS should all be populists" says Bliss in the Auburn Times of October 18, "because both believe in prohibition" etc, etc. But we have often shown that populists were as thirsty a crowd as either of the "corrupt old parties." We know many of these leaders, and many of their followers, who take kindly to a whisky straight or warm the cockles of their hearts with a hot sling. We have several times called attention to the way the "new corrupt party" adopted their prohibition plank at their county covention in the Auburn Opera House two years ago. The resolutions were brought up soon after the noon recess, and put on their passage at once, and adopted. Why this haste? Because the leaders were just at that hour leaning their manly stomachs up against the several saloon bars in town. And when they had fully done their usual thing in this line they reluctantly broke away from these pleasant exercises, and strolled back to the Opera House. We saw them come in one by one, with that look of innocence and that moisture of the mustach that only good drink well concealed can bring. And the temperance plank had passed without a dissenting voice. And Bliss says they are a temperance party. And is not Bliss a man of truth? Does not Bliss hate a lie? Course. But we wander away from Coxey. Here is another good temperance populist. The picture at the head of this article shows him in one of his favorite attidudes delivering a practical temperance lecture, with appriate gestures and illustrations Look at the reposeful pose, the grace and dignity that can be acquired only by long practice. Coxey is the one at the left, and is talking the silver question to the gentleman from Butler, while Glazier's bar tender looks on, an interested spectator. This picture is a true one, a snap shot picture, When Coxey spoke here, just before the speech he took three men up to the bar in the Glazier Hotel sample room, and treated them to a whisky apiece. We have the word of a well known Butler man who was one of the three. Then wherefore does Bliss claim that populists are all prohibionists? We give it up.

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

FROM EVERY CORNER

OF THE WORLD THIS FRESH NEWS WAS GLEANED.

Unless Germany Removes the Cattle Embargo We May Retaliate—Hog Cholera in a New Form—Horrible Accident at a McKinley Reception—An Ohio Town Destroyed.

RETALIATION.

A Member of the Cabinet Says That the Game Can Be Played by Two.

"Retaliation is a game at which two can play. If Germany wants to play it we can keep her pretty busy. And I fancy she will be the first to cry enough."

So said a member of the Cabinet to a correspondent. There is no doubt that he expressed not only his own mind, but that of the President as well. The belief in administration circles is that Germany will shortly recede from her position. The interview between Secretary Gresham and the German Ambassador is said to have been of an emphatic character. At the conclusion of the interview a cable dispatch was sent to Ambassador Runyon at Berlin setting forth this government's views on the subject. The change in the German ministry may cause some delay in presenting the dispatch to the German Chancellor, but when it is presented it will, unless people acquainted with its contents are greatly mistaken, be followed by a change in the prohibitory decree, if not by its total abolition.

This Government is perfectly willing to have diseased meats and cattle stopped at the port of entry. It is glad to have them stopped. But when it has been proved that our products are not diseased, it will expect to have them admitted on the same footing as those from the most favored nations, or know the reason why. It matters not whether only 4,000 head of cattle or 4,000,000 head are shipped from this country. The principle is the same, and as the value of our exports to Germany last year amounted to nearly $100,000,000 the wisdom of sticking up for the principle is apparent.

Horrible Accident.

A terrible accident attended the Republican meeting at Arcola, Ill. Just as the train stopped and Governor McKinley was introduced, two men, William Layman and Thomas Dougherty, started to recognize the occasion with a discharge of a small cannon in the open space, just behind the depot and just twenty yards from the train. The first discharge was successful, but on the second the cannon exploded, and Layman suffered the loss of both eyes, while Dougherty's right hand was blown off at the wrist and his right eye destroyed. Both were middle-aged laboring men. The accident occurred through Dougherty's failing to hold his finger over the vent after pouring in the powder.

New Type of Hog Cholera.

Champaign (Ill.) special: During the summer and fall, large droves of hogs were shipped into this section of Illinois and sold to the farmers and stock-raisers. The scheme of feeding cheap grain to hogs promised big returns until cholera appeared, and during the last week thousands of heads have died. The disease, however, has not been confined to the imported swine, but has been communicated to stock hogs throughout the country, and farmers and stockmen are experiencing heavy losses. Many farmers think the disease is not the old-fashioned hog cholera, but some other disease which no one appears to know anything about.

Disastrous Earthquake.

Buenos Ayres special: La Rioga, capital of a province of that name, lost churches, schools, public buildings, and many dwellings by earthquake. The first shock was felt at 4:30 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, and thereafter was a succession of shocks, some lasting twenty-six seconds. The people ran screaming from their homes, women fainting by the score. It is estimated that 2,000 persons perished in the province, as the disturbance was widespread.

Sensational Arrests.

The Dales, Ore., special: Frank Cline, son of ex-City Marshal Cline, and Otis Savage, whose father was Circuit Judge of this district for years, have been arrested for the Pacific express office robbery of $14,000. All but $400 was recovered. Five thousand dollars was found in the house of the ex-Marshal. The arrest has caused a tremendous sensation.

Letter Carriers Get Pay for Over Time.

The United States Court of Claims has rendered judgments in favor of 198 letter carriers for time served in excess of eight hours per day. Out of the whole number of cases decided, 100 came from Chicago, ninety-four came from New York, and four from Frederick, Md.

Massachusetts to Quarantine Cattle.

Massachusetts quarantined all cattle coming into the State, hoping to stop tuberculosis. Four hundred inspectors have been appointed to kill all diseased cattle found in the State.

Fire Destroyed a Town.

Rising Sun, Wood County, Ohio, population 1,500, the center of the oil fields, was totally destroyed by fire. Loss, $50,000.

He May Live.

A dispatch from Yalta says the analysis of the fluid drawn from the Czar's limbs is very reassuring, and that it is even possible a process of absorption may begin.

Great Oil Field.

In West Virginia 2,000 oil wells are in operation, and it has been estimated that the output for the present year will be fully 10,000,000 barrels, worth $8,000,000.

Butchered Himself.

Stephen Enzer, a young man 22 years old, residing at Angola, near Hicksville, Ohio, attempted suicide in a most fearful manner. In a fit of temporary insanity he secured a dull hatchet and block of stovewood and repaired to his room. Laying his left arm on the block, he haggled away until the arm was severed from his body. Then he picked it up with his right hand and threw it across the room, and then placed his left leg upon the block and haggled and mutilated it in a most frightful manner until he fainted from the loss of blood. His groans attracted the attention of Miss McConnell, who hurried to the scene and found Stephen swimming in his blood. He will die.

CANNOT USE THE MAILS.

Postal Authorities Gradually Killing off Lottery Concerns.

The Postmaster-General is determined to prevent the correspondence of bond investment companies from being carried through the mails, and will order criminal proceedings instituted in every case brought to his attention.

A post office department official speaking of the matter said: "These companies are conducted materially the same as lotteries. Within the last few days ten companies of this character in New Orleans, Jackson, Nashville, Atlanta, and Cincinnati have been forbidden the use of the mails. The companies whose officers were recently convicted in Chicago took $550,000 within two years. Within the last twelve months between 250 and 300 investment companies have operated here. They started in New England and then operated in the West, whence they have been driven to the South. Convictions have been obtained thus far in every case in which proceedings have been instituted."

Venezuela in Turmoil.

Caracas special: It is reported that the Cabinet, feeling that it is impossible to sustain President Crespo, will resign. The other day a crowd gathered near the prison to liberate Gen. Pinango. A fight ensued with the police, and several persons were killed. The mob was finally driven off by troops. More newspaper editors have been arrested for criticising the Goverment. Five of a band organized to kidnap President Crespo were killed in a riot at Maracribo and seven were captured. The latter divulged a plan to proclaim a provisional government with Gen. Pinango at its head. The government has ordered the seizure of all arms and ammunition on sale in shops. Many houses are being searched for suspects. The streets are being patrolled by troops. Warrants have been issued for the arrest of seven high military officers.

Miners Entombed.

Ironwood (Mich) special: On the fourth level of shaft No. 1, Pewabic mine, one man was killed and eleven others entombed, and their fate will not be known for some time. The accident was caused by a sandstone capping, which overhung the room, coming away with sufficient force to crush the timbers without warning. The settling commenced in an old room above the third level and about one hundred feet in height. In an interview with the superintendent, the latter stated he thought the men would be found alive. This will depend on whether the air is pure and sufficient to keep them alive. Some miners think the supply will not prove sufficient, and that it is charged with poisonous gases. The body of Frank Gabardi, the man killed, has been taken out. All the men imprisoned have families.

Texas Cattle Fever.

The German Ambassador has formally notified the Secretary of State that in consequence of the introduction of Texas fever by means of two shipments from New York, the importation of fresh beef and cattle from the United States to Germany would shortly be prohibited. In his official note Baron Von Saurma-Jeltsc adds, in regard to cargoes afloat, that shipments made from the United States up to the 28th of October will be admitted to enter Germany only on condition of being slaughtered immediately upon landing. The Department of State makes public the notice for the information of intending shippers of live cattle and fresh beef intended for German ports, but officials declined to comment on the matter, declaring that they had no further information regarding the cause of this action of the Government.

Dun & Co.'s Review of Trade.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Review of Trade says: Engrossing political excitement in many states causes natural slackening in some kinds of business. But on the whole business indications are rather more favorable than a week ago. Gold exports have ceased, quite a number of mills have gone into operation, and the demand for products, if not equal to that of prosperous years, is better than it has been most of the time this year. The prices of farm products do not improve much, and there are still some strikes to resist the reduction of wages, so that the purchasing power of the people cannot have materially increased, but there is a more hopefull spirit which prompts greater activity. On the other hand the record of past transactions is somewhat less favorable than of late.

Business Men Aroused.

St. Louis special: Bankers and business-men living in the towns in the Indian Territory, as well as those living outside the Territory but doing business with Territory firms, are greatly worked up over the condition of affairs which has made it necessary for the Pacific Express Company to refuse money shipments either into or out of the Territory. In the opinion of Superintendant Chase, of the Pacific Express Company, there is but one way to stop this lawlessness, that is to make a State out of the Indian Territory. A war of extermination such as Governor Crittenden waged against the James gang in Missouri is what is needed. This can only properly be done by admitting the Territory to Statehood.

New Diphtheria Treatment.

The new treatment by inoculation for diphtheria and croup as practiced in France is the subject of a special report to the State Department by United States Counsul C. W. Chancellor at Havre. He says that by this treatment only one out of four diphtheretic patients succumbs whereas the figures are double for other methods of treatment heretofore employed. Consequently the consul who is a Baltimore physician of repute, says it would seem very desirable that the anti-diphtheria serum should be introduced and come into general use at the earliest period practicable in Africa, where many thousand children and numerous physicians, students, and nurses die annually from diphtheria and croup.

Horribly Burned.

Pittsburgh (Pa.) special: Mrs. Margaret Fitzgerald and her sister Mary, residing in Esplen Borough, were horribly burned by the explosion of a gasoline lamp. Mary attempted to pour gasoline into a lamp without extinguishing the blaze. Margaret succeeded in saving her sister's life, but in turn was so seriously burned that she will die. James Ryan who answered the cry for assistance, was also burned about his hands and arms.

New Gold Field.

The steamer Alameda has arrived at San Francisco and brought only three passengers from Australia, owing largely to the fact that nearly everybody was on the rush to the gold fields of western Australia, at Coolgardie. While the steamer was in Sidney harbor over a thousand miners arrived from the New Zealand gold fields en route for the new Eldorado. Some of the finds are phenomenal, and in one instance four cuts of rock yielded 555 ounces of gold. The Londonderry mine, the first discovered, was sold to an English syndicate for $1,250,000. Lack of water is the great drawback. A quart of water costs 50 cents, a pound of meat 60 cents, and 100 pounds of flour $25.

The German Chancellor Retires.

Berlin special: The report that Chancellor Von Caprivi has handed his resignation to the Emperor is confirmed. Count Zu Eulenburg, President of the Ministerial Council, has also resigned. Dr. Miquel, Prussian Finance Minister, has been appointed President of the Council, and Prince Von Hohenlohe-Schillingsfurst, Governor of Alsace-Lorraine, has been offered the Chancellorship. Before offering the Chancellorship to Prince Hohenlohe, Emperor William consulted with the Envoys from Bavaria, Wurtemburg, Saxony, and Baden. It is reported that Prince Hohenlohe declined the office owing to his age.

Bank Robbed.

The farmers and Mechanics' Bank of Malvern, Iowa, was visited by burglars and it is supposed that $2,000 in cash was stolen. Nitro glycerine was used in opening the vault. The thieves were evidently men who did not thoroughly understand the terrific effect of its use, for the building was practically blown to pieces and the money and other contents sent crashing into the street. The explosion aroused the whole neighborhood and the thieves left money scattered over the floor in their haste to get away.

Nash Gets His Sword.

A sword captured from Sumner Nash of Akron, Ohio, while serving as a Lieutenant in the late war, has been returned to that gentleman by Adjutant-General Howe, who ascertained that it had fallen into the hands of Mrs. Marion Longfellow of Washington, D. C., a niece of the poet, and was being kept by that lady with a view to returning it to its original owner. The sword was taken in the battle of Luverne, Tenn., and bears the name of Mr. Nash.

Amnesty to Offenders.

The United States Minister to Chile has advised the State Department that the Chilian Government has granted general amnesty to all persons accused of political offenses prior to August 28, 1889. The effect of this amnesty is to pardon the adherents of ex-President Balmaceda up to the day he was forced to resign, and does not extend to those who resisted the new Government, formed after the ex-President's abdication.

Gas Explosion.

Larrimer Brothers' photograph gallery in Marion, Ind., was completely wrecked by an explosion of natural gas. Miss Grace Speakman, whose home is in Newcastle, Ind., was fatally injured. She was buried beneath the debris, her skull fractured and her chest crushed. Ben Larrimer, the proprietor, and Alfred Greenman, an employe, were seriously burned and bruised.

Too Previous with It.

Joseph Mercer and family of Zanesville, Ohio, came very near being embalmed alive. While visiting an undertaker at Bellevue, Ohio, cider was served the guests and all became dangerously sick. By accident the cider had been mixed with embalming fluid.

Firemen Badly Hurt.

At Columbus, (O.) Assistant Chief of the Fire Department Jack Welsh and a fireman named Tipton Dundon were caught under a heavy slate roof in a burning barn and badly crushed. Their backs seemed to be dislocated, and it is believed they are fatally injured.

The Japanese Bug.

Advices from Honolulu state that the orchards and fields of Hawaii are being devastated by an insect about the size of a lady bug. The natives believe it to be an involuntary importation from Japan, and so call it the Japanese bug.

Lost Home and Money.

The residence of John Venis, eight miles north of Lebanon, Ind., together with its contents, was destroyed by fire. Several hundred dollars in money and valuable notes were burned. The aggregate loss will reach $8,000.

Fatal Results of a Runaway.

Mrs. Sink Maitland, while out driving near Mill Grove, Ind., was unable to control the horse and the animal ran away, throwing Mrs. Maitland's 9-year-old daughter out with such violence that she died in ten minutes.

Baseballist Killed.

A baseball, which he attempted to catch, struck Joseph Kercher, a student of the State Normal School at Kutztown, Pa., over the heart, killing him instantly.

Two Hoosiers Killed.

A Vandalia east-bound passenger train killed Eli Crouse and Edward Neese at a crossing near Reelsville, Ind.

TORNADO OF FLAME.

WHOLE COUNTIES IN NEBRASKA SWEPT BY FIRE.

Homes, Stock and Crops of Ranchmen Ruined—Burning in Many Directions—Homeless Persons Seek Safety Along Water Courses.

May Be Many Deaths.

The prairie fires which have prevailed in Grant, Cherry, Sheridan and Thomas Counties, Nebraska, since Tuesday have assumed vast proportions. They started in Sheridan County and have thus far burned over a section of country forty miles in width. The damage to hay, ranch property and cattle is enormous, but nothing like an accurate estimate is yet possible. Many lives are supposed to have been lost, and thousands of tons of hay have been burned, leaving the cattlemen destitute. Homes and stock were also burned, and the cattle ranges are ruined. The list of known victims at present is:

BLISS, ——, ranchman.
LACHER, E. L., ranchman.
TWO FARMERS, names unknown.
RANCHMAN, at Mullen.

The two first-named were attempting to save their property by back burning, but the high wind drove the flames on them and cut off all escape before they were aware of their danger. Lacher lived long enough to tell his story to ranchmen who came to his rescue after the flames had passed.

Thousands of Cattle Perish.

Hundreds of thousands of head of cattle are grazing in Cherry, Thomas, Grant and the other counties where the fires are raging. These cattle were sent there from the southern part of the State, where the drought has been felt so heavily, to graze for the winter. It is feared a large proportion of these cattle have perished. Several ranch houses are reported to have been destroyed, and there is probability of a large loss of human life.

The fires began several days ago and the line of the railroad for several counties is obscured by the dense smoke. Farmers and stock growers from Custer and parts of neighboring counties, where crop failure was complete of both grain and hay, moved into Cherry, Thomas, Grant and Hooker Counties this fall and took hay lands, mostly on lease. They cut hay enough to carry their stock through the part of the winter when it could not range, and moved their cattle and horses up to Cherry and the other "sand hill" counties, where the fires are now raging.

Nothing like the present disaster has happened for years. As there are numerous streams in the afflicted section it is presumed many of the ranchmen have succeeded in taking their families to these water courses and thus avoided danger. The flames are not driven high, since the grass is not tall, consequently anyone reaching a stream can escape death unless overcome by the dense smoke.

Thursday night was a direful one in a large portion of the sand hills. Devastating fires swept through the western part of Cherry and Grant Counties all day, burning on the north side of the Burlington Railroad track to within about four miles of Hyannis. Lashed on by a furious wind, the fires traveled at a pace that carried consternation and destruction. The fire on the railroad was started the first of the week by a man and his pipe about ten miles northwest of Alliance. The man was drunk, and in filling and lighting his pipe threw the burning match to the ground, where it ignited the grass. In an instant a fire started, which, fanned by the northwest wind, at once set out on its mission of destruction.

COUNT ITO SPEAKS.

An Elaborate Address Before the Japanese Diet—Japs Whipped at Yi Chow.

ITO the Prime Minister of Japan, made an elaborate speech in the House of Lords upon the assembling of the Diet at Hiroshina. He explained at length the causes of the war between Japan and China. During the course of his speech he read the correspondence which had passed between the Japanese and Chinese governments before diplomatic negotiations were suspended and war was declared. The speech made a deep impression upon the House. The feeling of the Diet appears to be unanimous in favor of the course pursued by the government. The universal expression is that the war must be vigorously pursued until it is brought to a triumphant conclusion. The Diet has manifested the greatest willingness to grant everything asked by the government. The two houses passed by a unanimous vote the bills introduced by the government relating to war expenditures, which involved a total sum of $150,000,000.

Advices from Chemulpo, Corea, state that the pacification of the country is seriously impeded by the Tonghaks, who, although unarmed, are a standing menace to the Japanese interests on account of the spreading of their propaganda of mistrust of the Japanese. The latter are scattering silver about the country with the object of purchasing the favor of the people, and it is stated that 100,000 yen have been distributed about Seoul alone. The Japanese arrangements are very defective, and a number of dead horses and cattle are found along the roads between Seoul and Ping Yang.

On the battlefield of Ping Yang are many dead Chinese partially buried, and the stench from their bodies is terrible. It is now reported that the Chinese infantry cut through the Japanese at Ping Yang, but it is said that the Chinese cavalry was easily destroyed, as the horses stuck in the mud and their riders were shot before they could extricate themselves. Chinese officials report that a battle occurred near Yi Chow and that the Japanese were repulsed southward, with a loss of 3,000 men on each side.

CUT RATES IN FLOUR.

Millers Fall Out and the Retailer Reaps a Profit.

Flour has taken the place of sugar as the bone of contention among the wholesale grocers of Chicago and the Northwest. A combine, consisting of the Pillsbury-Washburn company, the Washburn-Crosby company, and Northwestern Consolidated Milling company—has gone to pieces. One result of the war is that grocers and dealers for several hundred miles around are flocking to Chicago and taking advantage of the free and open market. For some time the three concerns named have had a community of interests. Their plan of business was to send products to local jobbers on consignment, the latter agreeing to abide by and sell at the prices established by the "Big Three." Their profit came in as a commission of 25 cents a barrel. Competition was keen and prices were frequently shaded when it was necessary to do so to secure an order. When the knife was put into the sugar price-list the flour schedule began to suffer—sympathetically. Jobbers who found their sales dropping off complained to the "Three" and asked them to enforce the maintenance of rates. The Pillsbury and Northwestern people were perfectly willing to grant the request and notified jobbers to live up to their agreement. The Washburn-Crosby representatives took another view of the matter. They said if people to whom they sold flour wished to sell either at a loss or profit it made no difference to them, and moreover they would furnish them with all the stock they needed. And so the war is on, with two big concerns pitted against one; and the little fellows, who were never in the combine, will also suffer.

BOOTH WILL FIGHT VICE.

Salvation Army Founder Comes to America to Conduct a Vigorous Campaign.

GEN. WILLIAM BOOTH.

THE founder and Commander-in-chief of the Salvation Army, Gen. William Booth, is now in New York City, and to inquiring newspaper men he outlined the plans for a campaign which he will wage against the devil in seventy cities in this country and Canada, between now and the middle of next March. So well has the campaign been arranged that the general knows how he will spend every minute of his time until he returns to England. He will hold in all 570 meetings. Time has not dealt too unkindly with the General during the eight years since he was last in the United States. Though he looks every minute of his sixty-nine years, and his hair and beard are gray, there is still plenty of fire in his voice and energy in his action when he gets roused while speaking of his life's work. General Booth is now 69 years old and has been engaged in the Salvation Army movement for 37 years. He was the son of a Methodist preacher and was successively a draper's apprentice, itinerant exhorter, gold miner and Salvationist. The idea of the army was suggested to him by a dream.

The new national headquarters of the army on Fourteenth street, New York City, the corner-stone of which has recently been laid by the millionaire iron manufacturer, J. M. Cornell, of New York, will be eight stories high, and the material will be Indiana limestone for the two lower stories, and colored brick for the upper portion. The cost of the edifice will be $125,000, while the site is valued at $200,000. Appropriate exercises will be held upon the General's arrival, to celebrate the progress of the work on the structure, which will be finished by the end of the year. An auditorium, seating 3,000 persons, will furnish a meeting place for army gatherings of importance.

MISS FAIR AND HER FORTUNE.

Young California's Millionaire Heiress, Rumor Says, Is Soon to be Married.

MISS VIRGINIA FAIR.

Miss Virginia Fair, the young California millionaire heiress, who, rumor says, is to be married soon, is a 19-year-old, unaffected, healthy girl of quiet tastes and modest demeanor. She possesses exceptional vivacity, and in appearance is short and plump, has dark, wavy hair, bright black eyes, a good skin, and a nose of the retrousse pattern. Miss Fair is at present enjoying an income of $2,500 per month. Her fortune, which she is not to receive for six years, amounts to about $15,000,000. This was left her by her mother, who died two years ago. Miss Fair's father, ex-Senator James G. Fair, of Nevada, is one of California's multi-millionaires. She will probably inherit a large share of his wealth. Her education was acquired in the Convent of the Sacred Heart in San Francisco. She is a good musician, and speaks French and German. She is a devoted Roman Catholic.

BURNED IN A HOTEL.

SIXTEEN PERSONS PERISH BY FIRE AT SEATTLE.

Shut Up in a Fire Trap, They Are Suffocated and Cremated Without Hope of Escape—Women and Children Among the Victims—List of the Dead.

Caused by a Lamp Explosion.

Sixteen persons—ten men, three women, and three children—were burned to death in the West Street Hotel at Seattle, Wash., early Saturday morning. The killed, with names so far as known, are: F. Bolman, M. McZooley, Agnes Mixon, C. Wilson, —— Anderson, Andrew Otterson, Mrs. Otterson and her mother, Mrs. Huffman and little son and daughter, four men, one woman, and one child, unidentified; recognition impossible.

The West Street Hotel occupied the upper floor of a two-story corrugated iron building that covered a quarter of a block of ground at Columbia and West streets, one block from the Northern Pacific Depot, and near the business center of the city. The building was a mere shell of wood, covered with iron. There were several exits to the street, but they were narrow. The halls were narrow and the rooms small. Wholesale business houses occupied the ground floor. The hotel, being near the railroad depot and a cheap but reputable house, was much patronized by country people.

The fire was undoubtedly caused by the explosion of a lamp in the kitchen in the rear of the house. The proprietor's son was aroused by the noise of the explosion about 1 o'clock, but before he could investigate the flames spread all through the house. The corrugated iron sheeting kept the flames hidden until nearly the whole interior was a furnace. The thin partitions were of resinous pine, covered with cheese cloth, and burned furiously. It was not until the flames were seen burning in the windows by people in the streets that an alarm was turned in. When the firemen arrived the fire did not present an alarming aspect. The people at the windows were rescued with ladders and boards, some escaping with hardly any clothing.

Shocking Discoveries by the Firemen.

The firemen discovered corpse after corpse, until, at 4 o'clock, they had counted fifteen. Subsequently another was discovered. Most of the bodies were left where they lay until daylight in the hope the proprietor might identify them by locating the rooms on the register, for all except two were charred beyond possibility of recognition. The bodies were taken to the morgue in boxes or canvas sacks. The arrangements of the halls of the hotel made such a labyrinth that in the day time one unfamiliar with the place would have had difficulty in finding his way about without several attempts, and as the halls were filled with smoke there was little chance for any of them to make their way out before suffocating. Some of the lodgers were asleep and were overtaken in bed, while others rushed into the halls and were suffocated and burned.

BLOW AT UNCLE SAM.

German Government Excludes American Live Cattle and Fresh Beef.

The German government has published a decree prohibiting the importation of American live cattle and fresh beef on the ground that two cargoes which have just arrived contained several animals suffering from Texas fever. This action, a Washington dispatch says, was not entirely unexpected by the agricultural department, although the officials had hoped up to the last moment that the Germans would prove open to reason. The matter will not be allowed to rest where it now stands, but our government will cause a thorough investigation to be made of the cases of the alleged Texas fever on which the German government has seen fit to act in such a summary fashion. No doubt is felt here that these alleged cases will turn out to be founded on a mistaken diagnosis, for if there is any cattle disease that the German veterinarians know little or nothing about, that disease is Texas fever, a purely climatic, non-infectious fever peculiar to America. That is the opinion of the Agricultural Department experts who have studied the disease for years, and are aware of the state of knowledge on the subject in Europe. If the departmental examination, as expected, results in disproving the existence of the cases complained of, our Government will enter a very vigorous protest against the action of Germany and seek to make it clear that the reason assigned for the destruction of our meat trade is disingenuously stated.

SHORN OF ITS TERROR.

French Claim that Diphtheria Is to Be Cured by Inoculation Hereafter.

The new treatment by inoculation for diphtheria and croup, as practiced in France, is the subject of a special report to the State Department by United States Consul C. W. Chancellor, at Havre. The Consul gives in detail a history of the development of the treatment by Dr. Pasteur and his assistant, Dr. Roux, who have been experimenting with it for five years, keeping it secret until they had satisfied themselves of its efficiency and had subjected the animal (the horse) best adapted to transform diphtheritic poison into an anti-toxine. A trial of the new treatment at one of the largest children's hospitals of Paris resulted in reducing the death rate from diphtheria from 51.70 per cent. to 24.33 per cent. In addition it is stated that children vaccinated with the serum were protected from the disease even while living in close contact with diphtheritic patients. As the Pasteur Institute cannot meet the great demand for the serum movements are on foot in different localities to establish auxiliary stations. In slight cases one injection of the serum is sufficient.

Our Population.

THE proportion of foreign-born persons to natives in Nevada is 70,055 to 100,000; in Arizona, 65,799; the Dakotas, 62,118; Minnesota, 52,169; California, 51,218.

MISSOURI has 705,718 males of voting age, of whom 584,981 are native and 120,737 are of foreign birth. The whole vote of Missouri in the election of 1892 was 540,860.

MASSACHUSETTS, Rhode Island and New York have the largest average number of persons to a house, each house in these States having more than six occupants.

SOUTH CAROLINA has the largest percentage of blacks, 59.85; then comes Mississippi with 57.58. Louisiana has 49.99, and Alabama 44.84 per cent. of black population.

FOR the United States as a whole there were in 1890 100,000 males to 95,520 females, so that some of the males will be unable to get wives if they really need them.

RICHMOND has already begun to make arrangements for a grand May music festival.

THE Crawfordsville Telephone Company has began putting in its system. Will be in operation by December 1.

OSCAR ELLIOTT'S sawmill, four miles northeast of Columbus, was burned, causing a loss of $3,000, with no insurance.

MISS GRACE SPEAKMAN, fatally injured in a natural gas explosion at Marion, died at her home in Newcastle.

THE Kokomo police called the fire department out the other night and had them drown a man out of a cellar of a house of ill fame which they were raiding.

CHARLES E. WEDDLE aged 24, attempted to get aboard an incoming train on the Pennsylvania road at Orinoco, and fell beneath the wheels. He was instantly killed.

WHILE workmen were casing a gas well near Shelbyville, Saturday, some one struck a match. A fearful explosion followed and three men were probably fatally burned.

CAPT. J. R. NATION'S barn, near Kokomo, disappeared in a very singular manner. A little whirlwind dipped down and played havoc with the structure. The timbers were found scattered some distance away.

SEVERAL Evansville citizens have brought big suits for damages against the Merchants' Mercantile Agency of Chicago, alleging that it published a "Credit Experience Guide," rating them as unworthy of credit.

THE report sent out from Laporte that notices had been posted threatening to burn different places about the city has caused considerable trouble. The insurance companies are trying to cancel policies and raise the rates.

EDWARD C. MILLER, at the Muncie veneering works, accidentally stepped in a large vat of boiling water and was terribly scalded. He was rescued by another workman. The flesh on his right leg to the knee was fairly cooked.

J. M. TERRY, one of the oldest and best-known conductors on the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern railway, was killed east of Elkhart. He was working about his train when he was run over by it and instantly killed. He leaves a wife and three children. He had been employed on the road nineteen years.

FRANK LAYMAN met with a peculiar accident at Shelbyville. He and another workman were engaged in driving a well and were using a bar and chain twisting the pipe. In some way the chain slipped and struck him on the left side of the head, tearing his ear entirely off and rendering him unconscious for hours.

JOSEPH MILLER, son of a farmer residing near Yorktown, attempted to board a moving freight train in Anderson, but lost his hold and fell under the train. Both legs were crushed and were amputated below the knees by Dr. J. W. Hunt. Miller was taken to St. John's Hospital. His condition is regarded as very critical.

WHILE Wilson Lewis was fishing at Lafayette his line caught on something heavy. Exerting his strength he was horrified to find that his hook had brought up the body of a young colored woman. The girl had been missing over a week. Her name was Mary Chambers, and she was but 17 years old. Disappointment over a love affair is supposed to have caused her to suicide.

EDWARD NEES and Eli Crouse were instantly killed by a train at Reelsville. They were in a wagon and going to mill. The crossing is right in the village and a view of the road is obstructed by storerooms. The train was the fast eastbound Indianapolis express on the Vandalia. It was three hours late and was running at a high rate of speed. The horses had cleared the track, but the wagon was squarely struck and smashed into splinters. The men both leave families.

THE report of the Controller of the Currency regarding the condition of the national banks of Indiana shows that, at the close of business on October 2, the average reserve was 41.27 per cent., as against 30.19 per cent. on July 18. FIRE destroyed the large livery barn on the west side of the square at Knightstown, occupied by John T. Girty & Son. Seven horses, eight tons of hay, a half dozen fine buggies and carriages were burned. Loss, $1,500; insurance $1,000. Loss on barn $900. The fire was supposed to be of incendiary origin. It was the first opportunity since the completion of the water works plant that has been given to thoroughly test it. Four streams were thrown on the flames until the fire was extinguished with satisfactory result.

AS GEORGE W. JONES, a highly respected farmer living southwest of Rome, was crossing the railroad on Main street, a special containing the officials of the Missouri Pacific going at a speed of forty miles an hour, struck his carriage, injuring him so badly that he died in an hour. The man was carried fifty feet and was landed under the carriage, which was a complete wreck, and the horses were carried a greater distance, and landed on the other side of the track. Mr. Jones leaves a wife and five children.

A COSTLY mishap has occurred at Thompson's green glass bottle works, Gas City. The molten glass in the tank was allowed to get too hot and began leaking through the bottom of the tank into the air tunnel. The alarm was given and efforts were made to chill the hot glass with cold water. Before it could be checked however, about forty tons of glass had run out, filling and ruining the tunnel under the tank and badly damaging the tank itself. The loss will aggregate more than $1,000 and it will required the closing of the factory for two weeks while repairs are being made.

AT Roachdale fire burned Porter & Jones' poultry house, loss $3,000; Allison Block and grocery, loss $3,000; Boner's butcher shop, loss $1,000, and Overby's grocery, loss $3,000. All are partly insured. The fire was incendiary.

McHugh was a member of Company I, One Hundred and Eighty-Second New York Infantry.

He did not wish it at all; he would infinitely have pre erred French. He thought that language, as she spoke it, in tones lower and softer than he had ever heard before, sounded like the tongue of the angels.

And when, in the duet, after Mlle. Reynier had sung a few bars, there broke in, like a lark in the dusk of the morning, a clear, fresh soprano, the very voice he had heard behind him in church, Roderick felt himself literally trembling. He was impressionable, it was true—almost as much so as a woman; there was a deal of the woman in him for all his manliness—rather, I should say, with all his manliness, since the best woman has always somewhat of a man's strength, the noblest man a woman's gentleness; but no impressionability could account for the delight—nay, the ecstasy—with which he listened to the song.

It was not much of a song—the girl's voice made it all; but when it ceased he awoke, as out of a dream, and looked round as for something he had been in search of all his life long.

"Mamma," she said, still in French, and cree ing, French-girl fa hion, close to her mother's side, "I shall ve ve y happy to speak English to monsieur, whom I think I have seen before—on the Terrasse at Berne today. It is he, mamma, who, as I told you, did us the honor to be so charmed with our beautiful mountains."

Then she, too, had observed him. But she had come home and told the incident at once to her mother. He now could not have told it to any mortal soul.

"It is mademoiselle who honors me by even a pa sing remembrance," answered Roderick, striving hard to infuse into his blunt speech—how rude and blunt it seemed—even a tithe of her gracious courtesy. "May I claim you as a country-woman? Your father was English?"

"No, Scotch. There is a difference, is there not? though I fail to make mamma understand it. Papa was a Highlander." She said this in English, speaking slowly, but with great purity and correctness, pronouncing all ner "h's" and "th's."

"Mademoiselle has a perfect accent; she must, of course, have visited our country," said Roderick, eagerly.

"No; I have never left my mountains. I am entirely S viss; only papa used sometimes to talk to me of Scotland and tell me I looked almost like a Scotch lassie. Do I?"

"Heaven forbid," the renegade was near exclaiming but contented himself by explaining in a very eccentric and confused manner that she had certainly the fair hair and blue eyes of the North.

"So had papa; but he was little, and I am tall—very tall—for a Swiss girl. That was why he thought I resembled the girls of his country, and especially a cousin he had whom he loved—liked—is not that the right English word?—very much. But here I am going on, talking of ourselves and our affairs, which is ve y impolite, you know. But we are always so glad to meet any English person, mamma and I; I must go and tell her. She will be so pleased that you think me a little—just a little—like papa's countrywomen."

He would have told her that the thing she was most like was an angel, but of course such a point-blank truth was quite impossible, and, besides, she had already flown away on her invisible wings and hid herself among the crowd of ordinary girls. There was nothing for him, poor man! but to go and make love, or rather politeness, to her mother, with all the skill and the best French of which he was capable.

"Mademoiselle has a most beautiful voice and sings charmingly," said he at last.

"Ah, monsieur is too kind. But indeed it is true. And she does everything charmingly, if a mother may be pardoned for saying so. But she is the last of seven, and her father is dead. We are alone together, she and I." Then suddenly changing into brightness, "Perhaps monsieur is of a numerous family?"

"No, I have only three sisters, and my father too is dead—my dear father!"

"Ah!" with a quick intuition; and after a glance at his face, a kindly hand was laid on the young man's arm. "But monsieur has his mother still living; and a happy woman in possessing him is Madame ——; pardon, but I did not catch the name."

"Jardine—Roderick Jardine."

The Swiss lady drew back with a surprise th t he could not have failed to observe, had he not been wholly preoccupied in the difficult task of trying at once to be polite to her, and to see and hear all that was passing at the far end of the room.

"Madame, I percieve your daughter is going to sing again, and I am so fond of music. May I go and listen?"

He was off as if there were wires to his feet. Poor fellow! It was a very bad case, but not the first, nor probably the last, that has happened in this world.

However, he maintained his composure very creditably, talked courteously to all the Demoiselles Reynier at once, turned over their pages, examined their music, French, Italian and German, and at last, lighting upon an English song, he asked if any of them sung it.

The girls all shook their merry heads, pointing to the one whom he had not addre sed, scarcely even glanced at, though he knew exactly how she looked, sitting there at the piano with her blue eyes cast down, and a faint color, like a China rose, on her soft cheek.

"She sings it: ask her."

"Will mademoiselle do me that honor?" said Roderick, quite humbly, feeling more timid than he ever felt in his life.

"It is written for a tenor voice, monsieur. It i not a young lady's song."

"Yet I have often heard young ladies sing it, and very badly, too"—remembering how he had hated it at Richerden dinner-parties.

"Perhaps I also——" with an amused look which he answered by another.

"I will try my best."

It was a simple little song; most people have heard it "done to death" in many a drawing-room—"My Queen." This girl sung it in her pretty foreign English—not broken English, but of course with a slight accent, which rather increased the charm—sung it, not impetuously, but with a tender reserve, her China roses slowly growing into crimson ones as she did it, till at last she seemed to forget herself in the song——

When and how shall I earliest meet her?
What are the words that she first will say?
By what name shall I learn to greet her?
I know not now; it will come some day.
With this self-same sunlight shining upon her,
Shining down on her ringlets' sheen—
She is standing somewhere; she I will honor—
She that I wait for—my queen, my queen!

* * * * * *

I will not dream of her tall and stately;
She that I love may be airy and light.
I will not say she must speak sedately;
Whatever she does, it will sure be right.
She may be humble or proud, my lady,
Or that sweet calm which is just between:
But, whenever she comes, she will find me ready
To do her homage—my queen, my queen!

But she must be courteous, she must be holy,
Pure, sweet and tender, the girl I love.
Whether her birth be humble or lowly
I care no more than the angels above.
And I'll give my heart to my lady's keeping,
And ever her strength on my own shall lean;
And the stars shall fail and the saints be weeping,
Ere I cease to love her—my queen, my queen!

"Thanks," said Roderick, in English.

It was a mere word, scarcely audible, the briefest and most commonplace acknowledgment, yet it seemed to imply the gratitude, the benediction of a lifetime, given from the man to the woman whom he at once recognizes as the woman sent by heaven (if he has eyes to see and strength to accept and hold her) to be to him his "helpmeet," his joy, his crown, and his salvation.

The feeling was so sudden, so solemn, so overpowering that he never attempted to fight against it. Without another word he withdrew from the group—rom her, even: indeed, it seemed easier to watch her from a distance than to speak to her—and waited till the mother and daughter should retire, when he was determined to find out from M. Reynier all about them. At this moment—it was almost ridiculous—he actually did not know their names.

Another half hour—spent Roderick scarcely knew how, except that he was talking to half a do en people and watching one other person all the while—and he saw them retire; passing him with the usual distant bow. He had half extended his hand, English fashion, but happily drew it back in time.

"Au revoir, monsieur," responded the mother, with a courteous smile; but the daughter merely bent her head without a word.

"A charming pair," observed Mme. Reynier, after they were gone. "My husband thought you would like to meet them. Mademoiselle speaks English so well."

"Perfectly."

"And yet she has never quitted Switzerland. Her father lived in the very heart of the Alps; a most learned and amiable man, but eccentric. He left them poor. She is obliged to teach—to give music lessons—this dear Mademoiselle Silence."

"What did you say? What is her name?" cried Roderick, feeling all the blood rushing to his heart—to his face.

"It is an English name. I will call my daughter to pronounce it English fashion."

And with an amazement that even amounted to awe Roderick discovered that this girl—the first girl in all his life who had won from him a second thought—was his cousin; very distant, but still a cousin, and another Silence Jardine.

In his quixotic search he had done nothing—had almost forgotten what he meant to do; yet here was all done for him. With a feeling as of a man pursued by fate—blind, irresistible, and yet most blessed fate—he, without asking a single question more, got away as soon as he could. Once outside that door, and away from everybody's sight, he rushed almo t, staggering as he went, down to the water-side, and spent an hour there, walking wildly to and fro in the moonlight—the wonderful, sweet moonlight, bright as day—which poured itself in silver glory over the smooth lake and the sleeping town.

CHAPTER III.

That one hour of passionate pacing up and down under the stars seemed to have made a man of him; like the solitary vigil which the young esquires of old were left to spend, previous to being dubbed knights. When he awoke, quite early, long before day-break, he was no l nger a dreamy boy, but a belted knight ready to go out and fight, with his lady's token on his helm and his lady's love in his heart.

"The stars shall fail and the saints be weeping
Ere I cease to love her—my queen, my queen!"

He kept humming the song to himself in a passionate undertone all the way to M. Reynier's, whither he had determined to go and explain what Mr. Black, in the feeble French of his letter of introduction, had left wholly unexplained, the why and wherefore of young Mr. Jardine's visit to Switzerland.

How he got through that explanation, as he sat face to face with the kind old professor, in dressing-gown and slippers, Roderick never could tell. Nor what M. Reynier thought of it, though he veiled his opinion in most sympathetic politeness, and gave at once the address which the young man asked, or believed he had asked, in the most business-like and indifferent manner possible.

"Certainly, certainly, yes: and my wife and daughters shall call at once to congratulate the dear ladies on their good fortune in being discovered by so excellent a relative. Stay, perhaps monsieur would like Madame Reynier to go in advance and break to them the good tidings? It might startle them, and Madame Jardine is in very delicate health, and they are very poor, monsieur knows?"

Yes, he knew it, but he did not take it in—no more than the young queen who, hearing her subjects lacked bread, suggested their eating cake.

"I think, Monsieur Reynier," he said, with modest hesitation, "I should like to tell them myself. It is a family matter, and they would not feel my visit a liberty. They are my cousins, you see. If," with a sudden idea that almost made him smile—"if you would kindly vouch for me that I am—well, respectable, in short."

"Even if Monsieur did not carry his letter of recommendation in his face, Mr. Black's g arantee would have been quite sufficient," answered the professor, with grave politeness.

Another time Roderick would have laughed to think what his mother would have thought of her son's owing his whole credentials of character to Mr. Black the factor! but now he was in too great haste to linger an instant more than courtesy demanded; and it seemed hours rather than minutes before, armed with M. Reynier's petit billet, he found himself mounting the long stair (so like a Scotch one, only clean, scrupulously clean, etage after etage). Mme. Jardine lived au quatrieme, almost up to the roof of the tall house.

"Are they so very poor?" he thought, with a sharp pang, followed by a wild delight. To come as the Deus ex machina—the good genius—the protecting angel—how delicious! Ay, even though it were actual want he was about to find.

But no such discovery presented itself to the eyes of the young man, delicate in his tastes, quick, morbidly quick, to detect and revolt from anything coarse or squalid. A little Swiss damsel, in sabots, opened the door of the apartment and showed him into a salon—very foreign, certainly; his mother would have been shocked at the almost carpetless floor and curtainless windows; but exquisitely neat, harmonious in color, refined in arrangement.

And when she entered—not madame, but mademoiselle—he felt more than ever as if the whole thing were a vision of the night. She entered with a soft, silent grace, which made her Puritanic name seem the most appropriate possible, and standing still in the doorway, bowed to him in the distant foreign way. But she spoke in English—her sweet, slow, precise English, very correct in accent, though the sentences were sometimes arranged French fashion, and the "monsieur," translated into "sir," frequently appeared therein in a funny un-English way.

"Mamma has sent me, sir, to present her regrets that she cannot see you." (He had announced himself merely as a friend of M. Reynier's.) "But she is suffering a little more than usual today, and she has not risen. Will you say to me that which you desired to say to her?"

"I know—I feel—it is I who ought to apologize," stammered Roderick, feeling it absolutely impossible to face those great, blue, innocent, ignorant eyes. "But I came on business—business which could not be delayed."

The girl visibly shrunk. "Oh, I hope—I hope it is no more sorrow, mamma has suffered so much."

"Indeed, no; quite the contrary, I trust. May I be permitted to explain?"

But he could not explain. His tongue seemed to cleave to the roof of his mouth. All his self-possession, his good common sense, even his good manners, seemed to have fled from him.

"I am afraid—I—— Pardon, but if mademoiselle would condescend to take these to madame her mother," said he, hurriedly, falling back into French, as if its formal phrases of politeness made a barrier against himself and his irrepressible agitation.

She received the letter and card without looking at him or at them; he felt a slight pang in noticing that though evidently recognizing him, she showed not the slightest curiosity even to learn his name—and vanished from the salon.

LAND OF THE MIKADO.

Interesting Facts About the Country Now at War with China.

Anything bearing on Japan or its people is of peculiar interest at the present time. In 1892 the country had a population of 41,089,940. Caste holds sway there, the people being divided into three classes, chiefs and members of royal families, those belonging to the warrior caste, and the others are classified as ordinary subjects. The people are mainly devoted to agriculture, there being more than 5,000,000 families of peasant proprietors and nearly 2,500,000 families engaged in tenant farming or in ancillary occupations. Nevertheless the urban element is considerable, thirty-six towns having over 30,000 inhabitants, six over 100,000, and three over 300,000.

Divorce is much more common in Japan than in any Christian country. In 1892 the number of marriages was 348,449, and that of divorces was 113,498. The value of Japanese products exported in 1892 was $41,178,553, as against $38,516,100 ten years before. The foreign commodities imported in 1892 were appraised at $75,903,207, or more by some $44,000,000 than in 1883. We are Japan's best customer, although her principal purveyor is Great Britain. The amount of the Japanese public debt in the year 1892-93 was $267,126,000. The value of the metallic money in circulation was little less than $14,000,000. The total value of the paper money in circulation was $143,054,664.

On December 31, 1892, the Japanese Minister of Marine had at his disposal 269 Admirals and other officers of high grades, 1,122 officers of lower grades, and upwards of 9,000 sailors. Besides twenty-three torpedo boats there were thirty-five war vessels, having an aggregate displacement of 65,526 tons and carrying 392 guns. At the date above named the regular army consisted of more than 16,000 officers and non-commissioned officers and almost exactly 250,000 soldiers. The officers are well trained in European strategy and tactics, and the soldiers are armed with perfected weapons. Buddhism is the religion of the majority of the people and is supported by voluntary contributions.

A unique series of thirty-three examples came up for sale with the collection of the late Lord Cheylesmore, in May, 1892, and affords an easy medium of comparison. The best pictures appear to increase in the same ratio as the less excellent examples decline. "The Monarch of the Glen," so well known through T. Landseer's very successful engraving, is a masterpiece, and is never likely to sustain any very pronounced depreciation in value. In the late Lord Londesborough's sale it fetched 6,200 guineas, which amount was increased by 700 guineas in 1892. On the other hand, the "Taming of the Shrew," which realized 1,430 guineas, now dropped to 1,150 guineas—not a serious drop, perhaps, considering the number of pictures by the same master sold at the same time.

A much more serious fall, however, was sustained by "Lady Godiva's Prayer," which in 1874 was appraised at 3,200 guineas, and was now sold for 900 guineas. "The Highland Cabin," which, at the disper al of the Duchess of Bedford's collection in 1853, went for 150 guineas, now sold for 450 guineas; "The Sentinel," which sold in 1864 for 240 guineas, now realized 180 guineas, and "All that Remains of the Glory of William Smith," which, twenty years ago went for 320 guineas, was valued in 1892 at 290 guineas. The majority of the other Landseers in this collection were purchased from the art st.

As further illustrations of the rise and fall respectively in Landseers, we may mention "Taking a Buck," which in the Manley Hall sale, 1888, realized 1,950 guineas, and dropped in 1892 to 620 guineas, and "Braemar," which in 1868 sold for 4,000 guineas, and had advanced at the Bolckom sale in 1888 to £5,197. The celebrated work "Chevy," for which Landseer is said to have received £5,000, realized in the Hemming sale in April last, 3,760 guineas.—Nineteenth Century.

"Greeks of the Orient."

"The courage with which the little state of Japan tackles the big Chinese Empire is a spectacle to challenge the admiration of the world." This sentence, recently uttered by a well-known military man, does not fairly represent the actual status of affairs in the East, nor give a correct idea of the respective powers of the combatants now engaged in what is really a fierce struggle, not so much for Corea as for supremacy and prestige. Compared, either in area or in population, with her gigantic antagonist, Japan seems a pigmy, but in point of fact the island empire is anything but small. Comprising, as it does, an area of 147,000 square miles and a population of 40,000,000, it is larger than Italy or Great Britain, is but slightly exceeded in size by Prussia, and falls little short of the Austro-Hungarian empire; while in population it exceeds France by 2,000,000, Great Britain 3,000,000, has 10,000,000 more than Prussia, 11,000,000 more than Italy, and over twice as many as Spain. When compared with any other than the huge, overgrown states of Russia and China, Japan is therefore a formidable power, one that would prove no mean antagonist either in commerce or war. Up to this time the Japanese have displayed no special desire for military achievements, but the extreme readiness they have shown in mastering the arts of Western civilization justifies the belief that in the field they will exhibit the same dexterity and be rewarded with the same success that has attended their efforts in more peaceful lines.

A GEISHA GIRL.

HARD AT WORK.

The Japanese have been called the "Greeks of the Orient," and well deserve the appellation, for ages of artistic training have so informed the mind of even that class which depends on manual labor for bread that the day laborers and people who could not, in the ordinary course of affairs, be expected to know anything whatever of art, possess accomplishments that among other nations are known only to the few who have time to devote to culture and the means of acquiring it. The love of art seems to be universal among this singular peop e, and not only do they show the love, but, in no inconsiderable degree, even the humblest display an executive ability. One traveler records seeing a large crane light on a tree in a village, and, instead of somebody hurrying away for a gun, a dozen produced note-books and pencils and sat down on the ground to sketch the bird. Another tells how the cook who prepared the meals for the party amused the children by dashing off little sketches by the hour; still another was carried by ordinary Japanese bearers, men of the lowest order of laborers, to an unfrequented shrine somewhere in the woods, and to his amazement found that two or three of the carriers had while waiting made sketches of the temple and vicinity, and these efforts were not mere scrawls or blotches, but possessed a fair order of merit. A country where day laborers are artists and where cooks amuse themselves by sketching must possess much that would interest those who regard mankind as the proper study of man; so it is not surprising to find that ever since the opening of Japan to the business travel of the West this singular island state has attracted the attention of thinking men and has given occasion for the publication of an immense mass of literary matter concerning its people.

The early books on Japan have all the freshness of a subject entirely new. They deal with a people who, for ages, were so completely separated from the rest of the world that with them the hands of the clock of time seem to have been at a standstill for centuries. Everything was strange. The dress, the manners of the people, the customs prevalent everywhere among both high and low, the houses, the legal system, the religion—the ordinances of worship, the physical appearance of the people themselves, all were so completely out of the ordinary line of occidental experience, that had a traveler been suddenly transported to another planet he could not have been more surprised at what he beheld. But, with the extraordinary acuteness that is distinguishingly characteristic of the Japanese people, they were quick to see that in some respects the men from the West had greatly the advantage of themselves, and with rare good sense they determined to abandon their own ways and adopt those of the strangers. This determination was not arrived at hastily, but after the most careful consideration of the respective merits of the two systems, and a sober conclusion that the interests of their nation could be best forwarded by making the change. Hence it is that the social and political institutions of Japan are a composite of those of other countries; the system of justice has been borrowed from one, the system of police from another; one has contributed the newspaper, and another the newspaper censorship, and so on through the list. Nor can it be said that the systems are awkwardly used, for the natural cleverness of the Japanese is such that they are able to discern what parts of any given system are suitable and what are unsuitable to their own social and political needs, and thus have made a judicious selection, combining the pieces in such a manner as to produce a result which, while not in every respect entirely satisfactory, is yet a great improvement on the native original.

A JAPANESE HOUSEBOAT.

The effort to use Western institutions in an Eastern fashion has, however, been productive of some curious consequences. The Japanese have newspapers, for instance, and such is the popularity of this occidental institution that at present there are no fewer than 550 newspapers and periodicals, seventeen dailies in Tokio alone, all the periodical press of Japan having a combined circulation of nearly 95,000,000 a year. But the native characters being still retained in the papers, the publication of a Japanese periodical is attended with difficulties almost insurmountable. There are perhaps 20,000 characters in the Chinese ideographic system in Japan; of these over 4,000 are in daily use; and the compositor must be prepared to place in his "stick" any one of these 4,000 types. As it is a physical impossibility for any man to have 4,000 type in reach at one time, a number of boys are employed, the copy is cut into "takes" and handed to them. There are forty-seven kana syllables, used for connecting the ideographs, and with these at his table the compositor waits on the boys who are flying to and fro among a set of library cases, where the type are placed, each boy singing the sound of the ideograph of which he is in search. As he finds each he brings it to the compositor, and when all in his "take" are collected he returns the copy, receives another "take," and again sets up his monotonous sing-song cry. After a galley has been set up, a proof is taken and sent to two proof-readers, one of whom says the copy to the other. The office is thus a scene of continual talk, chant and confusion, but the Japanese are satisfied, and so long as they are content nobody else has any just cause of complaint, but the effort to use an occidental institution in an oriental style causes a singular incorgruity.

JAPANESE SOLDIERS FENCING.

The same effect is visibly produced in society when an attempt is made to combine the East and the West in the matter of dress. The native Japanese costume is picturesque and very striking, but when to a Japanese gown or toga is added a swallow-tailed coat and a stove-pipe hat, the effect is often very droll. The march of progress, however, has not spared the Japanese raiment, and there are many social circles in the larger cities where European dress is the rule, and a reversion to the native costume is regarded almost as a relapse into barbarism.

TRAVELING IN JAPAN.

Still, however, the wave of Western civilization has not overwhelmed the people of Japan. Even in the leading centers of population the native dress is worn by more people than adopt the foreign, while at other points the native life has hardly been touched, or, at least, seems not to have been, by Western influences. In the villages and country the Japanese character is seen in its native simplicity, or, as some one has said, native duplicity, for, like the heathen Chinee, the Jap is peculiar, and so clever in bargaining, in buying and selling that John is a fool compared to him. There is one native characteristic which Western progress has not yet been able to touch, the unfailing good temper of the people. No matter what happens, a Japanese crowd is always in a good humor. A couple of bearers may come along with a traveler in the curious native contrivance that answers for a cab; with a shout they plunge into the crowd, push its members right and left, and in the most uncermonious manner elbow their way through; in any European country, or even in America, such a proceeding would cause half a dozen fights in as many minutes, but the Japanese only laugh. Everything in Japan is done politely. When a policeman feels it his duty to make an arrest he does it with smiling urbanity, and he and his proposed prisoner bow and scrape to each other like a pair of dancing masters. With as much suavity as the occasion will permit, the native "peeler" produces a piece of cord, passes it several times round the body of the offender, gently ties his hands behind him, and, taking the loose end of the string, escorts him to the station house, where, in the French fashion, his case is at once inquired into by a magistrate. The arrest and process of binding are watched with open-eyed interest by a crowd of people, but as soon as the representative of the law has disappeared with his captive everybody laughs. There is no sympathy for the poor fellow on his way to the calaboose; nobody threatens the officer; it is all only a very good joke, which is momentarily enjoyed and forgotten.

TRANSPORTATION IN JAPAN.

This characteristic levity has given rise to one of the peculiar institutions of Japan—the tea house and the geisha girl (pronounced gaysha). The tea house is to the Japanese what the saloon, the club, the hotel rotunda, the restaurant, the theater, and a few other resorts are to the men of other lands—a place where rest, refreshment of any kind, and recreation may all be had in abundance. In Japan a man does not go to a tea house to enjoy his own company; so, if on pleasure bent, he requests the attendant to summon a geisha girl. A geisha is not necessarily a social outcast, though it is said she is not always proof against either gold or temptation; she is a girl who has been sold by her parents to a master for the purpose of being trained to do just what she does—to amuse individuals or social parties in need of entertainment. In her way she is accomplished. She has an abundance of repartee, and can talk with a liveliness that a Western belle might envy; she can play innumerable games with cards and other devices; she can sing in a high falsetto voice that will bring tears to your eyes, and she can dance with a grace that will surprise a stage manager. Her dancing, it is true, is mostly posturing, with graceful manipulations of the fan she always carries, but her attitudes are all tasty and generally refined, her postures are never contortions. She is always richly dressed, this being a part of her business, and while the larger share of her earnings is absorbed by her master, the presents she receives are often sufficient to constitute a handsome income in themselves. All depends on her popularity. If she is much in demand at the entertainments of the wealthy, she may look forward to becoming the wife or favorite of some rich man, who buys her freedom and installs her in his house. She does not generally remain there long. The retirement in which Japanese women live soon becomes very dull to a professional beauty, who has passed her life in pleasing the public, and after a few months of seclusion she is generally again seen in the street, where the sisterhood reside, ready to enter on the business of entertaining with a zest all the keener from having had a temporary respite. The professional entertainers of the Island Empire—they do for the Japanese what the dancing girls of India do for the ennuied men of that country—enable the hours to pass more quickly and shed over the scenes of revelry a light that would not otherwise be obtainable, for the Japanese wives are not allowed to see much company, and are consequently rather stupid.

There is one thing that can be said for the Japanese; no matter of what rank or condition in life, they are always entertaining to the stranger, whether in their palaces, more ornate and highly adorned than even those of the Chinese; whether at their devotions in the temples that are daily finding fewer worshipers within their walls; whether traveling to and fro in the quaint sedan chairs which answer the people of the better classes instead of carriages; or in their houseboats, in which thousands of the population find a home; whether at work or at play, in jest or in earnest, they are always a source of interest to those who from business or curiosity are thrown with them, and the amount of literature concerning them is likely to increase rather than to diminish for a long time to come.

Pain and Rest.

We are told that pain is nothing more than nerve-irritation. It is experienced when any destructive process goes on in any part of the body, and may be felt in one part of the body while the source of it is in another. Thus headache may have its source in the muscles of the eye.

Pain, strange as it may seem, is really a protective and beneficial sensation.

In the case of a broken limb, extreme pain is caused by motion in that limb. Therefore the sufferer, whether man or animal, tries to keep the limb at rest, which is the very condition requisite for its healing. Surgeons, indeed, have taken hints from nature in this regard, and in case of tuberculosis affecting joints find that the best results are obtained by rendering the joints motionless by means of splints, though the affection itself is often not very painful.

Pain from indigestion is relieved by temporarily lightening the diet, and giving the digestive organs less work to do. Even headache usually indicates a call for rest.

Pain due to an overtaxing of the nerve center, that is, the brain, is usually the most difficult to combat, since here the cause is often obscure. In this state neuralgia—nerve pain—affects first one part of the body, then another. Nature's restorer, sleep, is courted with difficulty, and life's ordinary duties become burdens almost too heavy to be borne.

In this condition, nature's call for rest is best heeded by a complete change of surroundings. If the call is disregarded, serious consequences are likely to ensue. A vacation offers one of the best chances of recuperation. In fact, a regular indulgence in such forms of recreation is the best means of preventing this very condition, and should be looked upon not as the indulgence of a weakness, but as the performance of a duty.

In the natural course of events one adds to, rather than detracts from, the years which may be given to active labors by devoting regular periods to rest.

Treat the body not as a mere machine, which wears out in any case after a certain number of years or months of work, but as a vital organism having the power of revivifying itself—capable of being hard worked, but demanding, too, times of recuperation.

PROPELLED BY THE ARMS.

An Invention that Is Expected to Lower Bicycle Records.

It seems that propulsion of bicycles by the arms has at last been solved.

THE APPARATUS.

Whether this invention will help to lower the short distance record or not remains to be seen, but it looks reasonable that, in long distance riding, it will be a great help in maintaining speed.

The "Quadrimotive O'Keenan" is an ordinary bicycle, to which a second chain is added. This chain unites two pinions; one is on the axis of the propelling wheel, the other is placed on a support fastened to the handle bar. Two handles, easily brought into play, work the contrivance.

HOW IT WORKS.

Feuillet's Sensitiveness to Noise.

M. Octave Feuillet, from all accounts, must have been a hard man to live with. Mme. Feuillet, who ought to know, declares that he was a victim to his nerves. A strange voice, one he was unaccustomed to, in the house made him wild. When he was ailing mattresses had to be piled up against his doors, so as to keep out the ordinary noises. When in the country the crowing of cocks, the cackling of hens, the neighing of horses, made him frantic. For a man of poetical temperament the twitter of swallows, the chirping of sparrows, caused him agony. By steady pistol practicing, says his wife, he exterminated all the fowl in a country garden where he was living.

Ancient Ruins.

The oldest architectural ruins in the world are believed to be the rock-cut temples of Ipsambul, on the left bank of the Nile, in Nubia.

THURSDAY.....NOVEMBER 1, 1894.

SEND election reports to the COURIER.

SUGAR is still getting lower every day's report.

VOORHEES at Ft. Wayne Saturday. Big rally.

STAMP, democrats, stamp with care. Stamp the rooster in the square.

THE populists are proving themselves unfit even to govern a township. Stamp the rooster, POPULISTS are offering nothing better than Coxey's cheap debt plan. Stamp the rooster.

FREE Canadian lumber has not stopped our mills. Lesh & Co., the Goshen mill men, are working night and day.

DEMOCRATS in the last year have restored to the people over fifty millions acres of public land—enough for a large state.

WILL people vote the republican ticket so as to go back to McKinleyism and pay high tariffs, high bounties, and bring on another panic? Not if they are wise.

ASK republican speakers if they will re-enact the topnotch McKinley tariff if they get into power. They dare not say "yes," and are afraid to say "no."

WHEN the hardworking voters of DeKalb get tired of feeding the Coxeys, Galvins and other traveling and local populist leaders they will stop and think awhile.

REPUBLICANS are asking for votes, but don't say what they will do if restored to power. If they are afraid to make their plans known they are not fit to be trusted. Stamp the rooster.

LAKE SHORE railway paid $8,400 taxes into the DeKalb county treasury last week. Under the populists' plan of government ownership, the people would have this to pay. Vote for the democrats who made this railway tax law.

GOV. WAITE, of Colorado, populist made a speech in Chicago on the Lake Front Sunday. There were three bands, and they had a regular week day rally. What do DeKalb people think of these Sunday rallies anyway? Bliss will probably deny it.

DEMOCRATS have passed a lower tariff bill, taken off the fifteen million bounty to two hundred sugar producers, made a law taxing greenbacks, and a law taxing big incomes. Do voters want to go back on such a record, and bring in high bounties and McKinley times again?

THERE is no better man on any ticket than Henry Hines. It lies between Mr. Hines and D. W. Fair. Mr. Hogue, the populist candidate, has no possible show. All know that Hines will be just the man to care for the county. Show you desire a good treasurer by voting for Hines.

VOTE far Cal. VanAuken. a man who can do the work himself, and who makes no mistakes to add to the cost of ditches, etc. He has saved the county, by good management, over $5,000 in one year. A vote for VanAuken is a vote for good work well done, and no money wasted.

ABOUT sixty millions only of silver dollars are now in circulation. People keep sending them back for redemption, while we have about five hundred millions. Do populists want as much more silver coined, or want it bought up and laid away in bars, to remain idle? It looks like it.

DR. WOOD must go to the legislature. We must not send a man down there to knock out the good laws enacted by former democratic legislatures. Mr. Wood is an able physician who has built up an extensive practice. He is well informed, and will be a valuable member. Don't overlook him. The office may prove one of great importance to us all. Give him a vote.

BLISS, who runs the unthinking part of the little populist party, has had a glorious opportunity this campaign to show his high qualifications for leadership. First, he went out to speak himself, then he got Coxey, then he got the Indian woman. There being a few days left of the campaign, he might still make a date for Ed. Bishop's cigar sign. Nothing like closing the campaign in a blaze of glory.

BORST, for auditor, means good work properly done in this important office. He has, as is known, been hired to do the work of the office for some years, and has been unusually careful and efficient. No one can make an objection to the way his work has been done. It is a question of Borst or Bicknell. Which will you you have? Grube, the populist candidate, will not get it. Let us give it to Borst.

JOHN P. CRIMMINS, the young man who, having lost a leg, could and did, and still does, support his mother and her family, should have our sympathy and admiration. He is well informed and educated, writes an excellent hand, has filled positions of trust successfully, and will make an industrious and painstaking recorder. He has just the very talent needed. See that he has a chance to do this work for us. Vote for him. That is the way to get him.

CHARLES COMISKY, for coroner, is the name of a man who never ran for an office, and he did not seek this one. There is no money to be made in this office by any one, and no reason why it should be refused to him if he will take it. The duties are always delicate and sometimes disagreeable. But they have to be done by some one. We believe Mr. Comiskey will do this work as conscientiously as any man we could have selected.

LOUIS J. GENGLER is our candidate for prosecutor. He has, as we said recently, held the next place to this, that is the deputyship for his part of the county, for some time. As far as we know he has been prompt and thorough, assisting in all possible ways to secure justice and bring offenders against the laws to punishment. We consider him the ablest man running for this office on the four party tickets. He should be elected by the law abiding people.

JUDGE CLINE is what it ought to be, and we hope it will be. Mr Cline has the odds against him, it is true. But he is a man who makes friends wherever he goes, and while he has not been able to see every voter in the two counties he has seen many. And those who have met him have been favorably impressed with him. He is well versed in the law, active, prompt, industrious, quick and we believe would be thoroughly impartial. Try him for judge, by giving him a big vote.

WHERE can we find a more suitable man for clerk than Sol. Barney? He is an able business man and has put himself in a high place among the business people of Concord and Newville townships, and is recognized as a leader in society and charitable circles. All these are good qualities for a county clerk. Barney should be remembered by every thinking voter. If we want our county offices property managed, put good capable men into them. That is the plain and only way. Make Sol. Barney clerk.

COOP RALSTON has made a model sheriff, and no one has just cause of complaint against him, except a few thugs that undertook to resist him and got beautifully thrashed. We need that kind of a sheriff when it comes to handling criminals. But we also need just such a large hearted man as he is, to do a sheriff's duty in cases when people are merely unfortunate. These he cares for and deals with in a spirit of kindness. The people always give a good servant a second term. So let it be with Sheriff Ralston.

VOTE for Allen Schultz and Robert S. S. Reed for commissioners, so as to continue the good work done by our democratic board of commissioners during the past year. The year ending May 31, '93, was a very expensive one, so many large bridges and long ditches had to be made, and they had to go in debt $22,000. This last year they not only kept out of debt, but paid up on the old debt almost $12,000, making $34,000 better showing than the year before. Mr. Schultz and Mr. Reed have promised to keep the debt going down like this by keeping down expenses wherever possible. Both are able financiers and able to do as they say they will.

MRS. W. H. TEMBULL.
Corunna, Ind. 43-45

To Vote a Straight Ticket.

To vote a straight ticket stamp anywhere within the large square that contains the rooster, the eagle, rising sun, or the plow and hammer, but stamp NOWHERE ELSE not even the small squares at the left. There is no small square at the left of the words "Democratic," "Republican." "Prohibition," "People's Ticket." So no attention should be paid to these words. Stamp anywhere within the square, no matter if you do hit the rooster, the eagle, the rising sun or the plow. But if the stamp strikes outside the square, the ballot cannot be counted

To Vote a Mixed Ticked.

DO NOT stamp in the big square at all, but go through stamping the small square at the left of each name you wish to vote for on any ticket.

Do not stamp the word "democratic," "republican," "prohibition," or "people's" thinking that would vote a straight ticket. Those words are merely to show which ticket is under that head and have nothing to do with the voting. To vote a straight ticket stamp anywhere within the big square, and no where else. To vote a mixed ticket you do not stamp the big square, but stamp the little squares at the left of the names you wish to vote for on any ticket.

WATERLOO.

Gracie Brown, eldest daughter of Geo. Brown, is very sick with diphtheria.

George Rhinesmith has sold his pleasant home on Union street to Chas. Triplet, a farmer from north of town. Mr. Triplet has sold his farm and farming appliances to his married son, and will move into town directly after election.

R. J. Fisk last week harvested three hundred bushels of potatoes.

Willard Fee has set out this fall an immense number of strawberry plants—somewhere in the thousands. Strawberries next summer ought to be cheap, with so many in the business.

There is no news. The coming election seems to be the one subject of interest to all voters, and everything that is to take place is to be either before, or after election. Groups are seen on the street or in business places, and nine times out of ten, words heard in passing at once show the subject to be connected with the all important election. If two only are in conversation, it may be safe to conclude either they are the leaders of one party or another, comparing notes, discussing the prospect, or laying plans for success, or else this one is striving to induce the other to vote for a certain candidate, or for his party. "And the world moves on."

CATARRHAL DYSPEPSIA.

A Discouraged Invalid Restored to Health and Happiness.

Catarrh of the stomach causes a condition known as dyspepsia or indigestion. It usually results from catarrh in the throat, but sometimes occurs in people who have never had catarrh elsewhere. The symptoms of dyspepsia are: liver complaint, biliousness, sour stomach, water-brash, bloating after eating, constipation, piles, and, in many cases, low spirits, dizzy head, sympathetic heart palpitation, pain indigestion, and looseness of the bowels. Pe-ru-na and Man-a-lin, taken according to directions on the bottle, will cure every one. The following is a specimen of the letters received from patients: O. S. McQuillan, Spring Hill, Iowa, writes: "Four years ago last fall my stomach, without any previous warning, refused to perform its functions, and I soon lost strength. During this time food was forced through my stomach by using cathartics. With flesh wasted away, strength exhausted so that it took all my energy to even get into a bath tub, hopes all gone I began to take Pe-ru-na and Man-a-lin, following free advice which Dr. Hartman gave me. In a short time I could eat nourishing food, and the piles, kidney trouble and constipation disappeard Flesh, strength, and a splendid appetite returned, and I went to work." For treatise on catarrh, coughs, colds, consumption, and all climatic diseases of winter, send for Family Physician No. 2. Address The Pe-ru-na Drug Manufacturing Company, Columbus, Ohio.

The Other Side.

Mr. Penfield has been parading a comparison of court expenses under Judge McBride and Judge Powers, for the purpose of influencing the voters to Penfield's support. It shows the expenses of Powers to be about $6,000 more than those under McBride. Penfield omitted to say that under the law in McBride's time he was required to hold only three terms of court a year in each county, while Powers was obliged to hold four. The fact was not stated that there were a large number of cases tried in DeKalb on changes of venue from Allen and Noble, in which the costs have been refunded to DeKalb county and should have been credited against the pretended differences. The writer of that sly article didn't state that Penfield himself made more than twice the difference in costs for our taxpayers in the Deeters case alone, when the state attorney had offered to stop the case by giving Deeters a life sentence. He omitted to state that he made more than $2,000 of this cost in the Auburn Foundry cases, when it could have been settled for $100. He omitted to state that some of this cost was made when Penfield persecuted the Auburn Church Furniture Factory while the company was giving employment to honest labor. He omitted to state that Mr. Paul, an inhabitant of Lake county, was imported into DeKalb to sue the B. & O. railway for injuries received, in which Penfield was getting a divide, while our taxpayers were footing the bills. If Penfield had the interest of DeKalb county taxpayers, whom he is now asking for votes, so near to his heart, why did he not advise Paul to go back to Lake county and let his own people settle for his wrongs. The taxpayers of this county have put up about $15,000 to trail along cases which Penfield opened for the express purpose of benefiting Penfield. In the language of the republican press "It requires a good lawyer to save court expenses." Isn't Penfield a little "too good" a lawyer for the present condition of our financial health?

Madden All Right.

Several people are doing Mr. Madden, the democratic candidate for trustee an injustice, by trying to make people believe he is making the county an expense by digging his big ditch, the one we spoke of a week or two ago. But he is not making an extra expense. On the contrary he is saving a big sum to the county. They say he is compelling the bridge to be moved. Not so. The bridge has been failing for some years, and will soon have to be replaced by a new one, and when the new one is built it will have to go a length west, in order to get into the line of the channel as it will be eventually made. If the new bridge is put where the old one is, then when the channel is straightened another new bridge will have to be made, making a double expense. The new bridge will be of iron and stone, and must be put on the place where it can stay. If Mr. Madden had not dug this big ditch the county would have it to do when the new bridge is made. He has simply saved the county a big sum of money, and that is all there is to it. Had he been like some men he would have waited and figured to get the county to do the work for him

G. H. YESBERA,

Merchant Tailor and Clothier.

Dr. Wood on Taxes.

An interview with Dr. Wood, our candidate for representative, in regard to the taxing of mortgages, etc, shows he is sound and is with the people. He is working up public opinion to a sense of the great wrongs they are subjected to. He favors a law to tax mortgages to the man who owns them. If eastern parties loan money to us on farm mortgages, they pay no tax on it here, nor at their homes. But the farmer pays the taxes on the whole value of the farm the same as if he owed nothing. The party that owns a mortgage should be made to put it on record so as to pay taxes on it, as on other property. If not put on record, it should be null and void. If Dr. Wood is elected, he will at once begin work for such a law. Every voter should remember this, and vote for his own interests.

No Trades Made.

On the eve of an election all sorts of stories are started to make trouble between candidates on the same ticket. A story came floating in the other day, that Frank Borst was trading off the other candidates to get votes for himself. This is not so. The story is an absolute falsehood. Mr. Borst is running an honorable campaign, and trying his best to keep every man on the ticket up even with him. The candidates are all, without exception, doing a square business, asking votes for themselves, but careful in all cases to hurt no other candidate on the same ticket. Democrats, spot this lie whenever it comes up. There is also on Mr. Bicknell's circulars, a statement that Mr. Borst had been two years deputy treasurer. Such is not the case, and Mr. Bicknell and his advisers certainly know it. Mr. Borst never worked in any office but that of auditor.

Foreign Markets.

We have often shown that what we want is wider foreign markets, and have stated that the lower and fairer our tariff rates are, the more of our products we could sell abroad, for we cannot consume all at home. Now comes the reduced democratic tariff and begins to open up sales at once. We mentioned last week, the sale of Michigan lumber to parties at Windsor, Canada. Now we have just learned that the furniture makers of Grand Rapids, Mich., have opened up an agency in England and are selling their goods there at prices that beat the English on their own ground.

FT. WAYNE IN ENGLAND.

Now comes Ft. Wayne, and puts her products on the English market. Mr. Rorison, of the Ft. Wayne Electric lights works, is in England making sales of electrical lighting and other appliances, and succeeding beyond his expectations.

FARM MACHINERY.

We made a note a short time ago, about the departure of Henry Boozer, at Waterloo, to South America, where he goes to sell our agricultural machinery to the people down there.

GRAIN AND FLOUR.

Now comes also, a heavy flouring mill at Logansport, Ind, that says they are not losing a penny on their trade with Cuba, as was predicted when the McKinley reciprocity arrangements with Cuba were stopped by the new tariff bill. This flouring mill company is that of Uhl & Co. Logansport.

HOME MARKET TOO SMALL.

We have often called attention to this foolishness about a home market. Fairfield township can produce more than all DeKalb county could use up. Then where would the rest of the county sell? The market would be glutted. The United States can raise nearly enough wheat, corn, etc, to supply all the world. Give us the world for a market and we will raise more, sell more and at better prices.

WISCONSIN BARLEY FOR HOLLAND.

Milwaukee grain men have begun shipping barley to Europe under the new law. They sent 25,000 bushels last week to Holland, for the new tariff law is opening up our foreign trade.

Died.

Mrs. Frank Joliff, formerly Miss Maud Baker daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chris. Baker died at her home here Tuesday, after an illness of several weeks. The funeral is to morrow Nov. 2 and interment in Evergreen cemetery. She leaves a little child about a year old. She was a model wife, and mother, and our people sympathize with Mr. Joliff in his bereavement, Seed Potatoes for Sale.

J. C. Cramar, east of town, has several hundred bushels of fine potatoes for seed which he will sell. The chief one is the new "Michigan Beauty," a kind that he brought from Michigan last year. They are very large, yield well, and are pretty certain for a crop. Besides, they are excellent keepers. They will keep good and fresh up into July. Call on him and see them. 43-45

CHICAGO RECORD, independent republican paper say, we should stand by the democrats in supporting the new tariff law and not go back to McKinleyism, Correct.

Rally at Garrett.

Saturday evening at Garrett will be a big democratic meeting, with speeches both in German and English. Dr. Wood will be one of the speakers, and the editor of the "German Herold" at Defiance speaks in that language. There will be music in plenty.

To Our Subscribers.

Since the prospect of poor crops caused by the wet spring of 1892, we find that many of our subscribers have been allowing their subscription to get behind. Those back one year then, are back three years now, and as the years go by, the sum grows larger, till it is harder to pay. Even people we know are in good circumstances have allowed themselves to fall behind in this way, until our subscription accounts have fallen to the lowest ebb we ever had them, even in the days when our list was much smaller. Now, we wish to urge every one owing us on subscription more than a year to make an effort to settle it. This condition of things cannot be made a success. It works against you, as well as against the COURIER, and it is for the interest of both, that we urge you to attend to this before it grows larger. Come in and see us. If you cannot come, send by some one, or by letter. There are not many who are unable to spare a small sum each year to pay for a paper. Let us have a settlement every year. No man can carry on a business that costs as much each week and month, as it does to run a paper, unless his patrons pay promptly. Our own expenses are cash and have to be met promptly. How can we do this, if our patrons make us wait from two to six years? Please look up your receipts, and see how you stand, and if in arrears, do not fail to heed this friendly call.

The 100th Indiana.

The old 100th Indiana Veterans have their 9th Annual Reunion this year at Portland, Nov. 22. Great preparations are being made in that lively gas belt city to illuminate everything for the "boys," and everything is being done to make their brief stay pleasant, as well as to do the city credit while honoring them. Every member should attend who can possibly do so.

Electric Light Changes.

The Kiblinger Electric light plant has been sold to the Auburn Mining Co., and the dynamo etc, will be moved over to the same place so both can be run from the same engine. Some slight changes in rates will be made affecting mainly the lights that run all night. The cost of wiring etc, will be reduced, and minor changes made.

Township Ticket.

We have all been so busy with our county and state tickets, that we have almost overlooked the great importance of our township ticket. Good men are presented to us for our township officers, and the voters should look the list over carefully. The trustee is the sole governor of the township, and he may be of value or not, according to whether he is a capable business man or not. The same may be said of assessor, which like trustee, is a four year office, and during that time all real estate must be assessed. We can give only the democratic and republican names, as the others are not at hand.

DEMOCRATIC.

For trustee, Willis Madden; for assessor, Joseph Link; justices, Jacob Walborn and C. C. Walter; constables, L. S. Stoner F. A. Kruger.

REPUBLICAN.

For trustee, A. B. Walsworth: for assessor, T. J. Saxton; justices, Moses B. Willis and C. S. Clark; constables, C. H Crow and Mort Wilson.

We hope Judge Powers will pardon us for a little error in last week's COURIER, which would place a modest man like him in an embarrassing position. The "intelligent typographer" and "eagle-eyed proof-reader made us say that "Mrs." Leonard wanted to form a partnership with the judge. It should have been "Mr." Leonard, for although the judge is a man of pleasing address, we don't think "Mrs." Leonard had any idea of forming a partnership in the law. It is all the result of one of those annoying little things that will happen in the best regulated printing offices.

Family Meeting.

On October 25th, last, the fourth annual meeting of the Michael Treesh family was held at the home of John Miser, of Richland township. All the family had been spared to meet on this pleasant occept Silas Treesh, of South Dakota. His business interests did not permit his absence from home.

There were forty-two persons in all present: An uncle, William Treesh, 65 years of age, with his wife Lydia; three brothers — John, resident of Auburn; Michael, of Goshen, and Levi W., of Richland, with their wives; five sisters—Mary Ann Keagy, of Richland township, Eliza Shotts, of Steuben; Sarah Miser, of Richland; Elizabeth Weitzel, of Sedan, and Lydia Rohm, of Richland, together with their husbands; five married children of Sarah and John Miser, viz; John and Emanuel, with their wives, and Christian, single, Lydia Knoepfel and Sarah Clutter, and husbands, together with a number of children of the families. Among others present were Christian Rohm, the mother of John Miser, Christian Miser and wife, Mrs. Peter Miser, Albert Fickerson and wife, and the Rev. G. A. Burkett, minister of the Lutheran church of Fairfield charge.

The time until dinner was agreeably spent in welcoming arriving guests, when all set down to a bountiful repast, prepared by Mrs. Sarah Miser, the hostess of the occasion.

Then, in accordance with the custom, a program of exercises was carried out, as follows: Reading Scripture, by Rev. G. A. Burkett: Hymn—"Nearer My God to Thee," in which all joined; Prayer, by Rev. Burkett; appropriate address by Rev. Michael Shotts; a second hymn, and remarks by Rev. Burkett upon the pleasure resulting from kindly feelings and concord of families.

To give form to the meeting, the family was organized as a society, with L. W. Treesh as president and John Treesh as secretary. The next place of meeting was appointed to be held at the home of Levi W. Treesh.

In the varied scenes of life, where there occurs much to discourage, such assembly of the children of a family grown to maturity, and doing their part as Christian parents and good citizens, exerts a powerful and happy influence upon brother, sister and children, and speaks well for the future of all, in mutual sympathy and lasting affection, outliving the time when the old home circle was dissolved by the establishment of new homes, and suggestive of that time when, in faith, an eternal home will be theirs, to ever live in the hereafter, as now, a united and happy family. May they have many such meetings, and their number long remain unbroken.

Got His Pension.

Hi. Cupp informs us than another veteran gets his pension under Cleveland's administration. Clint Ely of Butler, has been trying for some years to get his pension and arrears, and has just now succeeded. Monday he showed Mr. Cupp a check for it, a good round sum, $3,400. And he gets a good rate, $16, from this on. How will republicans account for his getting his dues under a democratic administration if democrats are opposed to pensions?

A Delightful Day.

Notwithstanding the clouds over head the Ladies' Literary Club of this city drove to Angola on Friday of last week, there to be most pleasantly entertained by Dr. Lida Leasure and Mrs. Alzem Ralston Scott. Twenty-one of the club members partook of a dainty and beautifully served luncheon with Mrs. Scott. Her home was prettily decorated with autumn leaves, palms and chrysanthemums. After luncheon an afternoon spent in delightful conversation and a pleasant walk, was followed by an elaborate six o'clock dinner served at the home of Dr. Leasure. The dinner which was served in six courses and consisted of all the delicacies of the season, was presided over by the hostess with her accustomed dignity and charm. A few moments spent in saying good night were followed by the return home with many pleasant recollections of a delightful day.

A PHYSICIAN, illustrating the evil custom of talking to an invalid about his pains, says that once he requested a mother to mark a stroke upon a paper each time that she asked a sick daughter how she was. HERE is the manner in which the Cleveland Leader heads its news: "With an Ax. He Slaughters His Wife. After Committing the Murder He Cuts His Own Throat. A Hot-Tempered Man." If the felon had killed off a few of his children and assassinated a neighbor or two the Leader would have doubtless referred to him by the real harsh term of "a petulant person."

THE race horse still leads the bicycle a few seconds, but an Italian mechanic has invented a wheel which he says will carry a man a mile and a half a minute with one-twentieth of the exertion now required in cycling. A Rhode Island inventor claims to have an aluminum wheel weighing three pounds which will go at double the speed of the present machines. It is in order, apparently, to say that the bicycle is in its infancy.

IT is funny how they do it, but they do! Here is what one boy did for himself: "A boy 15 years of age, living in London, spent his Easter holiday in Blackheath, where he ate thirty oranges, a whole cocoanut, and a mince pie. In the evening he had several cups of tea, and later some cake and lemonade. Before the dawn of the following day he was dead, and the Coroner's Jury brought in a verdict of death from natural causes."

NEVER was impertinence more offensive than that of Eli Perkins, who takes occasion in a New York paper, that ought to have had better taste, to print stories about the late Prof. Swing and try to palm them off as witty or characteristic. Perkins ascribes to Prof. Swing a spurious scientific jargon of which the lamented preacher was constitutionally incapable and guiltless. He also makes it appear that a man noted for gentleness and kindness was capable of cowardly jokes at the cost of ignorance. The fellow Perkins is a blot upon American journalism and defiles whatever he touches.

GREAT danger awaits the American shippers of apples to the English markets. Our packing is often too carelessly done, and the cheap trick of "facing" the barrels with good stock and filling in the rest with inferior stuff will not work. Uncle John Bull buys apples if they please him after dumping a few barrels on the floor to see how they size up with the brands. If he is disappointed he swaggers away and very appropriately damns the "blawsted Hamericans" for so transparent a fraud. Pack good fruit honestly or don't attempt to send it to the English market—or any other market for that matter.

A VERY charming illustration of the triumps of Christian civilization is given in this item from the London Times: "Maxim guns were used aboard our ironclads during the recent naval maneuvers. A correspondent describes their use as follows: The storm of bullets from them cut the water like rain on the advancing edge of a tropical squall. With one of these guns a gunner of very moderate skill can at 500 yards range cut down an ordinary park paling almost as well as a workman can do the business on the spot with an ax, and it is, therefore, not astonishing that most of the targets recently, small as they are, quickly disappeared." The untutored savages of South Africa have no Maxim guns. It was reserved for a Christain nation to perfect this admirable weapon of murder, the acquaintance of which the savages made about the time Christian missionaries came among them to preach the gospel of peace on earth, good will to men.

WHEN a man works all week and then goes to the window and gets his salary in an envelope he is reasonably happy over the possession of the money, but there is no particular elation, as he had known all week that it was coming. When a man picks up a quarter from the sidewalk he experiences a thrill of surprised pleasure, but there is an immediate revulsion and a sense of quiet. Probably that coin was dropped by some poor widow who had gone out to do a day's shopping. When a man meets a friend and the friend says, "By the way, here's that five you loaned me that day at the World's Fair," the soul exults for a moment. But there comes a deep suspicion that next time he will ask for ten and then lose his memory. But when a man in the act of overhauling last winter's garments to see if they will "do" for another season carelessly slips his hand into a trousers pocket and draws out a half-dollar then is there a surging emotion of unalloyed bliss. To all intents and purposes that half dollar had been expended, wasted, dissipated many months before. It had been omitted from all small calculations of daily expenses. Through all the summer months it had lain there in the dark closet planning this pleasant surprise for October. How large and valuable it seems as it is brought into the light! The owner wouldn't trade that half-dollar for any $2 bill that he ever earned. He tells every one the story, and seems to take credit for much cleverness in making the discovery. Furthermore, he continues the search through all of last year's clothes, and every time his fingers touch a soft wad of lining or a crumpled play bill he catches his breath and wonders if this can be a roll of paper money, hidden there by the same good fairy that brought back to him his beloved half-dollar. That half-dollar incident puts him in such a good humor and increases his assets to such an extent that he feels justified in spending at least $1.50 by way of celebration.

Children's Eyes.

Of all the bodily organs which need watchful care in the period of their development, the eye stands pre-eminent. Yet no organ is so often neglected or abused.

It is no calumny upon the modern school-room, or upon the methods which are employed there, to say that they are in a large measure responsible for the many evidences which we meet of an impaired and defective eyesight among the young, and a premature breaking down of that function with adults.

The close confinement of the student undermines his general health, and so renders every organ liable to succumb under any special strain. And to this the extra labor required of all the organs of the head, the close application of the eyes to the page before them, and the fact that it is often necessary to continue the studies with the aid of artificial light, and it is plain that school life is full of dangers to the eyesight of the young child.

And if this is not enough to convince us, we may be reminded of the unhygienic surroundings of even the best-appointed schoolhouse, the prevalence of contagious disease of the eye, and the great liability of infection through the various pernicious habits of the average school child.

No young child should be permitted to pursue his studies to a protracted degree by lamplight. We may turn his eyes from the light, and even provide shades for them, and still they will be affected. It is never necessary, before one's organs are well developed, to endeavor to prolong the twelve or fifteen hours of daylight.

Instruction to the child as to the manner in which he should hold his book while reading or writing is also essential. This includes not only the proper distance of the page from the face, but the attitude of the body as a whole. It is easy to establish at an early period a predisposition to nearsightedness, and even displacement of the eyeball itself.

In fact, every source of irritation should be avoided, even, is necessary, to a complete withdrawal of the child from his studies.—Youth's Companion.

The Students Won.

In the days of the First Empire, the Paris students formed a cabal against the dramatist Lemercier. One first night the disturbance was reported to Napoleon, who gave orders for a second representation. The students still hissed. The Emperor got excited. "Play it again," he said, "and I will go and see it." This time all seemed well. In the third act it struck His Majesty to look out of his box, and the quiet was explained. Every head in the audience was covered with an immense night-cap drawn over the ears, and each head was nodding. Napoleon burst out laughing. The piece was not played again.

WHERE BLAME RESTS.

REPUBLICAN LAWS CAUSED THE HARD TIMES.

The Harrison Administration Squandered the Cleveland Surplus and Juggled Accounts to Conceal the Empty Treasury—The New Tariff Has Brought Prosperity.

What Harrison Knows.

Ex-President Harrison recently delivered a speech in Mr. Wilson's district in which he said: "If you have felt the effects of the depression, if you think more of these effects and prefer not to lead the country through the slough of despondency, show it by defeating Wilson."

McKinley and Sherman also declared that the hard times, which began a year and a half ago, were due to Democratic misrule and "fear of free trade."

Never before did "statesmen" so misrepresent facts, debase themselves and insult the intelligence of an enlightened nation. Harrison knows only too well what a difficult task he had to keep his empty treasury from collapsing before it was turned over to Cleveland.

He knows, as do all the others, that his Secretary of the Treasury had to transfer accounts and to juggle the books to conceal from the public, if possible, the exhausted surplus of $100,000,000 which Cleveland turned over to Harrison in 1889.

He knew that the Sherman silver coinage act of 1890 was rapidly draining the country of gold and that it must result in a panic. He knows, as does Sherman, who voted to abolish his own silver legislation, that the panic was precipitated by the fear of capitalists that gold would go to a premium and that if we continued to coin $4,000,000 of silver a month we would soon drop to a silver basis.

He knows that tariff reform was too far away to have had any material effect in starting the depression. He may not know the cause of the periodical panics that affect not only this country but the whole world, about every ten years, but he does know, or ought to know, that the fear of "free trade" was not, at any time, one of the principal causes of the prolonged depression.

He knows that his secretary intended and prepared to issue bonds to replenish the treasury.

Uncertainty as to what duties would be levied undoubtedly aggravated and perhaps prolonged the depression. Reed has too much common sense to declare that a tariff bill that brought prosperity with it caused a panic a year before it was born. He said, in his New York speech of Oct. 13: "Nobody can charge this (depression) fairly to the terms of the tariff which now exists, any more than they can to the tariff which used to exist. What caused this disaster everybody knows who has any business sense. It was the utter uncertainty, the appalling doubt as to what would happen to us."

Reed is much too rough on the Democrats, but is not so demagogical as McKinley and Harrison. How little Senator Allison believes of this talk is evident from the fact that he has recently adopted the tariff for revenue plank of the Democratic platform.

Perhaps the responsibility for hard times has never been more clearly fixed than by Thos. G. Sherman, in his speech in Paterson, N. J., early in 1893. He said:

What laws are in force?
Republican laws.
Who, when the panic began, held nine-tenths of the offices through which those laws are administered?
Republicans.
Who hold most of the offices to-day?
Republicans.
Who passed the tariff now in existence?
Republicans.
Who passed all the tariff laws that have been in existence for the last thirty years?
Republicans.
Is there more or less protection to American industries in force to-day than there was in the first year of Harrison's administration, when, we are told, everything was so prosperous?
More by about one-third to one-half.
What have the Republicans been telling us, for the last thirty years, was the cause of American prosperity?
The Morrill tariff.
Is there more or less protection given by the tariff to-day than was given by the great and wonderful Morrill tariff?
More by 100 per cent all around; more on woolen goods by 200 per cent; more on iron and steel by 80 per cent; more on silk by 60 per cent; more on flax manufactures by 100 per cent.

To which, after quoting, Congressman McKeighan added:

"Everything stands to-day just as Harrison and McKinley left it, with every American industry protected and everybody in this country guaranteed tremendous prosperity as the result of taxing each other. Yet, here we are."

Prosperity that withers as soon as tariff reduction is suggested cannot be very substantial. Yet that is what McKinley would have us believe his protection prosperity did, although it was rooted in thirty years of protection soil. All sensible and unprejudiced persons know that riotous speculation, fostered by continued high protection, which gave special privileges to corporations and trusts, had made the country ripe for a panic. They know that the countries that suffered most when the panic came were the highly protected countries of Australia, the United States, and France.

Reed Recommends Rest.

Ex-Speaker Reed's significant failure in his campaign speeches to indorse the demand of the McKinleyites for a restoration of the high tariff, has prepared the public for his interview at Ann Arbor recently, in which he declared that "it would not necessarily follow that the return of the Republican party to power in 1896 would mean the re-enactment of the McKinley law," and that he did not think the party would make that an issue, as conditions had changed materially in the last few years, and there was room for many modifications. Mr. Reed went a step further, and admitted that the rates in the McKinley law were marked up higher than he expected when he appointed the Committee on Ways and Means. In taking this position the ex-Speaker only anticipates the mass of his party. It is clear enough to any careful observer that there never was any popular demand for so extreme a measure as McKinley framed, and that no party could now do a more unpopular thing than to pledge itself to a restoration of a policy which the people rejected so emphatically in 1890 and again in 1892. McKinley, of course, tries desperately hard to hold on to the old issue, for it is all he has to offer as a candidate for the next Presidential nomination of his party, but he will find himself more and more lonesome all the while.—New York Post.

A Business View.

The statement of President Roberts of the Pennsylvania Railroad that the country has entered upon an era of renewed prosperity can safely be accepted as an offset to the calamity campaign orators that we are hearing from nowadays. President Roberts is at the head of the greatest railway corporation in the world, and views the situation from a business rather than from a political standpoint. Like other men of his class, he is not oversanguine, and does not look for a boom, but he sees every reason to expect a wholesome return of the country to full prosperity and activity in all departments. He speaks with authority.—Boston Herald.

Tariff Umbrella Smashed.

Ex-President Harrison let the cat out of the bag the other day when he said to the workingmen at Brazil, Ind.:

"You were told that it would be a good thing to smash this tariff umbrella under which you and your employer had been walking together and sharing the benefits of its protection. You were told that you were getting too much of the drip, but you found when you had smashed the umbrella that in the very nature of things he had an accumulation and had provided himself with a rubber coat, while you were in your shirt sleeves."

That is only a part of the truth. Protection has provided castles and steam yachts as well as rubber coats for many employers, while it has left the employes penniless and hungry. Thirty years of protection began with all prosperous and wealth well distributed. It ends with panic and depression and with 5,000 millionaires and 5,000,000 tramps and paupers. In 1860 nine-tenths of the people owned nine-tenths of the wealth; in 1890 9 per cent. of the people owned 84 per cent. of the wealth.

That protection umbrella has been a great thing for those under it, but the workingmen have, as ex-President Harrison says, been getting only the drip. The smashing of the tariff umbrella has revealed a horrible state of affairs under it. The laborers of this country have grown poor holding that umbrella over their employers. Now, that it is being smashed, all will fare alike again.

American Goods Abroad.

An incident happened on the Sixth Avenue Elevated Road yesterday morning which well illustrates one of the peculiarities of the system of selling goods cheaper for export than for home use. A prominent railroad man was in conversation with another gentleman, and near them sat an exporter of various kinds of merchandise. The railroad man was showing his friend a beautiful pocket knife which he had purchased in London.

"There," he remarked, "I wonder why our manufacturers here cannot make such fine knives as this. What do you suppose I paid for it?"

"I don't know what such a knife would cost in London," answered his friend; "but I know that here in New York that knife could not be bought for less than $3."

"I paid just five shillings and sixpence, or $1.37 in our money."

"Will you let me see the knife?" asked the exporter at this juncture.

Taking it he opened the blade and found it was stamped with the firm name of a well-known American manufacturer of cutlery, at which discovery the owner of the knife was naturally surprised and not a little chagrined, for, strange to say, he had not noticed the name of the manufacturer on the knife before, and his imputation that American manufacturers could not make as fine knives as those made in England had been rudely disproved.

The railroad man said he believed in protecting home industries.

"Yes," answered the exporter, "and I see you believe in patronizing them."—Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin.

Prosperous Pottery Mills.

The East Liverpool (Ohio) Crisis, an organ of the pottery trade—one of the many industries which were going to be ruined by tariff reform—gives this complacent picture of the ruin thus far wrought:

"The pottery trade in the West is now booming more than it has done at any time during the past three years. Not a man in the city need be idle who wants to work. Workmen for odd jobs were never so hard to find here. Not one but half a dozen works in this city are now running over time, and the talk of a shut-down, prevalent a few weeks since, has been silenced. The Chelsea, at New Cumberland, is experiencing the biggest boom in its history and is running out nine kilns of ware per week, which breaks the record for that plant."

And this is the state of affairs in a great typical industry in Governor McKinley's State. But has the Governor heard of it? No; the Governor has not heard of it. He is too far from home—only bad news travels far—and too busy spell-binding the rustlers on the frontier at the rate of twenty-two speeches a day.—Philadelphia Record.

Republican Cussedness.

The Republicans are to be congratulated upon securing a congenial lot of recruits down in Louisiana. The rich cane planters propose not only to transfer their allegiance to the Republican party but to wreak vengeance upon men who are not Democrats for herring and sugar only. The Louisiana Planter recently published a communication urging the people of Louisiana to boycott Harter's iron tonic and wild cherry bitters on the ground that they are made by Michael D. Harter, the well-known Democratic Congressman from Ohio, "a violent, persistent and bitter enemy of sugar." The writer of the communication also urges the people of the Pelican State not to buy rails rolled in the mills of Representative Tom L. Johnson, another distinguished Ohio Democrat, or drink whisky made in the State of Kentucky, because the people of that State keep Mr. Blackburn in the Senate. Those Louisiana planters have suddenly blossomed out into first-class Republicans in point both of intelligence and cussedness.—Chicago Herald.

Right Kind of Momentum.

The bill which passed, however, with all its defects and censurable features, contains, even by the admission of its severest critics, a most solid installment of tariff reform, and will do much toward lightening taxation and securing freer play and larger markets for American industries. But its chief value and importance, after all, lies in the fact that it marks a change in our tariff legislation and starts us well on the way toward genuine revenue taxes. Every law and every system has its momentum. Protection, left to itself, eventually culminates in prohibition, while the momentum of even an imperfectly framed revenue tariff is steadily toward the goal of commercial freedom.—Hon. Wm. L. Wilson, in North American Review.

Connecticut's Industries Booming.

A general revival of business is reported from Hartford, Conn. Almost all the works have largely increased their forces during the past few months, and have dropped the short time schedule which prevailed for nearly a year. A similar revival of manufacturing business in Meriden, Bridgeport, and other manufacturing cities in Connecticut is reported.

Fashions in Sticks and Canes.

"There are but few articles sold in the West End that are not subject to the fluctuations of fashion; and, although you might not suspect it, even the walking-stick trade is affected largely by the variations of its unwritten laws," declared a provider of those popular appendages and aids to progression to the writer, as they chatted at the door of his shop.

"Time gone by we did a rare line in malacca canes with silver tops or ivory handles; but now these are voted 'old-fashioned,' and plain sticks of hazel, cherry, ash, acacia, or vine, sometimes mounted, but oftener quite unadorned, are 'all the go.'

"To many men one walking-stick is sufficient, but, luckily for us, there are others who delight in having a selection to choose from. Indeed, I have customers who use several in a single day.

"For informal morning strolls 'whanghees,' bamboos, or sticks of ordinary wood, hooked at the top so as to be conveniently carried over the arm, are popular; while for an afternoon saunter-ing, when ladie are likely to be encountered, more elegant specimens of our art are put into requisition.

"Many gentlemen who travel in foreign lands make a practice of cutting likely stems that they may chance upon, and bring to us to mold and trim into shape, and there are not a few regular collectors of walking-sticks.

"Highly artistic specimens of native carving as are many of the specimens brought in this manner together, they are often valued at quite prodigious sums, and when an historic association attaches to the article, of course the price goes still higher."

Beyond His Expectations.

When the first edition of Thomson's "Seasons" came out the poet sent a copy, handsomely bound, to Sir Gilbert Elliott, of Minto, afterward lord justice clerk, who had shown him great kindness.

Sir Gilbert showed the book, which was really a credit to the publisher, to his old gardener, who was a relation of Thomson's. The old man took it in his hands, turning it over and over, and gazing at it in evident admiration. Sir Gilbert asked:

"Well, David, what do you think of James Thomson now? There's a book that will make him famous all the world over, and immortalize his name."

David, looking first at Sir Gilbert and then at the book, replied proudly:

"In truth, sir, it is a grand book! I did na' think the lad had ingenuity enow to ha' done sic a neat piece of handicraft as that."

And without a glance inside the handsome covers, the gardener handed the book back to his employer, repeating his surprise that his poor poetical relative should have attained to such praiseworthy work.

Behanzin to Become a Catholic.

Behanzin, the ex-King of Dahomey, is about to embrace the Roman Catholic faith. When M. Carnot was assassinated the ex-King ordered a mass for the repose of his soul. He was greatly affected by the murder of the late President, and he has been in a low state of health ever since.

The Best Document.

"The fact that a dollar under the Wilson bill will buy of the necessaries of life about as much as $1.10 or $1.25 would buy under the McKinley bill is a campaign document by itself," observes the Boston Herald (Ind.).

IN regard to the mammoth remains of Canada and Alaska, Dr. G. M. Dawson notes that in the northwestern part of the continent they are abundant in, if not confined to, the limits of a great unglaciated area there, comprising nearly all Alaska and part of the adjacent Yukon district of Canada. No mastodon bones have been reported from this region.

THE NEWEST TABLE WARE.

Quaint and Pretty Designs Seen on Every Hand.

There is no more fascinating study to the mind feminine than dainty trifles for the dining table. The shops at present are full of quaint and pretty designs for all manner of things that one can use in silver, china and glass. For instance, who could imagine anything more appropriate for cherries and strawberries than a silver fluted dish, with a bunch of cherries, all in silver, for a handle for the one, and a strawberry bowl fashioned like a leaf for the other.

Very attractive also is the grape stand hung with silver fruit, and for peaches and other fruit a pyramid of shell shaped dishes. A silver nut dish rejoices in the quite Egyptian title of "Osiris." Louis XV. ware is still in high favor, as some of the new designs show. The vegetable dishes are rather odd in design, consisting of three partitions, drainer and hot water compartment. The entire dish and biscuit box are both very heavily chased.

One of the newest things out is the stand. It is in silver and is designed for butter, cheese and biscuit. Cheese and biscuit form one course at every well-regulated dinner table or course dinner. There are some ill-advised people who always want butter for their biscuit, and for these, I presume, was designed this dish, which would hardly be used, however, except at the family table. Could anything be sweeter than the silver pepper grinder with cut glass body, accompanied by a fluted mustard jug?

A GIANT BEARD.

Louis Goulon, a Frenchman, Wears One Eight Feet Long.

The owner of the enormous beard shown in the accompanying cut can say without dispute that he has the longest beard in the world, without parallel anywhere. He is a Frenchman named Louis Goulon, and is now 68 years old. His birthplace is Vandenesse in the Department Nievre. He was compelled to shave at the age of 12, but his beard grew so profusely and rapidly that frequent shaving became a nuisance, and Goulon decided to allow his beard to grow at will. At the age of 14 the boy had a beard which reached to his chest. When he was 20 it had grown three feet long, and it now measures eight feet and is as white as snow.

This extraordinary appendage has always given him a great deal of trouble, for it has to be carried wound around his neck, which does well enough in winter, but is rather disagreeable in the summer. Mr. Goulon has never consented to exhibit his beard, although almost every manager of a dime museum has tried to persuade him to travel around the world with him.

CAPTAIN JACK CRAWFORD.

America's Poet Scout Creates a Sensation in England.

The great interest which preceded the coming of Captain Jack Crawford, the "Poet Scout," to England, seems to attend nearly all his movements there. It is only a short time since he arrived, and in the intervals of his hunt for evidence of the heirship of himself and those he represents to the great Wallace estate he has already drawn much attention to his own personality, as a lecturer and a hero of adventure. He has done this in so modest a way, however, that no one would venture to accuse him of employing mere showman's devices for self-glorification. He appeared in the city hall in Londonderry and gave an entertainment under the patronage of the bishop of Derry, in behalf of the Londonderry ear and eye hospital. The audience was large, and the dean of Derry introduced him. He gave his famous dramatic description of the typical adventurous life of the far west, illustrated by some very clever shooting with an American repeating rifle and revolver, and in the buckskin costume of the plains. He told how he had ridden two horses to death in carrying dispatches after a battle through the Indian country for an American newspaper, whose reward was the most liberal ever paid for such service. Almost his entire time is devoted to the business of the heirs of the Wallace estate, and he says that he has gathered some very valuable evidence concerning it in Dublin and the North of Ireland.

JACK CRAWFORD.

HOUSE WITH A QUEER HISTORY.

Cost a Million to Build and Has Never Yet Had an Occupant.

Up on Fifth avenue, New York, facing Central Park, in one of the most desirable residence regions of the city, stands a very large and elegant house, which for five years has been of no earthly use to any living being except the tax gatherer and the solitary watchman to whom it furnishes employment, says the Sun. It is an architectural failure on a magnificent scale. From the outside it looks like a house that would meet the requirments of the most exacting. It is a four-story, brownstone building, with a frontage of 52 feet on Fifth avenue, and a side extent of 150 feet on Seventy-Fourth street, on the southeast corner of which it stands. The stone of the house is all cut cross grain, instead of straight, as brown stone is usually cut, and will not split or crumble. It was quarried to order for the building. A fine front entrance, large windows of the finest plate glass and many exterior ornamentations make the building one of the most noticeable houses on the avenue. There is probably no other house in the city so strongly built, as the walls are from three to three and a half feet thick throughout. Inside the house is completed, except the frescoing. Baths and closets are all complete, sideboards are built in, the canvas for mural decorations stands in rolls on the floor, all the fine work in paneling, staircases and mosaic floors is there, and all that is required to make the house perfectly habitable is the furnishing. There is a cellar and a subcellar, fitted out in the most approved way, and even an artesian well to furnish power for an organ, for which a niche has been built. The organ, the biggest and finest chamber organ ever made in this country, is in a storage warehouse, where it has been for years. All this elegance belongs to Wilhelm Pickhardt, a wealthy dealer in dyes at 98 Liberty street, who for the past five years, that is, since the building of the house, has lived abroad, traveling about Europe from capital to capital.

Mr. Pickhardt bought the land on which his house stands about twelve years ago, and in 1883 he had plans submitted to him for the building of a house. His architect, who belonged to a prominent firm, had carte blanche as regards expense, being instructed to have everything of the very best. There were certain things, however, in regard to the building, that Mr. Pickhardt insisted upon, despite the objections urged by the architect. When the house was well advanced the owner went to the architect one day and said to him:

"There are some things about the arrangement of the house that I don't like," at the same time mentioning some of them. "I want them changed."

"But, Mr. Pickhardt," remonstrated the architect aghast, "those changes can't be made without building the house over again. I have followed your instructions closely."

"If the changes can't be made without rebuilding then I'll pull down the house and have it built over," returned the owner. "I'm going to have this done as I want it if it takes every cent I've got."

The result of the matter was that the architect withdrew, and Mr. Pickhardt replaced him with a German named Knaut, whom he brought over from Germany for the work. Knaut drew up elaborate plans, undid much of the work that his predecessor had done, returned to Germany for a vacation and died.

Two years have already been consumed, and a third went by before an architect was found to suit Mr. Pickhardt. Then the building was resumed, but it proceeded slowly because of the frequent and important alterations insisted on by the owner. Finally, in 1889, when the architect's work was completed and all that remained to be done was the frescoing and some minor decorations, Mr. Pickhardt experienced another revulsion of feeling.

"The house isn't as I want it at all," he declared. "It isn't what I intend it should be, and I'll never live in it—never! I've thrown away $1,000,000 on it."

He went abroad and has spent the major part of his time since then in Europe. The house has never been occupied, for the owner would not rent it, and the price demanded for it is so high that it has found no purchaser. Large taxes are paid on it, and a watchman is hired to guard it. It seems likely that it will remain as it is until the owner's death.

PROPOSED TO QUEEN VICTORIA.

An Aboriginal Monarch Who Was Surprised at Being Refused.

Not long ago a brief telegram from New Zealand announced that Tawhaio II., the great Maori king, had died of influenza. He was a genius in his way and was a fitting ruler for the fierce race of aborigines who gave England more trouble than the natives of any other savage country she has conquered. When finally subjugated Tawhaio became learned in the ways of the world and expressed a desire to see the world. This wish was encouraged by the British authorities, who put a vessel at his disposal, and with half a dozen subordinate chiefs he sailed for England. The king and his followers made the journey in safety, and, of course, saw the queen. King Tawhaio was struck with the appearance of the great queen and made a proposition of marriage to her. Her exact answer is not known, but of course Victoria refused the hand and heart of the chief despite the tattooed adornment on his face and body and the alluring bait he held out in the shape of a long and all-conquering kingly lineage. King Tawhaio was not hurt at the refusal of the queen, but he thought she was foolish not to accept, and on his return to his native land often spoke of the matter, and in these references considered Victoria the loser by her declination.

WOMEN NOT CONTENT.

EVER DEMANDING CHANGES IN CURRENT STYLES.

Uneasy Ones Now Trying to Induce Frivolous Folk to Wear Hats with Big Crowns—Many Protest Against Burying Their Heads in a Millinery Store.

Chapter on Hats.

New York correspondence:

SOME women are never contented and are forever demanding changes in current styles which are in the nature of reforms. These uneasy ones are now trying to induce frivolous folk to wear hats big enough in the crown to fit their heads. As if in these were not at present a sufficiently great number of genuinely stylish shapes to suit everyone! As if a woman could afford to extinguish a good half of her head in a hat that sets down about the top of her ears as a man's does. What difference does it make if a man does not have to wear hat-pins, and if when it blows he can just pull his hat down hard? Do women want to secure their headwear in that way? It seems not, for the indications are that women are to wear their crown smaller than ever, just as they wear their belts smaller.

Hats are to be made to stay on by thrusting the long pin into the pug upon which the back brim rests, or by stabbing right through the heart of the little knob of hair that stands up inside the crown. When it blows they go indoors if they are afraid their hair will come off; otherwise they try to look as if they liked having their scalps pulled. The present fashionable hat for street wear represents a big spread of canvas to the breeze, too, and urged by the wind will beg hard for release.

SLEEVES OF THE SEASON.

Large as are many of these beplumed models, they are never conspicuous. The strictly well-dressed matron never wears an unduly prominent hat. Her head covering is so much a part of her costume that it attracts very little attention. If for that reason the observant eye notes it, it will be found to be beautiful in careful detail, but as a whole it presents no startling feature. It is commonplace as contrasted with the picturesque affairs that look so stunning on the young belle. The latter's license is more comprehensive.

TRIMMED WITH NODDING PLUMES.

Imitations of straw braid are numerous and are often very cunningly made, but they are generally of pleasant effect. The brim of the dainty hat beside the initial is edged with an odd strand of this sort, composed of mottled silk braid. The hat is round and of shirred black tulle. It is garnished with a large bow of cerise velvet ribbon from which rises an aigrette of vari-colored beads. In back the trimming is completed by a large rosette with a wired wing of black Chantilly lace on either side. It is surprising how much lace is used on the hats of the late autumn and winter, and the shades chosen for it are most often cream or white. But the street hat—with many women that means the best hat—abounds in plumes. A sight of this second picture will illustrate the abundance of these feathers, and handsome headwear they make, too. This one, like most of its sort, is of black felt, trimmed with black plumes and accorded a dash of color here and there so that the whole may seem somber. Its wide rolling brim is turned up in back, the crown is encircled by a draped biased fold of velvet, in the new shade called bluet, and a rosette of the same is put on either side of the front. Rising from the center is a group of three ostrich tips, two more lie on the brim, and a sixth falls toward the back, allowing the tip to droop over. A bluet velvet rosette fastens the brim in back. The relieving color might as well be cerise, a new magenta shade, but it should be used more sparingly, particularly about the face. It is a handsome shade and nothing is more fashionable at present, but it is, in a way, so aggressively brilliant, that a little of it is enough for a large hat.

Every hat should have a dash of bright color; a knot of cherry velvet, a tiny grass-green paroquette or a flash of emerald buck e, and the more demure in color the rest of the hat is the more dashy the bit must be. This rule is tastefully followed in the third model shown, which is a round hat of black novelty felt, with a crown of jet encircled by a black lace frill that falls on the brim. The latter is waved and turned up in back with a cerise chiffon rosette, a second being placed in front. The garniture is completed by several ostrich tips.

In no one item of headgear is change more apparent than in the one simple sailor. It is now trimmed with a band of bronze ribbon covered with little red rose buds, each one perfect in its natural bronze calix and scarlet tip. These buds are so short of stem that they literally bristle from the band, making a unique effect of color. One full-blown, deep red rose is set in rosette fashion on one side, and from it a whirl of rose leaves rises, being set on the top of one of the new jet-springs. Do you know about the new jet-springs? They are of spiral shape like furniture springs, and are made of a single flat and thickly jetted wire, and up the center of the spring run strands of jetted feathers. These strands glisten and push their points between the rounds of the springs. Among them is thrust, from the open top of the spring, the stem of the flower to be uplifted, or the sustaining wire of the lace or feather whirl. Whirl and spring are usually sold together, and the former can be pulled out and the spring used again in another hat, or on the same hat with another top inserted for variety.

A PICTURESQUE TYPE.

False height is given to hats by banding them with a stiff collar that rises far above the real height of the crown. It towers so far that the gentleman who has given his seat to a pretty girl and stands in the car, with the privilege of seeing the top of said pretty girl's hat, feels as if he were looking down a well and holds on tightly to the strap. On theater bonnets wired wings often rise far above tiny and filmy foundations, as in the artist's next offering. This wee affair is of pale cream lace, two ruffles covering the crown and a narrower lace giving the brim. The garniture consists of big, soft rosettes of black chiffon, and wired wings of lace and chiffon.

Women seem to be always asking for a simple hat that will do for any occasion and need no trimming, yet directly they are permitted such a hat by fashion, they proceed to trim it and make it anything but a plain and all-round article. That was the way with the sailor. It was not long before it was variegated with bows and feathers, and now the natty English walking hat has gone the same way. The under side of its rolling brim is spread smoothly over heavy lace, wide moire is banded about the crown, drawn through a buckle that covers the front and spreads at either side into a lot of fat loops, and at the left side rises a waterspout of feathery aigrettes. Of course, the effect is good, but where is the simple hat? It seems to be disappearing entirely in all sorts of modifications. Sometimes the brim is very wide and rolled only at the very edges of the side, pointing much at the front and back, giving a regular gondola effect. In another shape it is very wide and rolled close to the crown, the edge almost disappearing. Again, one side rolls small and close, and the other has one big, loose roll. On the small roll perches a bird, a bow, or a coach and four, any little thing of the kind that the wearer fancies and that will help lift the low side to the height of the high side. Two that have passed beyond recognition are the sailor and the English walking hats. They have grown much more sightly, it is true, but in the process their original purpose has been entirely lost to sight.

Fatal Diamond Ring.

A ring studded with diamonds and pearls hangs suspended to a silken cord around the neck of a statue in one of the most frequented parks in Madrid. It is safer there than in one of the strongest rooms in the Bank of England. Thousands of people pass it every day and admire its beauty, but the greatest thief in Spain hesitates even to touch it. It is believed to deal out death to whom it belongs. The ring was especially made for the late Alfonso XII, who gave it to his cousin Mercedes on the day of their bethrothal. Upon her death it passed into the possession of the King's grandmother, Queen Christina. Three months afterward she died. The King passed on the deadly band of gold to his sister, who died a month after she had received it. The King then placed the jewel in his own casket of precious relics, and lived less than a year after he had done it.—Boston Herald.

The Egg Question in Hotels.

The egg question in a hotel that laughs at expense in the endeavor to secure for its guests what is more than palatable has the closest attention; for the most part, the middleman operates here, though the eggs do not lie on his hands long. Among many hotels I have failed to find one that uses any but warranted eggs, and even these are broken by skilled assistants, separately, before they are used by a cook or baker; for one faithless egg can wreck gallons of soup or cake galore. In the Holland House this incidental duty means the breaking of $3,500 worth of eggs every month; never less than 120 dozen are used per day. The Marlborough Hotel averages 200 dozen every day. During the World's Fair the Palmer House reached the average of 600 dozen.—Chautauquan.

Battlefields for Sale Cheap.

"You may imagine my feelings when, standing on the tumulus which covers the remains of the 200 Greeks who fell at Marathon, I was approached by a farmer who offered me the plain upon which that immortal battle was fought for 16,000 piastres, or about £900 sterling. To think that the dust of Miltiades should be worth no more than that! It could scarcely have fetched less if sold by weight." Thus wrote Lord Byron in 1812 to his friend, Mr. John Cam Hobhouse, afterwards Lord Broughton, who responded by writing from Rome that he had himself been offered the battlefield on which Cannæ was fought for less than half the sum at which the Plain of Marathon was appraised to the noble author of "Childe Harold."—London Telegraph.

MOTHERS

and those about to become mothers, should know that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription robs childbirth of its torture, terrors and dangers to both mother and child, by aiding Nature in preparing the system for parturition. Thereby "labor" and also the period of confinement are greatly shortened. It also promotes an abundant secretion of nourishment for the child. During pregnancy, it prevents "morning sickness" and those distressing nervous symptoms from which so many suffer.

Well Dressed Men and Women.

"There is not the slightest doubt in my mind," remarked a cosmopolitan recently, "that the men and women of New York are the best groomed people in the country. There are in the western cities a few exceptionally well-dressed men and women, but even among the wealthiest class they are not numerous. I am sorry to say that the leaders of men's fashions west of Buffalo set a pace that is not accompanied by good taste, while too many of the women paint not wisely but too much. New York is old enough to be conservative."—New York World.

A Temple of Health

Where vigor, good digestion, appetite, and sound repose minister to physical comfort is the bodily structure which, however much its foundations have been sapped by ill-health, has been restored—rebuilt, as it were—by the great renovating tonic, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Nothing infuses strength into a debilitated frame like this saving medicine, which, in the vigor and regularity it imparts to the system, endows it with the surest defense against disease, and the best guaranty of a long life and hale old age. Worn-out men of business, tired mechanics, overworked mill hands, miners broken down by hardship and exposure to malaria, mariners and tourists all declare that it is the best safeguard against the influences of fatigue, bodily or mental, and of climate and temperature. Incomparable for bilious, rheumatic, kidney, and nervous troubles.

Church Discipline in Maine.

The old custom of using the tithing rod on unruly church members should be revived. A tithing man seems needed in a certain church in Woolwich to relieve the pastor of the duty of chastising the unruly members of his flock. On a certain Sabbath eve the bad boys in the back row were more than usually irritating to the pastor. He is but human; he bounded from the pulpit, seized the astonished youth by the coat collar, administered his punishment, then calmly retraced his steps and picked up the threads of his discourse.—Bath Enterprise.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

THROUGH CENTRAL WISCONSIN.

BY W. H. MCINTOSH.

Riding in one of Askew's easy conveyances down the Avenue to the Junction, we began our journey by a two and a half hours' wait for the vestibule train from Baltimore.

When it did come, however, the ease of motion, the rapidity of progress, and the continued run, stopping rarely, made the trip to Chicago brief and enjoyable. To add to the pleasures of the trip, agreeable people were met, coming from visits far east, going to homes away in the west, and fresh from associations that had not been seen for years. One does meet such sociable, cultivated people on travels; and yet, one can wrap himself in his own reflections, see little, speak less and leave only a blank between points of departure and arrival.

Beyond Albion, seeing her stately courthouse towering from the vantage ground of its fine site, past the lakes of Syracuse, their smooth surface gleaming in the sunlight, through the midst of South Chicago, coming away to the west ward over prairie level as a floor, with horizon bounded by outlying villages, across the Chicago River, the train rolls with clanging bell and resounding wheels within the great depot, and at rest, disgorges its travelers to go their several ways of business and pleasure in the Queen City.

Away towards the Lake front was heard the sound of music, were seen dense masses of people and, thither going, there passed the parade of the Catholic temperance societies, men and women, boys and girls, uniforms, arms, banners and flags, horsemen and floats, cornet, martial and Highland music, and when all had gone, the good-natured, patient throng crowding the walks made their way by the readiest course towards their homes.

Time sped and with evening, the roar of heavy travel gradually diminished, and with new dress, novel features and fresh activity, another phase of city life came into view. Lights innumerable, of various hues, artistically arranged, presented a beautiful and brilliant appearance. Along Clark and State and intersecting streets, for long distances, horse and cable cars come and go in quick succession, conveying throngs seeking pleasure, places of business or distant homes.

The number of saloons is astonishing, and the restaurants, first floors and basements, are as abundant as their bills of fare are diversified. Theaters of music, pictures and voices solicit patronage, auctioneers ply their calling in room or street, and barber shops enjoy a constant run of customers.

Far up in the tops of lofty buildings, the dimly illuminated few of many windows, magnify their dizzy height and inspire dull wonder as to the business that could impel people to venture their lives so far above the earth's surface.

Growing late, the din of travel dies, the cars cease to run, silence ensues, and the depot becoming deserted, sounds indistinct by day become loudly audible. With sonorous voice, the train is called, and fast hurrying through the gate, the passengers seek and settle themselves within the cars.

Hours pass and, beyond Burlington and Waukesha we move on to Oshkosh, where the coming dawn revealed the slumbering city, with houses far extending along the track, church spires and a stream flowing into Winnebago Lake that was seen in the distance extending thirty or more miles northward.

North of Neenah, beyond Oshkosh, the landscape extends wide and far and the fields, level as a floor, showed good cultivation and everyone seemed engaged in the raising of potatoes. Some were digging with plow or hoe. Some fields were untouched, some had tumuli where the crop was buried, and there were potatoes in wagons and in cars, and everybody seemed to think potatoes the crop to raise. "What do your people cultivate?" was asked of a farmer who came into the car. "Petaties," was the reply, and "petaties" seemed the only product of the farm.

Fruit trees were rare, houses became isolated and lonesome, and piles of logs for shipment, large quantities of hemlock bark and vast wastes scarce attract attention. Extensive swamps, dense with the growth of evergreen trees, lined the track and gradually the scenery changing became more somber and solitary.

People well dressed entered and occupied seats, then went, and others took their places, as we passed Steven's Point, Marshfield, and at the last reached Abbotsford, where the main line of the Wisconsin Central curves away westward to St. Paul, while a branch strikes boldly northward towards Superior.

We had seen houses standing lone and solitary without apparent highways near them, cultivated tracts were confined to patches of a few acres and oxen were seen at the plow as in the earlier days far southward. No one showed himself at these houses, and no smoke from the chimneys, conveyed an impression of a long ago desertion.

Among the crowd gathered at the station were two hunters, each with two double-barrelled guns, proud of the exploit of a captured fawn and a slaughtered doe, and the vestiges of former fires, dead, topless trunks of trees and savage wastes, seemed to repel closer scrutiny and awakened the thoughts of what motives could have lured men to seek homes in such uninviting and unpromising regions. With easy grade, well ballasted track, straight as an arrow, the train hurried onward as if speeding to pass as quickly as possible through these ruins of once forests.

Running many miles through this dreary region, with no farms to furnish products and require trade, no villages with factories or other manufactories than the sawmills that converted logs to boards and shingles, one cannot but wonder that any capitalist would venture his money in building this road and none could feel surprise that the line did not pay and was forced into the hands of the receiver. The contrast between the immense and costly depot at Chicago and the vast areas of devastated, untillable and unproductive lands through which the road extends, is so great that only a Coxey plan of government ownership could suffice to continue a service that must depend for support upon the surplus of more fertile and more favored regions.

There were hotels at every stopping place and opportunities for lunch were frequent. People congregated at the stations to gaze quietly at the train and its occupants and a peaceful quiet in keeping with the silence, solitude and fire-swept surroundings was unbroken save by the noisy flight of the departing train.

We came at length to the boundary of the recent great forest fires that all know involved the destruction not only of timber, but of mills, lumber and towns. The terrible experiences of Hinckley, its loss of life, the suffering and the heroism are familiar, but the fate of residents of lesser towns is only locally known. Once within the sweep of the conflagration, and gradually its destructive and marvelous character impresses the observer. No pen nor tongue can convey a realization of the tremendous forces evolved by the combustion of miles upon miles of pine trees that ever fed the fury of flames till, independent of immediate fuel, an immense body of fire, preceded, accompanied and followed by a dense volume of smoke, sped with a wide front with the speed of a race-horse over cultivated fields to inflame in one and the same moment, new forest, lumber camps, mills, logs and villages.

So swift was the movement of the fire, so rapid was the consumption of what it fed upon, that ordinary obstacles were as nothing and a telegram that a town was in danger, had scarcely become known, than another following announced the place wiped out, and its inhabitants, old and young, deep in water, into which they were forced to dip clothing to cover their heads to give some protection from the glowing heat and blinding smoke. So hot was the fire that the water smoked as the steam rose from its surface, and clothing, unless frequently immersed, became ignited.

Great stretches of charred black timber, burned over and not all consumed, drew attention to the phenomena of this mighty conflagration. Where the trees had been small and scattered, black stumps remained from which bark, limb and top had been burned away, and where heavy timber had stood, the earth was powdered with ashes, seemed in places itself to have been consumed, while the long, large black trunks of prostrated trees lay in rows conforming to the direction of the winds that had been evolved by the intense heat of so great a combustion.

It was to be seen that the flame had been so much hotter near the earth that most of the trees had been fire felled as though by ax or beaver, leaving the stumps and the tree trunks to mark this wonderful, savage and thorough clearing.

The town of Phillips, completely wiped out, was now rebuilt, its new, unpainted pine board houses lined the ridge a considerable distance, but all about were the charred fragments of trees, the vestiges of mills, and in the still water, hundreds of logs waiting the reconstruction of some sawmill to wind up the lumbering business in the pinery that had no longer more than an historical existence.

In their distress and dire misfortune, the people had found instant friendship and generous aid; but after the fire, had come pestilence, and even now of the small population that cling to a locality that offers little inducement to remain and that has no resource for support, full sixty are down with the dreaded typhoid fever.

For hours, the swift train speeding along its narrow track discloses ever in new ground, the same scenes of desolation and worse the solitude, till I grew weary of looking from the car window upon the awful work of the elements of destruction and welcomed arrival within the valley of the Bad River, where for some space the configuration of land and scarcity of timber had proved a check to the flames.

Here a new, strange feature was revealed in the presence of many hunting parties actively engaged in exterminating the deer and bear that had sought this asylum only to find in man as merciless a foe as the fire had been. We were once more carried back to the pioneer days when venison was cheap and the carcasses of buck and doe lay in heaps before the doors of meat shops, when venison was a common item in a bill of fare and a drug in the market. Even women caught the infectious ardor of the chase and, with their children and hampers of provision, took post at a runway and in a still hunt vied successfully with men in securing the spoils of the forests.

Winding like a serpent down the wild and beautiful valley, the Bad River was again and again crossed by our train and presented on either hand a diversified scenery. Wild, rocky ridges rose almost precipitous for many feet, bulging with immense stones of inconceivable weight, firmly lodged, and around which evergreen trees grew, their roots firmly locked in the slowly enlarging crevices.

Here were tents, and miners were busy excavating the red soil, seeking probably in this fastness, a vein of the celebrated iron ore that brought this region into sudden prominence, enriched the workers in mines and revealed a supply apparently beyond an estimate.

Again and again, the rock-imbedded stream went and came again, sometimes with placid water, sometimes in the force of rapids and small, noisy waterfalls, while at hand towered conical hills and stretched away ranges that presented a scenery delightful to the eye and restful to any who desired a sense of far removal from business scenes or busy occupation.

The train ran slow and yet slower and we were crossing High Bridge, 98 feet above the river that ran through a deep, beautiful canon of amphitheatric form covered with varied foliage from base to topmost height.

Later, there were seen close to the track, a half-dozen row of enormous Esquimaux domes, built of brick and whitewashed, smoking with the confined combustion of filled inferiors and marking the humble industry of the charcoal burner. These domes were seen at intervals far southward and constitute, with the gathering of bark, an economic occupation that gathers up somewhat of the wastes of the pineries.

Again appeared the devastating inroads of the immense fires, and through the heavier forests its destructive course was marked by scorched and withered thickets, black logs and pointed stumps as far as the eye could see, and knowing that scores of miles behind and before the same ravages had extended, the same scenery was presented.

No wonder the citizens of Ashland, watching amidst the gloom and obscurity of a vast cloud of smoke, trembled for the security of their homes and with all available boats and shipping stood ready to fly to the protection of an island in the lake, in the almost presence of a foe that in a few days had bereaved them of the one great element of prosperity—the lumber interest.

Again the train's motion was retarded until scarcely moving, it entered upon a second and yet more lofty bridge that, for a distance of 1,800 feet and at a height of 116, spanned the canon of the river and brought us to the vicinity of Ashland and the lake.

Houses and people, field and stock unseen for many miles, impressed one with the question how such a city as Ashland with its 12,000 inhabitants could be supported, but on its pine block paved streets and sidewalks, no disquieting thoughts seem intruded.

In its handsome buildings, electric railway, numerous and excellent hotels; its springs stocked with large trout, its huge iron furnace and its iron ore shipments, the lake city reveals a population in touch with the heart of the nation, although so far removed as to be in touch only by the daily trains and the navigation from the lake.

I saw at the furnace, the filling of the huge cylinder with different ores and limestone blended in proportions, the laying out of the sows and pigs, the filling of the runways and the daring skill of the workmen performing their dangerous duty during the semi-daily cast of pig iron.

Prices of fruits, clothing and of living compared favorably with those far southward, and but for the intense cold of winter, a residence in Ashland might be not only endurable, but desirable.

In the season, tourists in large numbers frequent this city and daily boats make their trips to Washburn and Bayfield and return. The view from the city up the waters of Chequamegom Bay is restful and pleasant. For a long distance along the shore, lumber and ore docks are located, and buildings upon the banks, suggest extravagant ideas of the city's extent.

Going down some sixty steps to a pier, we went aboard a small steamboat known as the "Fashion" and seated in chairs upon the fore part of the upper deck, enjoyed the novel experience of a ride upon the water. The water was smooth, cold and it was said without fish. In the far horizon, a dim outline of land was seen and we were told that it was one of the group of Apostle Islands, occupied at the point by civilized Indians. At Washburn was a huge boat standing 30 feet from the water to the top of the bow and her load of 1,000 tons of coal was discharged in 16 hours by means of several car scoops run on wire ropes and operated by small engines that run with much noise and incredible speed.

We wandered away along the bank of the bay and enjoyed the strangeness and loneliness of the place, find wintergreen leaves and stocky wild strawberries of which specimens were soon secured. The coast line extending irregularly, as waves had worn away the rich red rock, was some 25 feet from the water level and all along were seen cases where the rock had been undermined and logs and debris, washed ashore and slowly, very slowly, approaching a condition of decay. Empty cartridge shells and embers of fires, seeming out of place, showed where hunters had whiled their time, enjoying the prospect and breathing in the bracing atmosphere, and cows, each with its bell, quietly grazed among the pine, cedar, raspberry vines and undergrowth.

Too soon the signal whistle of the steamboat recalled us to the dock and we were again moving swiftly back towards the city of Ashland. The captain was communicative and courteous. His boat, it was claimed, was the one that, during a storm at Chicago went out to the crib and rescued the imperiled men from certain death.

The lady hostess of the Commercial House, Mrs. McBean, is a charming woman, regarding her guests as visitors and successfully endeavors to make their stay a pleasant memory. The fare is varied, appetizing and excellent, the waiters are prompt and attentive, the beds are clean in all that the word indicates, the rates are low, and the house is richly entitled to the most favorable mention to the notice of the wearied traveler.

All too soon, the time came for a return and the bay, the city, the bridges, the fire area, the reconstructed villages, were forgotten in the return to the land of oak timber, level, tilled fields, towns and cities, till passing Abbotsford, we came upon the main line, past Marshfield (the home of Major Upham, the republican candidate for governor of Wisconsin) Steven's Point, a pioneer pinery station, the state hospital buildings, and halt at Oshkosh, a fine city, the home of Senator Philetus Sawyer for a brief space, then at Fond-du-lac, Schleisingerville and Rugby Junction, and soon reached the way station of Honey Creek, where we stopped off to visit the old homestead, renew old-time friendships and rest from the fatigue consequent upon lack of sleep and unused extent of travel.

HOW TO VOTE.

Points That Every Voter Should Bear In Mind.

1. Get your ballots of the polling clerk in the election room. No other ballots are permitted to be used.

2. Stamp within the large square containing the rooster and nowhere else.

The stamp must be placed within or on the square or the ballot is void and cannot be counted. Do not stamp elsewhere on the ticket if you stamp within the square at the head of the ticket.

3. Do not mutilate your ballot, or mark it either by scratching a name off or writing one on, or in any other way, except by stamping on the square as before mentioned. Otherwise the ballot will not be counted.

4. After stamping your ballots first see that the ink from the stamp is thoroughly dried; then fold them separately so that the face of them cannot be seen and so that the initial letters of the names of the polling clerks on the backs thereof can be seen. Then hand your ballots to the inspector, the stamp to the polling clerk and leave the room.

5. If you are physically unable to stamp your ballots, or cannot read English, so inform the polling clerks and tell them how you wish to vote and they will stamp your ballots for you. But the voter and clerks must not permit any other person to hear or see how the ballots are stamped.

6. If you should accidentally or by mistake deface, mutilate or spoil your ballot return it to the poll clerks and get a new one.

NOTHING TO OFFER.

Republicans Mean Only to Tear Down, Not to Build Up.

One of the prize puzzles of this campaign is what the Republicans intend to do in the event of a Republican victory. Benjamin Harrison doesn't say. McKinley is trotting around the country declaring that it means the restoration of the law which bears his name—a law which closed down every factory in the land, lowered the price of all farm products and increased the cost of every manufactured article used by civilized man. John Sherman lifts his weather-beaten voice to state that Republican victory means a restoration of the single gold standard of money, with the resultant transfer of control of the treasury to the bondholders. Senator Cullom is prancing up and down the prairies of Illinois loudly vociferating the pledge that the Republicans will let the Democratic tariff law stand. Naturally enough, people are puzzled to know what the future has in store for them in the event of Republican success. Some of them have been asking the Indianapolis Journal, the organ of the Indiana Republicans and first fiddle of the Harrison boomlet, what they may expect. And here is The Journal's answer:

"As there is no possibility of the Republican party gaining control of all three branches of the government before March 4, 1897, it is not necessary to formulate any plan of remedial legislation at present."

Was ever such a confession made before? Here is the Republican organ and the special spokesman of Harrison admitting that the party has not any fixed principles, any definite plan. It has nothing to offer, no hope to hold out. Its object is to be merely a destroyer, not a builder. It is purely anarchistic, only desiring to wipe out the existing order of things, leaving chaos behind and trusting to chance to bring some order out of this chaos later on. It is the theory of the materialist. It promises death for a certainty and gives no hope of life hereafter.

WORTH FIGHTING FOR.

The Meaning of Another Democratic Victory This Year.

Everything Democracy Has Fought For In a Generation.

It Means the Continuance of the Reforms So Well Begun—Democracy's Record the Best Ever Made by Any Political Party In Any Land—To Permit a Republican Victory Now Is to Abandon a Field Already Won.

Before next Tuesday every Democrat in Indiana should give careful consideration to what Democratic victory or Democratic defeat on that day means. If he does so he will go to the polls and vote the straight Democratic ticket. Not only that, but he will use his utmost endeavors that every Democratic vote shall be cast.

And such a victory is well worth fighting for. Not because it would be gratifying to party pride, but because it would redound to the glory of the republic and to the good of the people.

For 30 years, until 1893, the Democrats had had no opportunity to fulfill their oft repeated pledges to redeem the nation from the infamous rule to which it had been subjected by the Republican party, ever holding enough power in the government to prevent the overthrow of its nefarious legislation. But in 1893 there came a change and the Democrats secured control of every branch of the government. They found it honeycombed with Republican corruption, bankrupted by Republican extravagance and bound hand and foot by the bonds of vicious legislation to the chariot wheels of the favored classes—the bondholders, the trusts, the monopolies and the protected manufacturers.

The conditions were appalling, and such as would have made the hearts of men less brave than those Democracy had chosen to carry out the work of reform shrink from their alloted task.

But those brave men never faltered, never hesitated, never knew weariness, and impartial history will bear out the statement that, in the same length of time, no party ever carried out so many reforms or abolished so many abuses as has the Democratic party in the last 14 months. Wrongs which had been entrenched behind 30 years of Republican legislation have been righted. False principles of finance and taxation, under which the country had been steadily drifting toward the commercial disaster which finally came in 1893, were set aside and the nation once more started on the high road to genuine and permanent prosperity. The departments at Washington have been cleared of hundreds of useless clerks and hangers on. The federal election law, designed to suppress popular government, has been wiped off the statute books. The Sherman law, which made of silver a mere commodity of trade, has been repealed. Greenbacks have been made taxable, thus cutting off one of the most unrighteous means of tax dodging ever employed by the wealth of the land to evade its share of the expenses of the government. Appropriations have been reduced more than $60,000,000 per year, and the public revenues have once more been brought up to the requirements of the government.

And last, but not least, the first great step has been taken in the reform of the tariff, a step which has vastly reduced the cost of living to every man, woman and child in the United States, has dealt a death blow to the trusts, monopolies and combines, and started the wheels, so long idle under the malign effect of Republican legislation, in every factory in the land.

Was there ever before such a grand redemption of party pledges? Did any party in any land ever meet more adverse conditions? And did ever any party more grandly and more nobly proceed to the work laid out for it?

But the great work is only just begun. Much yet remains unaccomplished.

CURIOSITIES.

Queer Ideas and Claims Brought to the Surface During the Campaign.

THE strangest campaign we remember, is the one that has just closed. It has been unusually full of wild rumors, wilder claims and the wildest kind of expectations. We write this on Monday, the day before the election, so it can be seen the result of the voting has nothing to do with this "piece." Among the most noticeable features of the campaign, comes in the "campaign lie," or what is supposed to be a campaign lie or is claimed, but not supposed to be such. "Penfield cannot build a court-house," came out last week, in every republican paper in both counties. Well, who said he could? We doubt if anyone started such a story. At least it was not heard of till these papers started it. We have no idea anyone would believe such a thing. Yet it was good enough to keep voters from thinking anything else till election was over. People can fight about only one thing at a time. And while the court house question was discussed, the Deeters trial might possibly be overlooked.

Another curiosity was the populist plan of getting every body excited and discouraged. One man came into the COURIER office all broke up and downhearted. He said the county was going to wreck as fast as it could, for in spite of the great amounts of taxes we have paid the county debt, and state debt were getting bigger every day. We had heard for some time that the populists were propagating this easily disproved falsehood, and we had our friend sit down and talk it over, for he insisted he was right, as to the national debt, the state, county and village debts. So we called his attention to the sworn statements of government officers, who showed that the national debt, once about 3,000 millions, is now about half that. For we have continually paid some of it about every month till the McKinley law left us without sufficient revenue, and then for a time we fell behind. But recently we paid several millions on it again, and we will likely go on paying some of it right along. Then as to the state debt, we showed him it was not increasing, but we had paid about half a million within two years, and would pay a large sum the present month, and that with the increasing state revenues, we would keep it going down. Then we called his attention to the county debt and the sworn statement of the auditor, that during the year ending May 31, we had paid off nearly $12,000 of that. Then we mentioned our city debt, and showed him we had reduced that nearly $1,000 in the past year. Then he looked brighter. And we could not help think how foolish and wicked it is to stuff honest men with such agitating lies, merely to get their votes on such a false basis.

"The two old parties are swapping" in Stafford township, cries out the Times of last week. And to this ridiculous statement is added another: "It will be well to remember that the pominees of the people's party were selected by the people." All who attended their convention will smile to hear this.

Another campaign business was the "sample copies" of republican papers, sent out, so each and every editor said, "merely to ask you to become a subscriber." Funny, that over several counties, they all thought of the same thing at the same time and told it in the same words.

Then there was the abiding faith each candidate had in the promises he received. Grube is reported as saying that he could give away half the old party votes promised to him, and still have enough to elect him. He will be one of quite a number who will not "realize" on their investment.

The township ticket for Jackson was improperly printed and left our friend Samuel Tarney, the democratic candidate for justice, in a queer box. The democratics nominated but one man for justice, Mr. Tarney. The other tickets each had two. So there should have been a blank space below Mr. Tarney's name and in line with the second set of candidates for justice on the other tickets. But instead of this, the democratic constables were slid up to Mr. Tarney, and the first constable was on a line with the second justice. If a man voted the straight democratic ticket, it would be all right. But if after so voting, and having the rooster stamped, he should take a notion to vote for some friend on another ticket for his second justice, his vote would be thrown out. Then if, again, he should not stamp the rooster, but should stamp every democratic name, and then go on and stamp one more justice on another ticket, he might be giving a vote for Mr. Tarney's competitor. And so on, with several difficult questions. But we believe, after the tickets were delivered corrected ones were obtained and used.

BOLD HIGHWAYMEN.

FOOTPADS HOLD UP DR. BOWEN AND TAKE HIS WATCH AND MONEY,

ONLY those who have been met with a club or a shotgun in the hands of a footpad can imagine the surprise and disgust of Dr. M. M. Bowen, of Corunna, when he was suddenly brought face to face with a shotgun and a revolver last Friday afternoon. He was coming home from the west and when at a lonely point where the road ran through woods on both sides, there suddenly appeared in front of him, two strangers who called on him to halt and got out of the buggy and give up his valuables. He was looking down into two gun barrels, and the prospect was not assuring. He concluded to get out of the buggy. The next thing was to give up his money. He had told them he had no money, but they did not believe it. But when handed over his pocketbook and they could find but 40 cents in it, they were surprised. One said to the other, "Jack, what shall we do with this measly amount of filthy lucre?" "Give it back to him," said the other robber. 'We don't want to take his last cent." So they gave it back to him, but seeing he carried a good watch they took that and let him go. It appears that Mr. McInturf, a farmer not far away, had his house entered by burglars a few days before and he was now on the lookout for them. On Saturday, Mr. McInturf discovered there were some men apparently hiding in the woods near by, and at once sent word up to Corunna, for help to surround them. Every man who could go armed himself, and those who had no arms went to Milo Thomas' hardware store, and he gave them the guns he had on sale and also furnished cartridges. The "troops" started out and surrounded the woods where the men were hid and captured them. The shotgun was captured also, but the revolver was probably thrown away. They were brought back to Corunna and locked up in a vacant room, and later in the day were brought to Auburn. On Monday Judge Powers had them brought into court, and both plead guilty. Each was fined $1, disfranchised for seven years in the penitentiary. It was a quick job and a good one. They heard the sentence with some dismay, for they evidently thought it no great thing to take a man's watch in highway robber style. They said they were sorry they had plead guilty and believed they could have got off with a shorter sentence if they had stood trial. Their names are Ed. Lambert and John H. Martin. The Doctor got back his watch when they were captured, and they had given back his 40 cents at the time. So he is all right except the scare. If he had had a big sum of money, he would have lost it. Who knows but hard times may be a sort of blessing, after all. The citizens of Corunna are to be congratulated on their spirit.

Obituary.

Henry H. Hoisington was born in Genesee county, N. Y., Nov. 20, 1826, died at his residence in Auburn, Ind., Oct. 27, 1894, age 67 years, 11 months and 7 days.

The deceased, at the age of twenty years, settled in Wyandott county, Ohio, where he was united in marriage to Malinda Hart, Oct. 14, 1849, who survives him. He learned the carpenter trade, and followed it as an occupation for a number of years.

In the summer of 1863, during the John Morgan raid in Ohio and Indiana, he tendered his services to his state, enlisting in the state militia, and in May, 1864, he entered the United States service as a volunteer in Co. "D," 144th regiment, O. V. I. He was immediately assigned to duty in Maryland and Virginia, but was soon stricken down with typhoid fever, sent to the hospital, when he was subsequently discharged on account of disability.

He came to DeKalb county in February, 1865, and settled on the St. Joe river between Newville and the present site of St Joe, where he followed farming until the summer of 1882, when he moved to Auburn, where he has since resided.

His wife, two daughters and two sons survive him.

CHILDREN MURDERED

AN AWFUL CRIME IN PAULDING COUNTY, OHIO.

Two Men Arrested on Suspicion—London Anarchists Using Dynamite—China Anxious for Peace—Steamboats Collide at Marine City, Mich.—Double Tragedy at Cleveland.

OHIO HORROR.

A Boy and Girl Killed and Their Bodies Mutilated.

A horrible double murder has taken place in Paulding County, Ohio, the victims being the son and daughter of Samuel Good, a prosperous farmer, living two miles from Paulding. They were aged 7 and 5 years, respectfully. The children left home for a neighbor's house Sunday afternoon, but not returning at dark searching parties started out. The little bodies were found in a brush heap at daylight. The boy's throat was cut from ear to ear. The girl was decapitated and disemboweled, the weapon being an axe. An attempt had been made to burn the brush heap, but it was too wet.

The theory is that the little girl was outraged and the double murder was committed to hide the crime. The nature of the tragedy is so outre in its character, reminding all of the dread Whitechapel murders, that intense feeling has been engendered, and everybody seems thirsty for the blood of the foul fiend who could be guilty of such bestial crime.

Sheriff Staley arrived upon the scene and arrested Charles Hart, aged 19 years, a boy who resides near the Good home on suspicion. Hart is an illiterate boy, and by some considered insane. His arrest was due to his strange actions at the time the bodies were found. Leo Cain, a negro 21 years old, who had been a companion of Hart, was also arrested and placed in jail. They were afterward taken to Van Wert to prevent a lynching.

China Wants to Quit.

The London Daily News has information that China is suing for peace—in fact has instructed her envoys in Europe to submit to the powers the terms she is willing to offer. It is a formal renewal or repetition, on a larger scale of the overtures made to the British Government a month ago. The News expresses again its approval of Lord Roseberry's effort for joint intervenance and speaks regretfully of the reluctance of the powers to see the matter in the same light.

"No European Government," it says, "can desire to see this disastrous conflict prolonged. Even the United States, despite the Monroe doctrine, must be concerned for the regularity and security of their trade with Japan. Sooner or later—and better sooner than later—there must be an international settlement. It will be difficult to contend that interference will be premature now."

Dynamite Outrage in London.

London special: A bomb was exploded at midnight in front of No. 1 Tilney street, corner of Park Lane, West London. Reginal Brett, son of Lord Esher, lives in the house at this number. The door was shattered and the windows were blown to powder. The windows for a dozen numbers up the street were smashed, plaster loosened from the ceilings, and the occupants fled panic-stricken to the streets. Nobody was wounded.

The neighborhood is a fashionable one. At No. 5 is the house of Justice Hawkins, who sentenced the Walsall anarchists, and more recently condemned Francis Polti and Guiseppo Farnaro, alias Emile Leanot. It is surmised that the bomb was set by anarchists who took Brett's house for that of Justice Hawkins'.

Steamboats Collide.

The steamer Iron King, owned by J. W. Miller of Detroit, iron ore laden, bound down, and the S. C. Baldwin of Toledo, Ohio, owned by S. C. Maclaren, lumber laden, also bound down, collided at Marine City, Mich. They were both close to the shore and the Baldwin was rounded to. The force of the shock, when the two boats struck, was so great that the Iron King was knocked on the shore. The Baldwin's crew was rescued by some people in small boats, and the Baldwin is in the middle of the river and is sinking gradually.

American Colony Excited.

City of Mexico special: Considerable commotion has been created among the Americans here by the arrest of John Horley, former proprietor of the Topochico Hotel. The cause has not yet developed, but it is stated that the arrest is on an old charge in Illinois. Another sensation was the arrest of Dr. S. J. Curry, said to be from Rome, Ga., ostensibly for his connection with a recent street row between two Americans, but it is generally understood that this is only a pretext to hold him for further advices from his old home.

Killed His Wife Then Himself.

Humphrey Johnson, a well-to-do farmer of Collinwood, Ohio, a suburb of Cleveland, shot and killed his wife, thirty years his junior, and then suicided by the same means. He was somewhat penurious and she was liberal in spending money. Their quarrels were frequent and ended in a tragedy.

Poisoned Water.

Mrs. Jas. Donnally of Evergreen, O., died, and her three sisters and father, Joseph Dolittle, are not expected to live from the effects of drinking poisoned rain water. The roof of their house had been repainted with white lead.

Ran Down by the Fire Chief.

Eddie, the 11-year-old son of Benjamin Windsor of Muncie, Ind, was run down by Fire Chief Shepp's wagon, and he will die from the injuries received.

A Sad Accident.

As the result of carelessness in handling a small pocket eraser at the Fourteenth Regiment Armory, Brooklyn, N. Y., one brother met his death at the hands of another. The victim was Robert Dillman, 26 years of age, and the brother is Frederick Dillman, 31 years of age. Robert had asked to see the eraser, whereupon his brother made a playful lunge at him with the blade. Robert, losing his balances fell forward, receiving the eraser point in his heart. Frederick was arrested. The Judge, while expressing sympathy for the prisoner, regretted that under the circumstances he could not accept bail and remanded him to jail. The mother of the men is so prostrated with grief that her doctor fears she will not survive the shock.

WRECK OF THE WAIRAPA.

One Hundred and Eleven Persons Drowned.

Sydney (N. S. W.) special: Further particulars of the wreck of the steamer Wairapa, on Barrier Island, have been received here. The vessel struck on the rocks at midnight. The sea was very rough and the night very dark. All of the passengers were in bed. As soon as the ship struck, the life belts were served out to the passengers, among whom although fully aware of their danger, there was no panic. An attempt was made to launch the life boats, but the sea was so heavy that several of the boats were capsized and many persons were drowned. Some succeeded in getting ashore by means of lines sent to the main land and attached to rafts. Seas broke over the ship sweeping a great many passengers from the bridge, upon which they had crowded. Other passengers and some of the crew took refuge in the rigging. At daylight two men swam ashore with lines and the survivors were landed. Two passengers were drowned by losing their hold on the line. The survivors were very scantily clothed, and remained upon the rocks thirty hours subsisting upon oranges that had been washed ashore from the wreck, which was rapidly going to pieces. The unfortunates were finally discovered by Maori boats, and with their assistance they were rescued and made comfortable.

One account says Capt. Macintosh, with twenty-three of his crew and 111 passengers were drowned. Another account says that eighty-one passengers and forty of the crew were saved and landed at Auckland and that twenty of the crew and fifty-eight passengers were drowned.

THE BUSINESS WORLD.

A Review of the Week by R. G. Dun & Co.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says,

"The last week of October, with an exciting election near, cannot indicate much of the true condition of business. In some trades the season is too far advanced for great activity, and in others the supposed effects of the voting hinder operations. But it is satisfactory that the volume of production is well maintained and in one or two branches increased, that no monetary difficulties disturb, that breadstuffs are a little higher, and that no material decline appears during the week in manufactured products. The fact that any decline appears, with slackening in demand for some products, may perhaps be attributed to uncertainties, mainly political in origin, while every increase in the working force helps to make a basis for more business hereafter. At present the volume of business transacted is on the whole smaller than in 1892, though a presidential election was then close at hand. Payments through principal clearing houses for the week have been 12.8 per cent. less than last year and 34.4 per cent. less than in 1892, in both comparisons with decrease outside of New York as well as here.

"Failures are comparatively small, and the eastern and western about equal. During the past week failures have been 242 in the United States, against 358 last year, and 50 in Canada, against 28 last year."

AN EARTHQUAKE

Causes Death and Destruction in Central Mexico.

City of Mexico special: At 6:35 Sunday night the strongest earthquake shock ever felt in Mexico occurred here, lasting over five minutes. Many houses fell. The streets were full of fleeing people. Many were wounded and a number have died. The electric and other lights went out, leaving the city in darkness. All traffic was suspended. The streets were filled with screaming, crying, and praying people. The scene was indescribable. People in the theaters, which were all running at the time, were terribly frightened and panics were averted only by the police. At Orrin Theater "Juan Tenorio" was being given, and just at the graveyard scene the people, naturally supersitious, saw the statues move and screamed that the end of the world had come, and fled. People in trains were the most frightened of all. All telephonic connections were interrupted. The shocks were felt in the surrounding towns, but the details have not been received yet. It is reported that three persons were killed and ten wounded by the shock in this city so far as known.

One Dead, Two Dying.

An explosion of an engine at Grover Hill, Ohio, killed Harry Lectrone and so seriously injured his father and a Mr. Foltz that they will both die. The engine was connected with the grain elevator situated at that place and owned by Mr. Foltz. The young Lectrone was blown through a door—and his body was picked up about seventy-five feet away. It was crushed almost to a jelly. Foltz and the elder Lectrone were horribly mangled. Foltz came to Grover Hill from Troy, Ohio, about one year ago, and had been doing a thriving grain business. They are all well-known business men. The explosion was caused by an overpressure of steam.

Won on a Foul.

The fight between Jim Daly of Buffalo, and Jack Slavin of Australia, at Buffalo, N. Y., was given to Daly, on a foul in the seventh round. The decision was very unsatisfactory. Slavin was finely trained, while Daly was manifestly out of condition. Before the bout began the referee, after consulting both fighters, said it was agreed not to strike any blows in the breakaway after a clinch. This is contrary to Queensbury rules, under which the men were supposed to fight. In the seventh, when Slavin had the best of it, the referee gave the fight to Daly on an alleged foul committed while the men were breaking away after a clinch.

Not Intruders.

The inability of the Government to use troops to suppress the outlawry of the Cook gang in Indian Territory has been explained by Secretary Hoke Smith, who made applications to the Secretary of War for troops to be used in that work. The Secretary said: "The Secretary of War referred the application to the Attorney General who held that no authority existed to use troops for the purpose of arresting the Cook gang, unless it appeared that the members of the gang were intruders. The Indian Commissioner reported that the Cook outlaws are not intruders but all members of local tribes of Indians."

Trampled to Death by Hogs.

Mrs. Emma Shepherd, widow of the late Probate Judge of Walker County, Alabama, went out into her horse lot the other morning to feed her chickens. She did not return in time for breakfast and her daughter went to find her, when her eyes were met by the horrible spectacle of her mother's mangled body lying on the ground with a lot of Berkshire hogs feeding on her head. It is thought a vicious boar knocked her down, trying to get at the pan of meal in her hands, and he and the rest of the swine trampled her to death and munched at parts of her body on which the meal fell.

Five Fatally Crushed.

While 200 persons were standing on the wooden awning in front of the Mississippi store, Terrell, Texas, to see the street parade of Sells Brothers' circus, the awning fell. There were fully 500 persons underneath, and the blow of the falling awning struck them with fearful force, crushing, bruising, and badly wounding fifty of them. Those whom the physicians believe will die are: Miss Pearl Rushing, Mrs. Wordsworth, Mrs. Sutton, Supervisor at the North Texas Insane Asylum, Mrs. A. J. Anthony, Mrs. M. L. Roberts, an attendant at the asylum.

Public Debt Statement.

The monthly Treasury statement shows total receipts during October, $19,139,240; disbursements, $32,613,039, leaving a deficit for the month of $13,575,769, and for the four months of the present fiscal year of $14,335,859. Of the receipts for October $11,832,118 was from customs, $6,493,439 from internal revenue, and $683,683 from miscellaneous sources. Of the expenditures, $11,053,357 was for pensions. Public debt, October 31, less cash in the Treasury, $911,327,471; increase of debt for the month, $13,680,574.

Gold Dust Swindle.

Meyer J. Cohen, a tailor at 78 Prince street, Boston, has reported to the police the loss of $6,500 by a clever swindle. Cohen, through a friend, made a deal with a stranger to purchase forty pounds of alleged gold dust, alleged to have been secured in the Siberian mines, where the swindler said he had served sixteen years of a life sentence before he escaped. The value of the dust was said to be $10,000 but the swindler would take $6,500 for it. Cohen paid the money. The dust proved to be worthless.

Lottery Law Violators Arrested.

Col. D. P. Slattery, J. Brooks Johnson, and W. H. Stevenson have been arrested at St. Louis, on federal warrants charging violation of the lottery laws. They, with E. L. Welles and G. M. McDonald, were recently arrested at the instance of the postoffice authorities for conducting a business known as the Nevada Guarantee Investment Company, which was declared to be a lottery scheme. On a technicality the case was quashed. All of the accused are prominent and wealthy.

A Shower of Fish.

Elkhart (Ind.) special: During a heavy wind and rain storm at Sugar Grove, four miles east of this city, the ground was almost covered with small fish of a strange species that fell from the clouds. The place was visited by many of our people next morning, and specimens of the fish were brought here. The rural residents of Sugar Grove were greatly frightened by the phenomenon.

Defiance Sanitarium Burned.

The main building of the Aeon Springs Sanitarium in Defiance, Ohio, was badly damaged by fire. The fire gained such rapid headway that a number of persons in the bath-rooms had a narrow escape from suffocation. Loss, $2,000; insurance, $8,000.

Stock Yards for El Paso.

Extensive stock yards are to be established in the immediate future at El Paso, Texas, for distribution of Mexican cattle through the United States, shipments being made via the Mexican Central.

Mint Coinage.

Reports to the Director of the Mint show coinage for October as follows: Gold, $2,911,800; silver, $1,217,000, of which $600,000 was standard dollars; minor coin, $23,900. Total, $4,152,700.

Farm Hand Fatally Burned.

The barn of George Smith, at Wanatah, Ind., was destroyed by fire, together with the contents, including five horses. A farm hand was fatally burned in trying to save the horses.

All of 'Em Must.

Hereafter all street cars in Ohio must be vestibuled. The Supreme Court of that State has rendered a decision declaring the act making this provision to be constitutional.

Thanksgiving Proclamation.

President Cleveland has issued the annual proclamation for the observance of Thursday, Nov. 29th as a day of thanksgiving and prayer.

An Engine Explodes.

The engine at T. L. Linder's ginnery, two miles from Hartwell, Ga., exploded. James Wilson and Ed. Evans were killed.

Crushed by Cars.

William Matthews, clerk in the Panhandle yards at Logansport, Ind., was run over by cars and killed.

Faith Didn't Cure Him.

James Keizer, aged 66, died at Mishawaka, Ind., death resulting from "faith-cure" doctoring.

DEATH OF THE CZAR.

RULER OF ALL THE RUSSIAS HAS PASSED AWAY.

Crowned Heads Gather About the Bier of the Dead Emperor—End of Weeks of Anxiety—Something About the Career of the Great Ruler.

Russia Mourns Her Loss.

Death has claimed Alexander III., Czar of Russia. The end came peacefully at 3 o'clock Thursday afternoon. For weeks it has been known that his illness could have only a fatal ending, and the world is not unprepared to hear that the house of Romanoff has suffered bereavement. The news of the Czar's death, although expected every moment for the last two weeks, has caused confusion approaching consternation throughout Europe. Nobody believed that he could recover, but everybody thought he would before his death settle finally the question of the succession.

Russia mourns for the monarch that is no more, for he seems to have had the good will of his people. As to the mourning of the other sovereigns—well, that is a function like any other function. They are wondering with the rest of the world what the effect of the Czar's death will be in Europe. Possibly the Czarowitz won't succeed his father: more likely he will.

THE LATE CZAR OF RUSSIA.

The Czarowitz and Princess Alix, who is the granddaughter of Queen Victoria through one of the petty German princes, were to have been wedded this week. The marriage was desired by the Czar, and had he lived a few days longer it would have taken place. The Czarowitz is under German influence and his accession to the throne is assumed to forbode ill to France, which has had an enlightened friend in Alexander III.

Yet France will probably be calm, secure in the belief that there can be no lasting alliance between Russia on the one hand and Germany and England on the other. Whoever succeeds to the throne will be bound to follow out Czar Alexander III.'s policy of completing the trans-Siberian road to Vladivostok on the Pacific; of extending Russia's boundaries along the Chinese frontier, and of combating English advances in Afghanistan. So there is more probability of a collision in the future than of a close alliance between Russia and England. As to Germany, a friendly commercial treaty has already been entered into, but Russian statesmanship would never permit a permanent alliance which would cast Russia in the shade, as Austria and Italy are cast in the shadow by the triple alliance.

Reigned Thirteen Years.

It is thirteen years since Alexander II. was assassinated in the streets of St. Petersburg. His son and successor has lived a life of seclusion, surrounded by plotters and conspirators, perhaps wondering whether the bitter jest of the nihilists that he would be "permitted" to die in his bed would come true. Rumors of poison have marked his last illness, but whether that be true or not the shadows which have hung over him could not have been darker if open attempts had been made on his life. Of the late Emperor's policy at home the outside world is not competent to judge impartially. Yet the Jews have been persecuted with all the ardor of a "conscientious" sovereign, other sects have been driven out or silenced and religious persecution has flourished as it only can flourish under a bigoted autocrat. As to domestic policy, the Russian people are not natural allies and France knows it.

LIFE OF THE CZAR.

Always Regarded His Kingly Office as a Heavy Burden.

Alexander III., Emperor of all the Russias, who succeeded to the throne on the murder of his father by nihilist conspirators on March 13 (N. S.), 1881, was born March 10, 1845. For some time after his elevation to the throne he seldom appeared in public, but lived in the closest retirement at Gatchina, being in constant dread of the machinations of the secret societies of socialists. His coronation took place at Moscow, May 27, 1883. Alexander III. has never regarded his kingly office anything but a heavy burden, which personal inclination as well as common prudence imperatively urged him to shake off, and he richly deserves all the credit attaching to the mistaken sense of religious duty with which he struggled against the former and the manly courage with which he successfully opposed the latter. He married in 1866 Mary Feodorovna (formerly Mary Sophia Frederica Dagmar), daughter of Christian, the ninth King of Denmark and sister of the Princess of Wales and the King of Greece.

The principal concern of the czar has been to put down nihilism, to develop the military power of Russia, to organize her Asiatic and Caucasian provinces, and to keep a steady eye upon Constantinople. His reign has not been signalized by any reforms. Everything, on the contrary, has been maintained in Russia as it was at the time of his father's assassination in March, 1881. As regards foreign affairs, the reign of Alexander III. has hitherto been remarkable for the progress made by the Russian armies in Central Asia. Soon after the accession of the new sovereign it was rashly stated in the British Parliament that the young emperor had abandoned his Central Asia policy, when all he had done had been to recall the troops which had just taken Geok-Tepe, a strong post on the road to Merv.

The Czar's daily habits of life were those of a pope rather than of a secular monarch; his relaxations those of a prisoner rather than of a potentate. When residing at Gatchina he generally arose at 7 a. m., whereas few noblemen in the capital leave their beds much before midday. He usually took a quiet walk in the uninteresting, well-watched palace park, returned to early breakfast and engaged in severe manual labor as a preparation for the official work of the day. The latter consisted mainly in the reading and signing of enormous piles of edicts, ukases, bans and reports, all of which he conscientiously endeavored to understand. Lunch was always served at 1 o'clock, and consisted of three courses, including soup, in the preparation of which Russian cookery is far ahead of that of the rest of Europe. The Czar, in spite of all his occupations, was lonely and sighed for the quiet pleasures of a private life. He has oft n said: "I long to bury myself in the country and live on an estate; but I am called to a throne and must remain at the post of duty."

THE PRINCESS ALIX.

NICHOLAS, THE CZAROWITZ.
[Who now becomes Emperor of Russia.]

alone are fitted to say whether the Czar's reign has been a good one.

Of Alexander's foreign policy intelligent judgment can be formed, and there will be little disposition to withhold praise. He has unquestionably saved the peace of Europe when it was threatened. His friendship for France has been firm, yet discreet, and has operated as a check on that volatile nation. His attitude toward the triple alliance of Germany, Austria and Italy, while not pointedly antagonistic, has been clear and has shown that no combination of powers would be permitted to domineer continental Europe.

Alexander's death may hasten complications that have been arising. It may strengthen the German influence in Russia and help to isolate France, yet it is too soon to guess what its full effect will be. Germany and Russia

GAIN TWO VICTORIES.

JAPS WIN THE FIRST BATTLE FOUGHT ON CHINESE SOIL.

Mikado's Forces Prepare to Make a Telling Advance Before Cold Weather—Crop Conditions Reported from Twelve States—Death of Honore Mercier.

One Port Arthur Fort Falls.

Two important and significant Japanese victories are recorded by United States Minister Denby in a cable to the State Department at Washington. He says that the Chinese forces have been defeated at Chin Lien Cheng, and have retreated to Moukden, and that the Japanese have taken one of the Chinese forts at Port Arthur.

The scene of the first engagement is just across the Yalu river in Manchuria, and it marks the first real aggressive movement by the Japanese on Chinese soil, for it is believed that the preceding movements on the west side of the Yalu river by the Japanese have been in the nature of skirmishes to develop the real strength of the Chinese forces. This having been done, the Japanese are supposed to have formally entered upon the campaign with Moukden, the Manchurian capital, as the objective point. Unless they are fully prepared to make this a winter campaign, something heretofore unknown in Eastern warfare, they will be obliged to force the fighting and move with great speed, as but fifteen days remain before cold weather comes.

CHARLES DENBY.

In the neighborhood of Port Arthur, where the second Japanese success is reported, the winter climate is not so severe and operations may be maintained until much later in the season, particularly in view of the excellent base of supplies afforded for the Japanese troops in the presence of their own war vessels in the neighborhood, which will keep open free lines of communication with Corea and Japanese supply ports. It is believed that notwithstanding the taking of a Chinese fort by the Japanese at Port Arthur the place will be able to hold out for a long time. It is strongly fortified by land and sea, the plans being drawn by experienced European engineer officers and can offer a most formidable resistance. The experts in Washington believe that it cannot be reduced by the Japanese without the use of heavy siege artillery and so far as reported the Japanese are not supplied with this.

Inasmuch as the capture of Port Arthur would result in giving Japan control of the Gulf of Pe Chi Li and cut off the Chinese capital from communication with the sea, it is believed that the Japanese will make a most determined effort to capture the fortress. The belief that they are prepared to do this, even if it involves a long siege and a winter campaign, is borne out by the fact that the agents of the Japanese government in this country have quietly bought up a vast store of goat skins, and have practically cornered the market. As these skins are commonly used in China and Japan as a necessary part of the soldier's winter raiment, it is fair to presume that the Japanese are making ready for a winter campaign. Great interest is shown in the news at both Japanese and Chinese legations in Washington.

MERCIER IS NO MORE.

Ex-Premier of Quebec Yields After a Long Struggle for Life.

Ex-Premier Mercier died at Montreal Tuesday morning. He had been sick for many weeks, during which his death had been almost momentarily expected.

HONORE MERCIER.

Hope of recovery had been given up weeks ago. In fact, from the moment that he first felt seriously ill on the 14th of August last it had been felt that he lay on his death bed. Mr. Mercier had been suffering from a complication of diseases for years past, diabetes predominating. After his defeat at the general elections of March, 1892, his friends expressed the opinion that he had only six months to live, but by dint of adopting abstemious habits of living he managed to prolong his life.

Honore Mercier was born at St. Athancose, Que., in 1840. He was educated at the Jesuit College in Montreal and began the study of law. He was for a time editor of the Courier de St. Hyacinthe and was admitted to the bar in 1865. In 1883 Mercier was elected leader of the Quebec Liberals. The feeling aroused by the execution of Riel, the leader of the half-breed rebellion in the Northwest, gave him a great opportunity, and when the election of 1886 came on he organized a brilliant campaign, which led to the defeat of the Conservative Government. Mr. Mercier was summoned to form a Cabinet on Jan. 27, 1887. His administration was full of exciting incidents. As Premier he was a stanch champion of French-Canadians and their rights. One of the most important acts of his administration was the settlement of the Jesuit estate question, by which the Jesuits were paid a large sum of money, and which provoked a storm of indignation in the other provinces. He attracted considerable attention on account of his advocacy of Canadian independence.

CROP CONDITIONS.

Correspondents in Twelve States Give Information for Farmers.

The Farmers' Review has received reports from its correspondents in twelve States on the relative area of wheat being sown, on the condition of the corn crop at harvest, on condition of horses, with supply and prices, and the condition of pastures.

Wheat Seeding—In spite of the low prices of wheat the area seeded this fall will be about the same as last in most of the States reported, except, perhaps, Kansas and Nebraska. In all the States there are counties where less wheat will be sown than last year, but these counties are not numerous. They are offset by the counties that will sow more than the usual amount. In Western Nebraska and Kansas the weather and ground are yet too dry to encourage the sower, even if all had seed to sow, which some have not. In fact there seems a good prospect that the semi-arid regions will experience a dry fall, like the one last year, and in that case it would be little use to sow. Some of the counties in these States will put in very large areas compared with last year.

Corn—The corn crop at harvest is quite generally good in hardness and dryness, but in quantity is the same as indicated by former reports.

Horses—Horses are in generally good condition as to flesh and health. The supply of common and poor horses is very large. In spite of the incessant warnings of the agricultural press, farmers have continued to breed cheap mares to cheap stallions, and now have on their hands myriads of horses so poor in quality that no one wants them, and some cannot be given away. In some localities the prices are the lowest in forty years. Few good driving horses or roadsters are reported, but a great multitude of very ordinary farm work horses and scrubs. It seems doubtful if there will be a rise in prices under present conditions, and would indicate that farmers must adopt better methods in breeding.

Pastures—Under the influence of the fall rains the pastures have revived in most of the States. In some places they are the best ever known. This is proving a great blessing to the farmers with short hay and fodder crops. It will give a bountiful supply of food till the frost kills it and will send the cattle into winter in better condition than usual.

THE FOE OF VICE.

Rev. W. G. Clarke, the Parkhurst of the Windy City.

As New York looked upon Rev. Dr. Parkhurst two years ago, so the citizens of Chicago are now regarding Rev. W. G. Clarke, one of the eloquent young preachers of that city, who has set out on a mission of municipal reformation. Clarke's methods differ somewhat from those of the New York divine. After a careful survey of the field, he came to the conclusion that the gambling evil was the worst one which Chicagoans were contending with, and at once planned for the suppression of that vice. He organized the Civic Federation consisting of some of the best people of the Windy City. Then he enlisted the aid of constables and detectives and a concerted move was made upon the gambling houses. The effort to raid these establishments resulted in a number of fights, in which clubs and revolvers were used and several persons were injured, but at last the reverend gentleman and his posse succeeded in landing several scores of gamblers behind the bars. He has since secured their indictment. While gambling has not been entirely suppressed, the majority of the houses have been closed and there has been a large decrease in the profits of those which are running. Mr. Clark's next move will be against immoral houses. He is at present the most talked-about man in Chicago and a large number are advocating his elevation to the mayoralty at the next election.

The young man sat for fully half an hour, forlorn as a sparrow on a house-top, and very near the house-top, too, before any sign reached him that his possible mother-in-law—the sweet Swiss lady whom he felt he loved already, she was so like her daughter in some things—had recognized his existence or his eagerly claimed cousinship. At last the door opened.

Roderick sprang forward, then drew back painfully embarrassed. But Silence advanced with that gentle composure which nothing ever seemed to disturb, and with only the faintest added color to her cheek, as, English fashion, she extended her little, soft, thoroughly English-looking hand.

"Monsieur my cousin, mamma bids me welcome you to our country, and to say that she will receive you at 6 this evening, if you will do her the honor to come."

"Mademoiselle—Miss Jardine."

She lifted up her eyes, smiling. "Yes, I am that by right, and I like to be called so. 'Miss' reminds me that I belong a little to father's country."

"Then you are satisfied—your mother, too, is quite satisfied that I am really your cousin?" cried Roderick, eagerly.

"Not my cousin-german, of course," she answered, again drawing back a little, "but my cousin much removed—how do you say it in English?—tres-eloigne. That is, they had the same great-grandparents—these three who were educated together—Mr. Henry Jardine, who was the father of monsieur, my father, and the lady I was named after, Cousin Silence."

"Then you, too, have heard of Cousin Silence?" cried Roderick, feeling every minute the mysterious chains more tightly bound him.

"Certainly; my father loved her very much once—always I think—though it was years since he had written to her. Did you know her? Is she living yet?"

Then M. Reynier's note, which he had not yet seen, had explained nothing of the money affairs. Roderick felt glad. His welcome here was simply as "Monsieur mon cousin," nothing more.

"She is not living, but it is scarcely two months since she died."

"Ah, then I shall never see her, and I should have liked it so! Sometimes papa promised when I was older to take me to see his land, and Blackhall, and Miss Silence Jardine. Did you ever see her, sir?"

"Once—only once; the day my father died. I will tell you about it another time."

By a sudden instinct she seemed to catch his change of look, of tone. "Monsieur is very good," she said, gently, and questioned no more.

There was indeed no more to say, no possible excuse for him to remain; yet he lingered. Shy as a school-boy, he felt as if he could not get out of the room.

"This evening at 6, then," said Mlle. Jardine, with gentle dismissal, not again offering her hand, but merely bowing, as Roderick walked—he felt very much like crawling—out of the salon.

And yet it was a glorious humility, a noble shame, a sensation more delicious than anything he had ever believed the world could offer—the world, so empty to him of sympathy or love, that is, the uplooking love, since his dear father died. He almost felt as if his father knew it all; the reflex of what, perhaps, he too had known in his youth, the "love's young dream," which never comes twice. Happy those to whom it comes truly as love, and neither as passion nor folly; who can say to themselves, as Roderick did during the weary hours between 12 and 6, "Now, what shall I do for her? What would she like me to do? Something, I am sure, that would be good and right."

And with this intent, and perhaps another behind it, he sat down and did what he had forgotten to do day after day, ever since he had reached Neuchatel, he wrote a long letter home to his mother. A very affectionate, amusing, clever letter, just what he knew would please her, and which, as he also knew, she would show to every near and dear friend she had. Consequently, it was not exactly confidential; indeed, Roderick was not in the habit of writing confidential letters to anybody; but it was quite honest, so far as it went; gave a glowing description of the Alps at Berne, and an amusing one of the soirce at Professor Reynier's; painted graphically the quaint little town of Neuchatel, where he said he intended to stay a few days longer, and ended by stating briefly how he had found, among M. Reynier's guests, the object of his search: at least, all that were left to find, Archibald Jardine's widow and only surviving child. Whether the "child" was old or young, boy or girl, he omitted to particularize—a degree of reserve which surpassed even the ordinary reticence of Mr. Roderick Jardine.

When Roderick went out to post his letter, he seemed to walk on air. Every corner of the quaint old town looked picturesque; every passer-by interesting. For he had a vague hope—half fear, too—that under some umbrella he might find the gray gown, black felt hat, and blue eyes.

Just on the faintest chance of this, he went round by the shore of the lake, where a sudden wild wind had caused the waves to rise and roll in, almost like a sea tide, greatly to the distress of the poor Neuchatellerois. Various movables had been carried away, and a large market barrow was now tossing up and down upon actual breakers—while its luckless owner stood wringing her hands, and two or three men were wading in, trying to catch it with ropes.

Roderick went to help them; he never could forbear rushing to the rescue, in any case where his youthful strength was available. Presently he succeeded in saving the cart, and in wetting himself to the skin; which he hardly felt, for in wading ashore, the first sight he saw, fixed upon him, was those two earnest blue eyes!

She stood among the little crowd, her umbrella in one hand, a roll of music in the other; behind her the little white capped bonne stood, full of sympathy—as, indeed, everybody was—first, with the owner of the cart, and then with its salvors. She recognized him at once.

"Oh, how good is monsieur!" she exclaimed, warmly, in French. "See, madame" (turning to the poor market-woman), "your cart is safe, absolutely uninjured. How kind, how brave it was of these men, and of this English monsieur!"

And then monsieur, half deafened by the storm of thanks and applause from these warm Swiss hearts, was glad to beat a retreat, and find himself, he knew not how, walking along by the side of Mlle. Jardine, and talking, still in French, about how it all happened.

"I have never seen the lake rise so," she said. "All the town has been down here watching the waves, which are higher, they say, than has been seen for twenty years—never since the year I was born."

She was twenty, then; he had thought her younger.

"Mamma happened to be at Neuchatel, and remembers it well—that day—she had me in her arms, a little baby, and if papa had not held her fast the waves and the wind would have swept us away, both of us. How strange it seems!"

"Very strange; but life is very strange!" said the young man, as he drank in, full of dreamy delight, the soft tones, the sudden sweet uplifting of those lovely eyes. They rested on his soaked clothes.

"Monsieur ought to go at once to his hotel," she said, with a pretty decision. "Pardon, but I am so accustomed to look after people—to take care of them. I always take care of mamma, you know. She has been an invalid so long with her chest. I think it is that which has given me a morbid terror of damp and wet. Au revoir till six!"

And with a brief, sweet remorselessness she bowed and passed on, picking her way through the water channels and the mud, and never once looking behind.

This evening with an involutary and quite inexplicable feeling, he did not seek for his diamond studs or any other resplendency of his always-careful toilet, but dressed himself as plainly as possible.

Again he climbed, but impetuously, joyously, as if it were the high-road to heaven, the long stair which led to Mme. Jardine's door, and found that what he had hoped would be a party a trois was added to by the pleasant faces of M. Reynier and his daughter, and one or two other guests—not pleasant, however, to his eyes at all. Nevertheless, he made the best of it. Most young men would have delightedly acted cavalier seul to such a charming cluster of girls; but Roderick would a thousand times rather have sat beside this one girl and watched her pour out the tea and distribute the various condiments which seemed to compose this innocent evening meal, after the custom of the Neuchatel folk.

All the talk was in French, of course, but now and then "Miss" Jardine addressed him in English, to which he eagerly responded, as to a sweet secret of felicity in which the rest did not share. And how he thanked the benign fate which dragged away the masculine element in the party to some lecture—half Neuchatel seemed composed of professeurs or ecoliers—and compelled an early breaking up.

"But Monsieur Jardine, who is not at college, need not depart," said Madame, courteously. "Will he not stay and tell us a little of his beautiful Scotland, which my husband loved so and sometimes thought to see once more, but he died without seeing it? Come and sit by me, cherie, and listen. She loves her father's land almost as if she had seen it, does my daughter Silence."

And then Mme. Jardine questioned him rather closely about himself and his college life, watching him with great intentness and with a gentle shrewdness which showed that amidst all her simplicity she was a far-seeing woman, not altogether ignorant of the world and its ways. Finally she drew from him the story of his journey and its object.

Nothing could exceed the astonishment of both mother and daughter when they learned that they "inherited"—Roderick carefully put it in that light, trusting to his good luck to be able to explain it away afterward—inherited a sum of money from Miss Silence Jardine.

"How good of her! how generous!" cried Mme. Jardine, clasping her hands with one of those impulsive gestures which we English think so strange, but which in her seemed perfectly natural. But they had not descended to her daughter, who in mien and manner was not at all what we term "foreign," but as quiet as any English girl.

"I should explain to you, monsieur," continued Mme. Jardine, "that in his youth my husband did his cousin a great unkindness—nay, wrong. He could not help it; she made him so unhappy. But all that is past now, and I—I made him happy. And she has made us rich—this good Cousin Silence."

"Not rich exactly," Roderick confusedly explained. "It is only an old house, with perhaps two or three hundred a year."

"Two or three hundred a year! Why that is a fortune, an absolute fortune! Let us bless the good God for it! Silence, my child, I shall not leave you in poverty!"

She burst into tears, and then, wholly oblivious of the stranger's presence, mother and daughter fell into one another's arms and sobbed together.

CHAPTER IV.

From that auspicious morning, when he had discovered himself to his Swiss "cousins," as he persisted in calling them, there was scarcely a day in which Roderick did not see them—at their own home or elsewhere. For the dear little town opened its arms at once to the handsome and courteous young Englishman, the friend of M. Reynier, the new-found kinsman of Mme. Jardine. He was invited everywhere—to peasant family dinners, homely as elegant, and never later than 10 o'clock; to social evenings, beginning at 6 and ending at 9:30, after which—oh, felicity!—he often used the right of courtship to walk with Mme. Jardine and her daughter through the silent streets and by the placid lakeside home.

He had not explained very much of business affairs, being, indeed, waiting anxiously till he could get an answer from his lawyer as to the possibility of transferring Miss Jardine's property to her Swiss relations, without the latter's suspecting that they had not inherited it direct. Until then, he persuaded himself, and wrote to persuade his mother, though in the wariest and briefest terms, that it was his "duty" to remain at Neuchatel.

He likewise argued that it was far too late in the year for traveling or sight-seeing, and it was only when Mlle. Jardine one day represented to him, with a spice of humor, real Scotch humor, which sometimes flashed out in her, how ignominious it would be to go back home without ever having seen Mont Blanc, that he planned a day at Lausanne—a whole day—if his kind cousins would accompany him and take care of him.

"And I will take care of madame, your mother," he said, tenderly. "She shall travel with every possible luxury that she will let me provide. Indeed," he added, smiling, "I assure you that I can afford it. I am, at least, as rich as—mademoiselle ma cousine will be presently if she choose to take possession of Blackhall."

So it was arranged for the first fine day, which turned out to be one of those heavenly days which come even in November—transmuting the whole world into a beauty sweeter even than that of summer. As they sat in the railway carriage, they three alone together (Roderick had provided for that and every other possible luxury and comfort with a carefulness deliciously sweet and new), he and the mother talked together and Silence looked out of the window, absorbed in the delight of her rare holiday. It was not a very pretty country, the level region, half pasture, half vineyards, round the head of the lake, but she watched it with eyes which seemed to enjoy everything so intensely that she never noticed the eyes of the two who were watching her.

Suddenly these met—the mother's and the lover's. Roderick started and blushed painfully.

"I am glad it is such a fine day," said he hurriedly. "We might not have had another, and as soon as my sister's marriage day is fixed I shall have to think of returning home."

Mme. Jardine regarded him with sudden sharp inquiry. "Home? Yes, certainly; yes, monsieur ought to be going home. He will probably not revisit Switzerland for some time?"

All the blood left the young man's face; he could keep up the sham of conversation no longer.

"Do you wish me not to return, madame? Do you dislike me? Does she dislike me?"

The words were said in the lowest whisper, and the hand he laid on Mme. Jardine's trembled violently, till it was conscious of a feeble pressure, while a faint smile brightened the kind, worn face.

"Madame," he said, still in a whisper, "if I am alive I will return, and speedily. You must surely have understood that by this time."

She looked him full in the eyes—an eager, questioning, almost pathetic look. "Yes; you are good and true—I feel sure of it. I am satisfied."

This was all, for immediately afterward Silence turned round, making some innocent, unconscious remark about their journey. But fixed in Roderick's mind, with a thankfulness that afterward became almost awe, were those few words—what he had said to the mother, and what the mother had answered.

"Is it Lausanne already?" said Silence, and then blushed, a vivid scarlet blush, the first Roderick had ever seen on her colorless face. It made him start—nay, even tremble, as a young king might on suddenly hearing at the door the feet of the messengers who bring him a longed-for crown, which, when it comes, he is almost afraid to wear.

But it was Lausanne railway station—he must rouse himself. The dream-world was come to an end; the practical world began.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

He Understood at Last.

Only very recently, in a little village in the South of Devonshire, a man and woman, whose banns had been duly read out, presented themselves with their friends before the altar in the parish church, in order that the marriage ceremony might take place.

The service proceeded in a satisfactory and pleasant manner until the important part was reached where the clergyman asked the bride the decisive question:

"Wilt thou have this man to be thy wedded husband?"

The parson was completely taken aback and all present were utterly astounded when the woman coolly replied, with considerable emphasis:

"No, that I won't; and he knows that I have often told him so!"

"For what reason then did you come to the church, and make me and all look so stupid by having to take part in this foolish affair?" asked the clergyman with evident chagrin.

"Well," was the reply, "he would bother me again and again, and I couldn't get my peace at all, so I thought I would settle the matter forever by telling him once more before you and all present that I've fully made up my mind to have nothing whatever to do with him."

And leaving the astonished parson and bridegroom to themselves, she, in company with her friends, resolutely marched out of the church.

A BLACK SPOT UPON ENGLAND.

Women and Girls Who Work at the Anvil and Forge.

Henry Lloyd, one of the best known and most intelligent of New England's labor leaders, is sight-seeing in England. His last letter to the Boston Labor Leader contains the following among other things:

While in Birmingham, writes Mr. Lloyd, I was invited to go to what is called the Black Country, Dudley, Old Hill and Cradly Heath—about fifteen miles from Birmingham, to see the nail and chain workers at work. It was the most wonderful sight I ever witnessed, and one I shall not soon forget; in fact, it is a disgrace to Great Britain. Here I saw hundreds of women, young and old, some of them bare to near the wrist, standing before the anvil and forge, welding chains and making nails, for from ten to twelve hours per day, and after a thorough investigation, going among these people, speaking to them, and then comparing notes with labor men in the towns, I am convinced that they do not average more than three shillings and six pence per week.

Poor young girls, their hands grimy and hard, with the black dirt ground into the skin, dull and heavy countenances, with all hope gone, and one poor girl said to me, "No one cares for we meaning us, master, we maun say a word." Married women at one forge, their husbands at another, and an affair like a hammock slung from the ceiling of the little shop, with a little delicate baby. I have seen the mother leave the forge and reach up and take the baby and nurse it, while she talked to me and cried. I may say they work in isolated little shops at the back of their houses where, as a rule, there will be three or four forges, but in some cases more, or even in some only one. The men doing the heavier work cannot earn more on an average than twelve shillings per week, and even less.

A short time before I arrived here, two men hung themselves with the chains they made, driven to desperation by poverty. The coroner said their condition was a black spot upon England. I cannot go further into detail, but will have more to say again about them. Let me add, on the side of a beautiful hill, overlooking this black valley, is the castle and grounds of the Earl of Dudley. He owns all the land in the town and village, also the coal mines around the district.

THE earliest known photograph of Sarah Bernhardt was taken in 1867, when she was playing at the Odeon. Her dress had a crinoline, and her face is innocent and childish. Since then one photographer alone has taken her in 1,007 different attitudes.

WRAPS FOR AUTUMN.

THE GOLF CAPE LEADS IN POPULARITY.

Capes Have Advantages Over Coats When the Dress Sleeves Are Large—Back and Front Views of Garments Richly Made and Finished.

Coats and Capes.

New York correspondence:

THE outside garment which leads in popularity is the golf cape. Evidence of this is on every hand, in the athletic-looking misses who stride about on mild days with their open capes hanging by the cross-over straps, and in the dotting of the promenade with brilliantly plaided hoods, each one marking a golf's rear view. No reliefs to the plainness of this cape are permitted. Beginning as a garment which was used exclusively in outdoor athletic sport, it still retains the element of practicability in every detail and must show its usefulness to the entire exclusion of adornment. With such a style of garment safely in the first place in woman's favor, it is but natural that the competing ones, those which are consigned to second and third position, should be of quite another sort. Some of the small wraps fairly flaunt their excess of fripperies at the golf, which can merely show in return a flash of bright lining. The wee affair of the initial illustration is of this kind and makes a very pretty garment, one which is entirely serviceable for mild days. Of beige cloth, it opens over a vest which is topped by a tulle bow. Between the pelerine and the pleated epaulettes, there is a smaller collar of Venetian guipure. A belt which buckles about the waist and long tabs with embroidered corners complete the wrap.

Answering the same call of rivalry, coats are tending away from plainness. True, in many instances the evidence of this is slight, but what are straws in some models increase in others to unmistakable indications of the tendency of fashion's current. If the golf cape's life is to be very short, and the almost universal opinion is that its fashionableness will not outlast a second season, then when it finally goes out there will be left a collection of highly wrought coats, jackets and wraps to bid for supremacy. It would not be unlike the rule of succession in styles to have the plainness of the present cape succeeded by a garment which was as fanciful as it could be made. At present the plainest of coats show but slight points of alteration. Handsome melton coats have very pointed lapels and the collar at the back faced with velvet. Other new coats are made with belt passing outside in the back and through slits under the fronts, which may hang loose or button close. Still another sort is made to hook from bust to waist line, the edges coming close together and the buttons being set closely along each side. Below the waist line the coat spreads its skirts wide, and above the hooks it turns away in pointed lapels.

Back and front views are given here of a coat which is very richly made and finished. Its material is black moire antique embroidered with jet. It has a full circular basque, and is embroidered with jet front and back, the design being narrower at the back. The garment hooks in front and is lined with ivory white brocade. The standing collar has a turned down attachment, and the sleeves, as well as the triple epaulettes, are embroidered. Than this there is now no other garment that has as clear a claim to first choice after the golf, which it far exceeds in beauty, though it does not approach the cape in current liking.

Whether to select a coat or a cape is a matter for consideration. The latter has certainly the advantage over a coat when sleeves are large, as all fashionable ones are; but, again, a coat is warmer. The cape appears to be more necessary, as there are some dresses with which it seems almost impossible to wear anything else. Nothing could possibly be dressier than one of the new short models, and there is a great deal of warmth in them after all.

For the woman of matronly figure or of advanced years the small, circular capes, even though profusely trimmed, seem hardly dignified enough. For such a woman a cape-mantle is a wise choice. One can be made from seal-brown melton, trimmed with sable. It should come a little below the hips, be banded with fur at the bottom and hang in deep pleats at the back. The front should have stole ends fastened with jet ornaments. A small, pleated epaulette collar, garnished with the fur, should outline the shoulders, and at either side of the epaulette collar and bottom of the stole ends a deep band of jet may be used as a garniture. Although such a mantle has the effect, when on, of a complete underpart with a cape top, yet in reality the fronts are narrow, but, being held by an elastic band round the waist, they keep close and compact. Broad jet is required for the shoulder straps and for the front ends, or the latter may be ornaments with drops, such as are used for center fronts. In this case, allow about eighteen drop ornaments and one yard of wide jet trimming—four ornaments finishing the ends back and front.

In indoor costumes, no one feature is more conspicuous than the uses made of old laces. Many a young woman is now congratulating herself over the fact that her grandmother had a passion for collecting lace. The ladies of seventy years ago seem to have reveled in having yards and yards of uncut "real thread." Then they let it lie in the dark, wrapped in embroidered and real lace handkerchiefs, and the real thread took on the delicate coffee shade that you can't reproduce with coffee to save you. Now the granddaughter of '94, who has no passion for collecting except to wear, uses these laces and is perfectly happy in the envy she creates.

In utilizing them she often responds to the rage for fronts, which has broken out afresh, and with such emphasis that a woman cannot have too many or too elaborate neck affairs, with high collars and fronts arranged therefrom. These are evidently often planned to carry some bit of priceless yellow lace. Robespierre falls of lace are arranged from old paste buckles. Jabots of lace almost cover the brocade or the chiffon of the front. Frills and falls are edged with yards of real narrow lace, and then the whole is fluted or accordion-pleated, so that the yards and yards can be gotten into the space of the front. Little frills of thread lace are set close together in perpendicular rows, a whole front being sometimes covered thus with lace of the narrowest width. The softness of the effect is very delicate, and the girl wearing such a front holds her chin high to show it all. Sometimes insertion of lace is set between the little frills and the rich satin of the foundation just glints through the creamy meshes, but shows no more. In fact, any way, real lace if used is sure to be right, only don't cut it.

A decidedly novel wrap is that which the artist presents in the final illustration. It consists of two circular capes each edged with narrow ostrich feather galloon and a third cape, little more than a collar, which is embroidered with jet. Two long tabs extend down the front, which are in turn ornamented with jet embroidered revers and have jet ornaments at the bottom. The wrap is lined with old rose satin. Only the lower cape is silk, all the remainder being of cloth. "Narrow revers" does not often stand for such shaped ones as these.

The wily milliner has evolved a combination of toque and a sort of cape-collar, so that she seeks to make her customer purchase a garment besides a hat. She begins by showing a tiny affair that seems to be little more than a lot of vandykes of velvet, hunter's green, for instance, each vandyke edged with sable. All are caught together, there is a flash of jeweled buckle, a yellow gleam of old lace, and the whole is a toque. The vandykes take each a correct place when the whole is on the head, and the effect is charming. Then she throws lightly over the victim's shoulders another affair that also seems to be vandykes, only bigger. Each is edged with sable, there's a flash of a jeweled buckle each side of the throat, the vandykes repeat themselves in soft confusion about the chin, and the yellow gleam of old lace shows between. Take the two together, toque and "toquette," and the effect is charming. It inevitably leads the woman on whom they are tried to wish that she could buy the two, a fact that the milliner is well aware of and her price is very high in consequence. As it is a device which cannot be copied by any one not skilled in hat trimming, most women seem to be left out of the calculations altogether. But before long the milliners who can command more than two or three customers a day will offer like wear, and then the price will be much lower.

only when an over watchful porter sanctions their request. With the erection of new buildings on the Yale campus the past year, two campuses have been formed and the college corporation has planned to inclose both by a huge iron fence and at night time to guard the entrances at an official gate termed the "porter's lodge." Thus another throughly English idea is incorporated into American college life. Like the Vanderbilt dormitory, the porter's lodge was taken from Oxford buildings, and in the adoption of both Yale is the first university in America to introduce a peculiarly English institution. The plan of the faculty is to have the gates to the ground closed at a given hour and after that occasion belated students must rouse the janitor.

The Boil on the Devil's Elbow.

One of the Florida wonders is an immense volume of water that boils up in the middle of the St. John's River at a place known as Devil's Elbow, one mile east of this city. Although soundings have been made at this place to a depth of 600 feet no bottom has been found. It is believed to be the outlet of Falling Creek, a considerable stream that sinks into the earth eight miles north of Lake City, in Columbia County. The carcasses of drowned animals have frequently been known to come up in this boil, showing that part of the stream must be above ground. Several of the oldest citizens in the county concur in the story that some forty years ago the carcass of a cow was thrown up by the geyser that bore the mark and brand of Colonel Goodbread, a well-known cattle owner of Columbia County at that time, whose stock used to graze on the banks of Falling Creek. The bed of this underground stream passes directly under Palatka at a depth of 205 feet. It is tapped along its course within the city by numerous artesian wells, which throw up a clear, cool stream of water to a height of 33⅓ feet above the level of the streets. By placing the ear to the pipes of these wells the unmistakable thunders of subterraneous cataracts are easily recognized.—Palatka Advertiser.

The First Potatoes in Ireland.

In the garden adjoining his house at Youghal, Raleigh planted the first potatoes ever grown in Ireland. The vegetable was brought to him from the little colony which he endeavored to establish in Virginia. The colonists started in April, 1585, and Thomas Harriot, one of their number, wrote a description of the country in 1587. He descripes a root which must have been the potato:

"Openank are a kind of roots of round form, some of the bigness of walnuts some farre greater, which are found in moist & marish grounds growing many together one by another in ropes, as though they were fastened with a string. Being boiled they are very good meat."

The Spaniards first brought potatoes to Europe, but Raleigh was undoubtedly the first to introduce the plant into Ireland.—St. Nicholas.

Generalized Too Much.

The French are a witty race, but French servants are reported the stupidest in the world. It is of a person of that race that this story is told:

Justine was reproved by her mistress for bringing home lobsters that were not fresh.

"You must positively not get any lobsters, Justine," said her mistress, "unless they are alive."

The servant took the injunction deeply into her consciousness. A few days afterward her mistress sent her to get some cheese.

"Is this cheese fresh, Justine?" asked the mistress.

"Oh, yes, madam," answered the servant, "I took pains to see that it was alive!"

To Clean India Rubbers.

In these days, when India rubber shoes are so often made of shoddy material, it is especially necessary to take good care of them. It is a great mistake to wash an India rubber to free it from mud. Soap always injures them, and even clear water applications are of no special advantage. The best way, as an exchange says, is to allow the overshoes to become thoroughly dry. Then brush them free from all dust and mud, and rub them thoroughly with vaseline. This not only cleans them but makes the overshoe more impervious to water.—The Watchman.

As One Looks at It.

Mrs. Arthur comes of a good old family, and is proud of her descent. On one occasion she displayed a very ancient piece of house-linen to her servant, saying, as she held it up for inspection, "Look, Bridget, at this tablecloth; it has been in our family for over two hundred years." Bridget eyed the article in question carefully, and then, stepping close up to her mistress, remarked, in a most confidential tone, "Sure, never mind, Mrs. Arthur, dear. If you just kape quiet about it, and don't let on to anybody, who would know but what it was bought bran' new out of the shop?"

Is Only Sleepless in Verse.

One of the poems of T. B. Aldrich's coming volume is entitled "Insomnia," and is a picturesque record of the "horrors of sleeplessness." When this first appeared in a magazine it so deeply impressed the public that the poet received from many sympathetic strangers advertisements of sure cures for the trouble so graphically described. "The amusing part of it is," adds the correspondent, "Mr. Aldrich admits that there never was a sounder sleeper than he."

COMMENTS.

Populists claimed 3,000. They got 700.

Crimmins made a splendid run and almost got there. He was too good a man to be beaten. He loses by about 50.

So was Coop Ralston. One of the very best officers the county ever had. Good services don't seem to count He gets left by about 150.

Hines deserved a better fate. He is a clean and able man, but lacks about 80.

No better man was ever up for office than Barney. We hate to see him lose to a less able man.

If anyone in any party can give a good reason why Reed and Shultz were not the best men for commissioners, we would like to hear it.

Cline and Gengler made a noble struggle, and should have won. We have not heard from Steuben, but suppose both were defeated.

McNagny is probably defeated also, but we have no figures either way.

In the defeat of Dr. Wood, the county loses a splendid representative. This also counts one toward a repeal of some of the valuable laws made by democrats.

Comesky don't care. So he is all right anyway.

A DOCTOR'S PHILANTHROPY.

Thousands Afflicted by Chronic Catarrh Under Free Treatment.

The first day of November, 1893, Dr. Hartman gave his consent to take charge of the treatment of 10,000 cases of chronic catarrh free of charge The announcement was at once published in all the leading papers, when the applications came pouring in from every state in the Union. With a large number of clerks and stenographers to assist him, the doctor actually directs the treatment of thousands of cases by correspondence which costs the patients nothing, except the necessary medicines, which are obtained at the nearest drugstore. To become a patient it is only necessary to send name and address, describe symptoms, and minute directions as to diet, sanitary regulations, and other advice will be sent promptly. Wherever Dr. Hartman is known the name of Pe-ru-na has become a household word. It is safe to say that no medicine in existence is used by so many families as Pe-ru-na. This is especially true of this time of the year, when the people are liable to catarrhal affections, coughs, colds, la grippe, etc. Pe-ru-na has cured more cases of chronic catarrh than all other medicines combined. The great majority of those who use it buy the remedy themselves, use it according to directions, not even reporting their case to Dr. Hartman until after they are entirely cured. But now that a limited number of cases can secure the personal attention of Dr. Hartman free of charge, it is not to be wondered at that many prefer to do so. Pe-ru-na never fails to cure catarrh when properly used. The Pe-ru-na Drug Manufacturing Company of Columbus, Ohio, are sending free to any address a book on chronic catarrh which gives the latest treatment for catarrh, coughs, colds, la grippe, bronchitis, and all other affections of head throat and lungs.

Hallowe'en was celebrated on the usual date by the boys and girls; perhaps some older ones, but for some reason, they were not satisfied, and the following night did what they could think of to astonish, and inconvenience those they visited. The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society are holding their general session here this week. The attendance is expected to be large, and the exercises well worth the attendance of all our people.

The Presbyterian gentlemen had a very fair turn out to their social Friday evening in spite of the bad storm that was raging. They cleared about $20. Everybody likes to attend their socials to see what good cooks they are, They had fine cakes, sauces, slaw, etc., "words and music all their own." Mr. Coffinberry, Ed. Baker and their helpers did nicely, and the way Carnth bossed the job of waiting on the table, was encouraging. Everyone got all he wanted and was urged to "take some more of this." Historians Differ.

From Harper's Young People,

DEAR MR, EDITOR,—Day before yesterday the teacher says to Sammy: 'Sammy, who discovered America?" Sammy thought a minute, and then he says. "Historians differ."

I never knew till I begun to go to school with Sammy how much the folks that made books had different ideas. Always when Sammy gets stuck on a question he says the 'thorities differ, and so he can't tell If it's grammar, he says the grammarans differ, and if it's geogerfy, that the geogerfers differ, and if it's spelling, that the dictionaries differ. And 'most always the teacher kind of says yes, or mebby, or agrees somehow, and Sammy slides along. Only in 'rithmetic gener'ly he gets left.

"How many is seven times eight?" says the teacher.

Sammy looked awful solemn, then he says,

"Teacher, the 'rithmetickers differ."

"No they don't," says the teacher. "You stay in at recess and study your lesson."

When we was coming home day before yesterday we stopped to rest, and Sammy says,

"What do you s'pose the teacher was getting at when she asked me who discovered America?"

"I guess she was trying to see if you knew," says I.

"Well, I knew three or four fellers that say they did, but I couldn't just think of 'em then, 'cause she comes on me so sudden. It was Hen Barker's question anyhow; my question was, 'What was the first land he sighted?' and I was to say, 'A small island of the West Injun Archerpellergo not fully identerfied by exploders.'"

"Well," I says, "I s'pose she meant Columbus."

"I guess so. I wonder if the Injuns saw Columbus 'fore he saw them. If they did, then I should think America discovered herself. Pop says Injuns is pizen. He knows all about 'em. Yours

Yours truly, HARRY."

Mr. Fred Miller, of Irving, Ill, writes that he had a severe kidney trouble for many years, with severe pains in his back, and also that his bladder was affected. Electric Bitters is especially adapted to the cure of all kidney and liver troubles and often gives almost instant relief. One trial will prove our statement. Coming.

The Epworth League has secured Hon. John H. Littlefield, of New York, who will lecture on "Personal Recollections of Abraham Lincoln" at the M. E. church Wednesday evening, Nov. 21st. It is hoped that none will think that the League desires to make money out of this lecture. They simply have secured him for the real benefit each one may get from hearing him lecture on the "Martyr President." He will give anecdotes and incidents in the life of Lincoln, some of which have never been given to the public. He will also give an exact imitation of his style and that of Douglas, in the memorable debate of 1858. Do not fail to hear him and thereby patronage the Epworth League in their big investment.

Criticising Our Millionaires.

It is high time that we in this country should cease pointing the finger of criticism at those whose worldly means are greater than ours, and heap upon them the spirit of malicious envy, writes Edward W. Bok in "At Home with the Editor" in the November Ladies' Home Journal. We have reached that point where we even seek to criticise our millionaires when they buy yachts or give large social functions. During these depressing times I have constantly heard people complaining because Mr. Gould paid $25,000 for a yacht; because Mr. Vanderbilt built two palaces costing him over five millions of dollars, or that Mrs. Astor gave a ball at a cost of $10,000. Pray, why should they not? What helps the country at large more than these very expenditures? If these people hoarded up their money we should be far more justified in criticising them. The more money that is put into circulation in this country the better it is for us all. Indirectly some of it comes to each of us. I remember being at a social function, the cost of which, I was told, exceeded $20,000. Where did that money go? To the very people it should go. The wealthy hostess had the enjoyment of her money, but her tradespeople reaped the real benefit from it.

Hollopeter-Spitler.

Last Thursday evening, Nov. 1, at the home of the bride's parents, two miles west of Cedarville, occurred the marriage of Milton J. Hollopeter and Miss Bertha B. Spitler. At just 12 o'clock Mrs. F. E. Lane, of Auburn, played the wedding march and Rev. J. J. Fred, of Leo, entered the parlor, followed by the bride and bridesmaid, Miss Myrtle Hollopeter, and the groom and best man, Mr. George Hollopeter. They formed a semicircle on the south side of the parlor, where Rev. Fred performed the wedding ceremony, and after congratulations, they partook of a bountiful dinner prepared by the bride's mother. The young couple received a large number of beautiful and valuable presents. About forty guests were present.

The advantages of paper money to those who issue it cannot be denied.

IT is said that the late Wm. H. Vanderbilt was once asked by his wife what he wanted for a gift. He replied, "There is nothing that I want so much as a good sound sleep." And it is related that the only respite he could get from the cares and annoyances of his vast wealth "was by crossing the ocean and immediately recrossing without touching shore. In this way alone could he escape the pressure of business, which on land through telegrams and letters forever pursued him."

SURGERY'S discovery of a way to obliterate facial blemishes has given the European detective forces a great deal of difficulty in locating well-known criminals. By these operations the whole character of the facial expression is sometimes changed by a few deft jabs of a lancet. The wound heals in a very short time, and in most cases can never be noticed. The criminal fraternity are not slow to take hold of this knowledge, and, in consequence, the descriptions in the possession of the detectives cannot always be depended upon.

A MAN steals a horse, sells it to an innocent party, who buys it in good faith. The owner comes, takes away his horse, and the man who has bought it is a loser to the extent of the purchase price. A knave procures a farmer's signature to a paper purporting to be an agency contract for the sale of some machine. By tearing off a part of it, the remainder with the signature becomes a promissory note. Rascal No. 1 sells it to Rascal No. 2 and the latter sues to recover. The courts decide that the farmer must pay the "innocent" holder of the fraud-tainted paper. Is there anything out of joint in these cases?

THE growth and prosperity of the Y. M. C. A. (it would be useless to give its full title, for it has become renowned and beloved under its initials) are one of the cheering signs of the times. Though associated in the minds of the people with all that is youthful, it is an organization of fifty years' growth, and is the parent of a numerous and beneficent offspring. The Epworth League, the Baptist Young People's Association, and last, but not least, the Christian Endeavor Society, and the Christian Association for Good Government are movements originating directly or indirectly from the Y. M. C. A. It is not possible to overestimate the effect of the Y. M. C. A. and its offspring upon the social and political life of the country. It has educated a race of men desirous for reform of civic and political conditions, and ready to move toward them. The Christianity of to-day is not content with preaching and praying. It preaches and prays as fervently as ever, but it works also. It makes itself a part of the life of the world. It not only protests against wickedness in high places, but strives to dethrone it. It discerns that a part of the work of moral reformation is the abolition of conditions that lure to and facilitate vicious indulgence. The general awakening to the need of purer forms of civic government is in no small measure a work of the Y. M. C. A.

THE King of Siam—Chulalonkorn—has so far recovered from his recent illness as to be able to sit up and read the obituary sketches the English and American newspapers published of him, but it is not stated what his opinions are concerning the pictures that accompany them.

ONCE in a while the gods who are supposed to preside over the drama lose temper and play sad pranks. To so vile a pitch has the "realistic" play been carried that even a real sawmill has been thrust upon the boards, and one of the players found the machine more realistic than he desired. The poor fellow lost his real hand by a turn of the real saw. While his misfortune is justly a cause of sympathy, the fact may tend to rid the theater of the outrageous stupidity that thus discredits precincts supposed to be devoted to drama.

RULES IN NEWFOUNDLAND.

Sir Terence O'Brien, the Governor of That Cold Country.

Sir Terence O'Brien, Governor of Newfoundland, is a person of interest. He was born in 1830 at Manchester, England. The son of a distinguished officer, he went through Sandhurst to the army, and from 1849 to 1867 served England in India, holding a variety of military posts. Leaving India, he was Inspector General of Police in Mauritius, and afterward Poor Law Commissioner in the same island. In 1881 he became Governor and remained there till its cession to Germany in 1888. Since that date he has been Governor of Newfoundland. Sir Terence is a Past Officer of the Grand Lodge and of the Supreme Grand Chapter of England.

Feeding by Machinery.

An electric horse feeder, is a new invention brought out by Mr. Alderson, of Chesterfield, for securing the regular feeding of horses during the absence from any cause of the stableman or groom. The apparatus is described as being very simple, the law of gravitation being depended upon to accomplish most of the work. The first requisite is an alarm clock, which should be good enough not to stop casually, but need not be expensive. The electric plant is that needed for an ordinary electric bell, four cells of the Leclanche type of battery being sufficient for any distance up to 200 yards. The third portion of the apparatus is the feeder—that is to say, the vessel holding the corn and chaff, as the case may be. The clock, which is the prime mover of the whole concern, may be in the house, the harness room or anywhere, but if it be more than 200 yards away from the feeder a more powerful battery will be required. To use the feeder, the first thing is to set the alarm of the clock at the hour at which it is desired that the horses should be fed. The food is then placed in a tin-like biscuit box, which is turned upside down, and placed in the proper compartment of the shute, when the lid of the box is drawn out, the corn then resting upon the floor of a trap-like arrangement, held in its place by a simple contrivance. When the alarm goes off a button is pressed and the circuit is completed. A weight falls, the bottom of the feed box is released, and the corn falls out into the manger.

Hysteria and Women's Rights.

One notices in too many things which women do, the touch of hysteria. Take the more or less neurotic novels which certain ladies have recently issued from English presses. In every one of them one finds a suggestion of the hysterical inclination which is an inevitable accompaniment of certain forms of anæmia. I know nothing of their authors, but I should be disposed to wager, from the evidences which peep out from between the lines, that the large majority of them are childless women.

Go where you please among the women who are shrieking out for this or that, and you will find that 75 per cent of them are, in some way or other, the victims of their sex. From the point of view of modern femininity, it is woman's right to be a man. If they would only be frank, it is nature they quarrel with—they envy man!—All the Year Round.

A Mare's Nest.

Although, as stated elsewhere, amusement may be derived from the errors in advertising signs one may at times discover a mare's nest. A showman had a bill outside his tent which read, "Come and see the great sawed fish." A learned gentleman noticed it and informed the showman that it ought to be "sword" fish. "Yer'd better come in and see for yerself; the admission is only tuppence," was the showman's reply. So the learned man went in and was shown a large cod sawed in half. "Yer ain't the fust gent wat's tried to teach me 'ow to spell; but I've had a good eddication, and I'm running this show to prove it," grinned the man. The learned gentleman stayed to listen to no more.

No Continued Story Needed.

During the campaign in Montana in 1886, Col. I. D. McCutcheon was Chairman of the Republican Territorial Committee. The Republican candidate was a most attractive orator, and was everywhere greeted by enthusiastic audiences. But when the votes were counted, he was found to be beaten by more than 4,000. On the next day after the election, Mr. Reed, editor of the Butte Inter Mountain, wired Chairman McCutcheon to send him 100 words, giving the result, to which he replied: "We are beaten like the devil, and it don't require a hundred words to tell it."

ANTE-BELLUM TIMES.

PLANTATION LIFE DURING THE DAYS OF SLAVERY.

Careless Happiness of the Slave Contrasted with the Responsibilities of the Freedman—Labors and Amusements in the Field and at the Quarters.

Story of Slave Life.

HE idea is generally prevalent that the condition of the slaves in the South before the war was one of abject and hopeless misery. They were supposed to be compelled to labor under a cruel taskmaster for many hours every day, and there were persons who imagined that they wore chains such as graced the limbs of refractory work-house convicts or unusually tough members of the chain gang. The popularity of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," with its vivid pictures of the miseries of slave life, was responsible for not a few of these mistakes, while a legion of imitations of this really strong book, copying its dramatic and sensational features without emulating the interesting character of its narrative, must be credited with most of the remaining mistakes which, even at the present day, are current in many neighborhoods as to the condition of the former Southern slaves. Many of these mistakes, says a correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, were even grotesque in their absurdity. In some New England neighborhoods it was supposed that Southern planters hitched negroes to plows like beasts of burden and compelled them to do the work of oxen, nor was this idea completely dissipated by a Southern man explaining its fallacy by showing that not less than six able-bodied slaves would be need to draw one plow, that six slaves would cost from $8,000 to $12,000, while a mule, which would do the work much more efficiently, could be had for less than $100. The notion that all masters were heartless, that all overseers were necessarily brutal, that all slaves were treated with cruelty, and, like caged birds, were constantly pining for liberty, became familiar to the Northern mind, and, indeed, the prevalence of these mistakes and the indignation felt on this account had no little to do with bringing on the war.

IN THE DRIVER'S ABSENCE.

It is true that there were masters in the South who treated their slaves cruelly. It is true that there were brutal overseers, who sometimes inflicted needless cruelty upon the hapless creatures over whom they were placed in authority. It is true that helpless negroes were sometimes frightfully maltreated; that families were separated and their various members sold to different purchasers, to be taken to different quarters of the country. All these things were abuses of the system incidental to it, probably inseparable from it. But it is not true that cruelty was the rule, that the slaves were starved and uselessly beaten, for such a policy would have been in direct contravention of the owner's interest, and while Southern planters did not as a rule consult their own interests as much as they should have done, they were sufficiently aware of the value of their own property not to impair it by useless cruelty.

Among the masters of the South there were many men who did what they could to ameliorate the condition of their slaves, who recognized the fact that the peculiar institution was among them, not by their own wish or act, and that it should be managed in such a manner as to entail the least possible suffering upon its unhappy victims. Under the care of such masters it was possible for the slaves to lead a quiet and not unhappy life, and even, under exceptionally favorable circumstances, to acquire a little property. Instances were occasionally seen of slaves being allowed to purchase themselves where the laws of the State permitted it, though once in a while a curious misuse was made of the purchasing power, as in the case of the old Kentucky slave who by working overtime, acquired enough to buy a half interest in himself from his master—of course with the latter's consent. Half of his time was thus his own, and his master naturally expected that, having gone so far, he would continue his efforts, and finally manumit himself. To the surprise of the gentleman, however the half-liberated slave spent his own allotment of time in loafing about the village, and after a few months of this sort of exercise he disposed of his own interest in himself to a neighbor of his master's, a gentleman of the vicinity. When asked how he came to do this he replied that he had no confidence in negro property, anyhow. If not entirely apocryphal, this illustration seems to show that the negroes of the Southern States accepted their lot and were as happy in it as it was possible for them to be under the circumstances. Life on the big plantations was, it is true, mostly work. During the busy season, which of course depended upon the crop, the hours were long and the work severe, but at any other time the slaves were not as a rule overworked, nor indeed during even the busy season was their labor much more arduous than that of the construction gangs now employed in building a railroad. In the field work, whether hoeing or picking cotton, cultivating the corn or sugar cane, both men and women took a hand, the latter frequently doing quite as much as the former. The entire plantation was under the supervision of the overseer, who was usually a white man. The owner rarely troubled himself about the details of the plantation work, leaving all these matters to his overseer, who was supposed to carry on all the business pertaining to the plantation, to keep the books, to preserve an account of the expenses and the income, and, in short, to be the business agent and account keeper of the plantation. He, and not the master, came in direct contact with the slaves, and to him they looked for their orders. If the overseer was honest and capable the plantation business frequently prospered; if he was the contrary, the plantation soon ran down, and not a few plantation owners went through the unpleasant experience of every year being compelled to sell off a piece of land or a few slaves to make both ends meet.

While the overseer was the principal executive officer of the plantation, he frequently, however, delegated a portion of his authority to a subordinate known as a "driver." The plantation driver was commonly an old and trusted negro man, who, by many years of faithful service, had acquired a claim to his master's consideration. He was often a preacher, and thus had acquired over his fellows an ascendency which caused him to be respected as in every way their superior. His official position in plantation etiquette was next to that of the overseer, and he was even occasionally intrusted with the power of inflicting corporal punishment on the negroes placed in his charge, an authority he was rarely slow to exercise, for it was a notorious fact that the driver was always harder on the plantation hands than was the overseer.

The plantation was always fitted out with a bell, which hung in a frame at the top of a post and was rung as a signal for the beginning and end of the hours of work. Small slave-owners contented themselves with a horn, which answered the same purpose, and the sound of the dinner horn has thus been perpetuated in Southern literature and in negro imagery, but the bell was the accepted feature, and a plantation without a bell was considered to be somewhat below the average. At the sound of the bell the negroes proceeded to the fields, walking in a straggling line, exchanging gibes, repartee and comical remarks on subjects of momentary interest. Their labor among the cotton and the corn plants was enlivened by all sorts of jokes and running fire of witticisms, which, however, were checked as the overseer or the driver came within hearing. Resting spell were frequent; indeed, were it not for the presence fo some one in authority, the resting spells would have occupied the most of the day, for as not one of the laborers was working for his own benefit, he seldom cared how little he did, and for a delinquency always had a ready if not a sufficient excuse.

THE DRIVER.

While the men and women were employed in the fields the little negroes, or pickaninnies as they were called, were left in charge of some old "mammy," an ancient colored woman no longer able to do plantation work. She took care of the babies, watched the pickaninnies, to make sure they got into no mischief, and gave the youngsters their rations. These were of the simplest description, "pot liquor" being the basis of the substantials and molasses of the dainties. Pot liquor was the water in which ham, beef and other meats were boiled. It was, in fact, a thin soup, but when thickened with meal or vegetables and reboiled, it made a reasonably nutritious diet, and so highly was it regarded on the Southern plantations that to "raise little negroes without pot liquor" was regarded as a practical impossibility. Pot liquor and hominy, "pone bread" and fat bacon, with molasses, constituted the staple rations of the slaves the year round, except of those favored few who were employed around the master's house, who served his table and ate and drank, with some few exceptions, what the family did. The working day over, its conclusion being announced by the bell, the slaves returned from the field as they went, only with far more of noisy merriment, for there was always a sense of relief at the conclusion of a day's toil.

RETURNING FROM THE 'POSSUM HUNT.

DOWN IN THE "QUARTERS."

THE PLANTATION BELL.

Evening at the quarters was the merriest part of the day. Among so many slaves there were always some of musical tendencies who could play the guitar or banjo, and so dances were frequent, while corn huskings were quite as much of a frolic. The negroes' "quarters" consisted of a row or rows of cabins, generally of logs, fronting a street not far from the owner's house, and to the rear. Here, after supper was ended, the slaves were left to themselves, and found what amusement they could until the bell rang for bedtime. Then all were supposed to retire, and any who failed to be in place when the overseer or driver made the final round for the night were subject to severe punishment. The slaves were not permitted to leave the plantation without a written pass or permit from their owner or overseer, and in town the fire bell was generally rung at 9 o'clock as a signal for them to go home. After the ringing of the bell the night watchmen or patrol of the town started on their rounds, when every slave found on the street was stopped and questioned, and if found without a pass was arrested and locked up. The ringing of the fire bell was, therefore, a signal for a general scampering, and in every direction belated darkies could be heard pounding the sidewalks with their generous feet in an effort to reach home before the night watch started out. This well-understood feature of Southern life it was that gave rise to the once popular song, "Run, Nigger, Run, the Patrol Will Catch You."

The diversions of the plantation were very simple. In the season 'possum and 'coon hunts were in order, the slaves who joined in the sports often being accompanied by members of the owner's family, who went for the mere pleasure of hunting something. With the slaves, however, the expedition was strictly a business enterprise, for then, as ever since, the fat 'possum was esteemed a most toothsome dainty, and lucky indeed was he who managed to secure one of these much-coveted animals for his own exclusive eating. The preparation for the table was a matter of much interest and no little care. After the 'possum had been made ready for the roasting, a large pumpkin was split in two and the seeds taken out of one half, which was deposited before the fire and filled with peeled sweet potatoes. The 'possum was then hung up by his tail before a roaring fire, directly above the pumpkin, and slowly twirling around, he was equally roasted on every side, while his fat, forced out by the heat, dripped on the sweet potatoes and pumpkin, potatoes and 'possum were all cooked ready for consumption at the same time, and a feast was thus provided which, according to darky estimate, was fit for the gods.

The life of the slave, with its intervals of relaxation, was not, in the main, an unhappy one. There was a complete lack of responsibility. The old-time negro slave lived only for the day. The morrow troubled him not. He was sure of a living, for he knew his master could not afford to let him starve. He was not allowed to learn anything. All books to him were sealed. But knowing nothing of them he never missed the information they contained. His greatest satisfaction was to have a good master, and when he had any ambitions, the highest was to run away and go North, where he would be free. It was often gratified, too, for if any one will take the time to look over the files of any newspaper published in the border States before the war, he will find that one of its most conspicuous features was the picture of a running negro with a bundle slung on a stick over his shoulder, and a description of the slave supposed to have run away. But instances are also not lacking of slaves accompanying their masters during long journeys through the North and remaining as devoted on free as on slave soil.

The slave and the freedman are two essentially different persons. Since the emancipation the Southern colored people have sustained a change so radical that it can not be considered but as a change of character. They have lost much of the careless happiness of slavery, but have gained in a knowledge of the responsibility of freedom. The change is immeasurable, and even the most radical advocate of the old system would not now venture on a return to slavery and the overseer, or to affirm that the freedman is not infinitely superior in every respect to the slave.

Uses of Raw Hide.

For wide usefulness, few things exceed raw hide, though it is not commonly understood in the East, or among civilized people, as should be the case. The Western pioneer through necessity learned the art of manipulating it long years ago, and its use has not been forgotten. A coil of sun-dried cowhide tied to the plow-handle, turret ring or wagon stake, says a correspondent, is security against breakdowns and many mishaps which are likely to overtake the farmer or teamster. Soaked in water, it becomes limber quickly and will tie a harness, wagon or other things together and hold them firmly whether wet or dry. When it dries it shrinks, binding more firmly than ever. On the treeless, rainless wastes of the Southwest, where the fiercest sun and constant drying winds would shrink the tire from any wheel used in moist climates, the raw hide tire is indispensable, because the dryer it gets the closer it sticks. If after long wear a tire is found loose, a new one can be quickly whipped about the wheel at night, ready to start with in the morning. For belt laces, traces and other harness straps, chair bottoms, and innumerable other places where hard wear is demanded, the raw hide with the hair exposed, or turned in out of sight, is invaluable and could be used in the older States oftentimes with great advantage. Or these skins may be "tawed," as the process is called where the hair or fur is preserved, and no tannic acid is used. This is done by spreading a mixture of finely powdered salt alum in equal quantities upon the moist flesh side, and doubling one or laying pairs flesh side together. The hides are left thus for several days, when they seem to have become something like leather. They are then stripped, scraped, rubbed with chalk and pumice stone until smooth, and pulled and scraped while drying to make them soft.

The bell rang and McCord got up and with some neighbors and a traveling man by the name of John Trinch, who was staying over night with him, went to the store. They encountered the burglar on the steps of the store, who greeted them with a "Good evening, gentlemen." McCord covered him with his shotgun and called a halt, whereupon the burglar shot at McCord, striking him on the breast bone, the ball finding a lodgement under the collar bone. McCord shot and the load entered the right side of the head of the robber, killing him almost instantly. He carried in his hands stolen goods, and his pockets were loaded with jewelry, watches, cigarettes, money and other valuable.

DR. ROUX, THE FRENCH SAVANT, TELLS HOW 'TIS DONE.

Serum of the Blood of Horses Has Saved Thousands in France—An Infallible Remedy for the Dread Disease if Taken in Time.

Pupil of Pasteur.

The eyes of all the world are upon Dr. Roux, the physician who has met with such success with his new method for curing diphtheria, and Paris, the city of his labors, is accordingly proud of him. It was not until the recent Congress of Hygiene, held at Budapest, that Dr. Roux gave to the world the results of his experiments in treating that dread disease, and it speaks well for his theories and discoveries that the 2,500 physicians assembled in Budapest from all parts of the world seem to put faith in him.

His dark, serious face lighted up with a winning smile as the correspondent of the New York World saluted him as "the man who is saving 30,000 lives a year in France alone." "Pardon," he said, quickly, "you exaggerate. It is true that diphtheria and croup claim more than 30,000 victims every year in this country. It is also true that out of 118 children whom I have recently treated for one or the other of these terrible maladies I have saved 116. That is, we think, a very pretty reduction of the mortality from the old rates. Yet we are only on the threshold of success. At the Trosseau Hospital, where the mortality among the children used to be 63 per cent., it has been reduced since the introduction of our treatment of diphtheria and croup to 24 per cent. At the Hospital of the Enfants Malades," continued the Doctor, "where I have been experimenting with my discovery for three years, the average mortality has been lowered from 11 to 1 per cent. This is a good confirmation of the value of our remedy.

"My co-workers, MM. Martin and Chaillou, and I maintain, after a series of careful experiments extending through three years, that by the use of the serum separated from the blood of horses which have been previously vaccinated against diphtheria we have succeeded in lowering in such large proportion the mortality of children attacked by diphtheria or croup, that the malady may be considered as conquered. We are beyond peradventure now. But what we wish specially to do is to impress upon the minds of mothers everywhere the need of flying at once to the remedy the moment the diphtheria declares itself. Otherwise we shall continue to have such discouraging results as at the Trousseau Hospital.

"This is what should be done," he went on. "When a child complains of a sore throat an examination should be instantly made. If the mucous surface shows little white spots scattered over it a physician should be called without delay. The white spots may be indications of a simple quinzy, or they may be the first symptoms of croup.

"In either case the physician should at once give the child a sub-cutaneous injection of the anti-diphtheritic serum. If the attack is one of quinzy simply, the remedy will do no harm. If it is diphtheria, the serum will infallibly effect a cure."

The correspondent remarked that diphtheria is a disease about which every mother has a different theory.

"There are many vulgar errors concerning it," said the Doctor. "Nine times out of ten diphtheria does not kill, as is generally supposed, by suffocation. The false membranes which develop at the back of the throat rarely cause total obstruction of the respiratory canal, and even if they did, tracheotomy could save the patient. But the diphtheritic microbe, which swarms on these false membranes, secretes a poison that, sooner or later, according to the virulence of the attack, must contaminate the blood. My pupil Yersin and I claim to have been the first to discover this 'toxine,' and to have proved that diphtheria patients die from poisoning.

"Now, the subcutaneous injection of the anti-diphtheritic serum confers immediate immunity, but acts as an antidote only at the end of several hours, so that if the ravages of the 'toxine' are too far advanced (and this is pretty generally the case among poor children here when the family doctor says that the attack has become too serious for him and that the patient must go to the hospital) the remedy is given in vain. Neither must it be supposed that the serum has any power to cure other diseases which the sufferer may have concurrently with diphtheria."

"And how do you obtain the serum?"

"Well, we will now return to our friend the horse. The great number of experiments made in our laboratory showed that of all animals capable of furnishing anti-diphtheritic serum in large quantities the horse was the easiest to vaccinate. He supports the 'toxine' much better than the dog or than ruminating animals. Nothing is easier than to draw from the jugular vein of a horse, as often as one wishes, great quantities of pure blood from which a perfectly limpid serum separates."

"And is the horse sacrificed?"

"Not at all. The operators of the Pasteur Institute have horses from the jugulars of which they have drawn blood more than twenty times, and the vein remains as supple as at the first 'drawing.' The animals used for this purpose are nearly all young horses, sound and with excellent appetites. They are bled once a month, and at each operation a little more than four quarts of blood, capable of furnishing half that quantity of serum, is taken from them."

"Is there any cruelty in the operation?"

"No. The bleeding causes no pain, and the animal is not much enfeebled if the specified quantities are not exceeded."

Dr. Roux is a young man not yet 40 years, but he has long been known for his valuable work in the Pasteur Institute. He has been the assistant of Pasteur for fifteen years. Pasteur himself is only a chemist. When he came to study human diseases with his peculiar methods it was necessary that he should have some trained physician with him. He applied to Velpeau, who was then at the height of his fame and at the head of the faculty of medicine in Paris. That eminent physician chose for him young Dr. Roux, who was but an unknown student.

Fortunately the student was of the stamp of Pasteur himself. He is capable of working twelve or thirteen hours a day, week after week, and he is as curious to know as he is keen in understanding the results of his observations. The discovery of the special poison of the microbe of diphtheria and croup was made by a German professor of Berlin, but he was unable to reduce it to a method of practical vaccination. It is this which has occupied Dr. Roux for the last two years. Out of many hundreds of sick children, he had lost only one-fifth, while the old methods scarcely cured one-half of the cases, and often two-thirds and more died. Considering how many children are brought to the hospital only when the disease is far advanced, he feels warranted in saying that not more than two out of one hundred need die under ordinary circumstances if properly treated.

DR. ROUX.

INOCULATING AN INFANT.

All last winter his daily visits to the children's hospital were enough to exhaust the strength of one man. But he was often seen in the remote quarters of Paris at the bedside of little ones down with the terrible disease. Sometimes he has passed the whole night watching them. When the poor parents in the morning asked what they could give him, the famous physician darted out of the door and disappeared, as if afraid even of their thanks. This disinterestedness, which he carries to an extraordinary degree, is known to all his associates of the institute.

He is now at the head of the service, but as the institute is always in want of funds, he does not even draw the small salary which is allotted him. His friends say that he belongs to another age, that he knows nothing of money and cares less, and that he has given up his whole existence to serve science and humanity.

THE JUMPING MERRYTHOUGHT.

Works on the Same Principle as Does the Jump'ng Frog.

When the turkey has been duly served, and nothing is left but a pile of bones, pick out the "merry thought," the bone which is shaped like the one shown in the illustration. Stretch across the bone a double string, and twist the string around a piece of stick which just reaches to the top of bone. On this point place a bit of soft pitch, or any very sticky substance strong enough to grip the end of the stick; then place the "merrythought" on the table, and when the twisted stick has overcome the resistance of the pitch the bone will jump high into the air. On this principle "jumping frogs" are made.

A Siberian Millionaire's Benefaction

The Siberian millionaire, Ponomarjeff, whose death was announced at St. Petersburg some months ago, left 1,000,000 rubles with the direction that they should be placed in banks at compound interest for ninety-nine years, after which they are to be devoted to the construction and support of a Siberian university at Irkutsk, at which all instruction is to be gratis.

"JUDGE," said the young man with the torn clothes and the black eye, "considerin' the way the police done me up, I think you ought to let me down easy." "Young man, if you came here expecting this court to be a parachute," replied the judge, with a harsh police court laugh, "you are away off your trolley. Ninety days."—Cincinnati Tribune.

PIG-TAILS AND TOP-KHOTS.

Peculiar Methods of Hair Dressing Among the Orientals.

Oriental people have a peculiar manner of dressing their hair. In this country we are more or less familiar with the pig-tail of the Chinese, which is an especial mark of honor among the celestials. The Coreans, too, have a peculiar coiffure. They gather up the ends of their locks and twist them into a knot on the top of the head, where it stands erect. For covering this top-knot a peculiar hat is worn, made of horse hair or some fine black fiber and so thin that rain and wind can pass freely through it. The Japanese also have a peculiar top-knot. They shave the front of the head and then gather the hair from the back and make it into a shape like a round peg, about four or five inches long. The hair thus arranged looks like a miniature cannon. Among the tribes of Burmah we find various modes of trimming the hair by which knots are produced. The Karens usually twist the hair into a knot on the side of the head, but some of them wear it as an adornment on the forehead. The Mohammedans allow a tuft of hair to grow on the crown. They believe that if they are good, when they die and have to cross the bridge, Al-sirat, which is so narrow that the pathway is as sharp as a scimitar, passing it would be impossible unless Mohammed helped them over by holding the tuft in his hand.

There is certainly something worth investigating in this Oriental manner of hairdressing, and a new light may be thrown on the race by tracing this symbolism to its origin.

TWO STYLES OF KAREN HAIRDRESSING.

THIS HORSE HAS A MUSTACHE.

Strange Freak of Nature Shown by a New York Car-Horse.

Nature is proverbially partial in the apportionment of personal embellishments. Masculine heads that are the best furnished inside are obliged to struggle through life without the slightest trace of hirsute adornment, while the Circassian bearded woman has superfluous hair enough to stuff a sofa and never miss it. King Humbert of Italy finds his enormous mustache frightfully in the way when eating bolognas and spaghetti, while it is said that Hoke Smith would give $1,000 if he were able to raise one of any sort.

If Dame Nature dallies thus with creatures of the genus homo, it is not surprising that she is equally capricious in her treatment of the genus equus. Horses are not supposed to have mustaches; even Pegasus, Bucephalus, Hambletonian and other noted equine cracks never thought of sporting anything of the kind. But a mare named originally Lady Jane, but now struggling along as No. 139 of the car horses owned by the Dry Dock, East Broadway and Avenue B line, of New York, has been more favored in this particular. The animal in question is the possessor of a fine, silky, blond, curly mustache fully four inches in length, which, as the mare is gray, gives her a very curious appearance. The stable boy in care of the mare occasionally waxes the mustache, which adds still more to her singular appearance.

Of the 500 horses kept in these stables, No. 139's remarkable adornment has singled her out as a special pet and favorite. So accustomed is she to receive visitors, in particular from James Morgan, the foreman of the stables, that frequently, when released from the two and a half hours' work required of her, she will come to the door of his office, thrust in her head and wait for a lump of sugar.

The Young Khedive's Amusements.

Although the youthful Khedive of Egypt does not smoke and is strictly obedient to the Koran's injunction not to use strong drink, he finds various ways of amusing himself. One is in his yachts, of which he has four, the largest being about as big as an ocean liner. Under his rule woman's position is fast improving in Egypt, and harem life is disappearing. By the Mahommedan law an Egyptian is permitted to have four wives, but at present it is considered bad form for a man to have more than one helpmate.

An Anecdote of Lord Aberdeen.

We have heard so much about Lady Aberdeen that it is really quite refreshing to find a bit of gossip as to the other side of the family. Lord Aberdeen tells the following story of himself: He left London at midnight in a sleeping car for the north. In the morning when he was awakened he saw a stranger opposite him.

"Excuse me," said the stranger, "may I ask if you are rich?"

Somewhat surprised, his Lordship replied that he was tolerably well to-do.

"May I ask," continued the stranger, "how rich you are?"

"Well, if it will do you any good to know," was the reply, "I suppose I have several hundred thousand pounds."

"Well," went on the stranger. "If I were as rich as you and snored as loud as you, I should take a whole car so as not to interrupt the sleep of others."

General Baldy Smith.

A handsome and well-preserved old warrior, prominently mentioned in the program for the unveiling of the McClellan statue, soon to take place, is Gen. W. F. ("Baldy") Smith, who was highly distinguished in many of the campaigns of the late war both as an engineer and commander in the field, says the Philadelphia Record. Many would suppose from the affectionate nickname given to him by the men of his command, to distinguish him from the other generals of the same surname, that his baldness was a striking peculiarity, but at the period when the sobriquet was bestowed, this was by no means the case, and only in an army composed chiefly of boys with abundant locks would his slight deficiency of crest have been compared with that of the American eagle. He was a warm, personal friend of Gen. McClellan before, during and after the war.

Misery After Meals.

The oppressive embargoes levied upon the inner man by his inveterate enemy, dyspepsia, after meals, are lifted and the yoke cast off by that sovereign medicinal liberator from bodily ailments, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Heartburn, flatulence, oppression at the pit of the stomach, the presence of bile where it does not belong, are alike remedied by this potent reformer of a disordered condition of the gastric organ and the liver. It is the prince of tonics and stomachics, invigorating at the same time that it remedies. Both appetite and sleep are improved by it. A wineglass before or after meals, and before retiring, will be found an efficient restorative of the ability to digest and assimilate and to rest tranquilly. Use it for malarial, kidney and rheumatic trouble and for constipation. For the aged and infirm it is highly beneficial.

Woman's Way.

When the train made its first stop after leaving home, Mr. Simpkins, who had been in a brown study for several minutes, raised his eyes, which had a troubled look in them, and remarked: "My dear, are you sure we haven't forgotten anything?"

"Of course, we haven't,' responded the good lady, cheerfully. "I would have thought of it the minute the train started."—Detroit News Tribune.

A RARE record is boasted of by Timothy Dyer of Vinal Haven, Me., who is in his 91st year. Until he was 18 years old he never wore a shoe. He has never ridden on a car, and but once on a steamboat; he has never entered a tavern, never quarreled with any one and a barber has never shaved him.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

At the home of the bride, in Auburn, Ind., Nov. 1, 1894, by Rev. J. D. Brosy, Mr. Charles A. Bindhammer, of Chicago, Ill., to Miss Lenore Saxton, of Auburn, Ind. The bride has been a member of the Presbyterian church several years, a member of the Christian Endeavor society, acting as organist for both divisions of said society. She was also a member of the Auburn Musical Club, and has acted as organist of the German Lutheran church the past year or more. DAWN OF WOMAN'S DAY

HER RIGHTS RECOGNIZED BY MAN

He Has Need of Her in the Voyage of Life—What Woman Was in the Eyes of Man in the Olden Time.

Below is a synopsis of Rev Dr. Johnson's sermon at the First Presbyterian church at South Bend Sunday evening Oct. 21:

The eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee.—1st Cor. 12-21.

The city of Corinth was happily situated. It was built on an isthmus lying between two seas. Its two harbors were as two arms to receive the commerce of the east and the west. Thus the ships of all nations found their way to Corinth. What Athens was in the world of letters, what Rome was in the world of law and government, that was Corinth along the path of commerce. Into that throbbing center of life and commercial excitement came St. Paul from Athens. He planted there a church that left its impress on the Greek world. In a letter to that church he tells them that every member of the body of Christ has his office and work. He illustrates his thoughts by saying that the eye is not independent of the hand. But let the words of the apostle suggest to us the unity and equality of man and woman. For he has let the eye represent man and the hand represent woman.

But what now was the relation between the eye and the hand in the ancient world? Well, the eye said to the hand, I have no need of thee. Go to brilliant Athens and study the old Greek. He climbed the hills of learning alone and his pride said to woman, "I have no need of thee." He sailed every sea and scaled every summit, and traversed every forest in the world of mind. But he moved over the sea and breathed mountain air alone. He locked the doors of learning against woman and carried the key in his pocket. He looked upon woman as his inferior and instead of making her his companion he made her his slave. To be sure the old Greek did great things. We would not rob him of his glory. For he started upon its flow an intellectual stream that has enriched the world. But had he opened the halls of learning to woman he would have written finer poems, would have chiseled nobler statues and reared more beautiful temples. Under the inspiration of woman he would have climbed to loftier intellectual heights. His mistake was that he tried to propel his ship over the wide sea with one oar. We would take off our hats to Plato and Aristotle and Pericles and Phidias, and yet these wise men made no room for woman in their schools and libraries. There were many brilliant drawing rooms in old Athens, but the wife could not sit down at the same table with her husband as an equal and a companion. In home and school and library and gallery the eye said unto the hand, I have no need of thee. But were there no educated women in Athens?

Yes, but they were largely women without virtue. The old Greek educated the courtezan, but closed the gates of intellectual development to wife and daughter. The beautiful Aspasia was highly educated and was graceful in manner and brilliant in mind, and yet she lived an unlawful life Pericles. Hence the cultivated women among the Greeks were largely without moral character. But passing from old Athens, the mother of art and poem and temple, let us mark the position of woman under a Biblical sky.

Read the sublime words of Genesis: "So God created man in His own image, in the image of God created He him, male and female created He them." These words make woman the equal of man. She began with man the work of the centuries with the equal image of God shining in her soul. But read again: "Therefore shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall cleave unto his wife and they shall be one flesh." Thus the Bible makes woman the equal companion of man. The Bible has changed the position of woman; it has done for her what the light of the sun has done for the whirling planets. In lands enriched by the presence of our christianity, woman lives under a better sky and breathes the air of freedom. To her our noblest schools of learning open wide their doors. She is welcomed as man's equal and is hailed as God's good gift to man. How beautiful has been her work when she had an equal chance with man. We all hailed with delight woman's work at the great exposition last year. Without woman's genius the greater Athens with its Parthenon of brilliant art would not have been possible on the shore of our great inland sea. But mark with me the position of women on the Biblical page. Miriam, the sister of Moses, was a prophetess and sang her song of triumph on the shore of the sea. Her song finds room on the inspired page, "And Miriam answered them, 'Sing ye to the Lord, for he hath triumphed gloriously, the horse and the rider hath he thrown into the sea.'"

But pass now to the christian era and enter the temple at Jerusalem. It is Anna, the prophetess, that speaks in the splendid Hebrew temple when our Lord is presented. "And she coming in that instant gave thanks likewise unto the Lord, and spake of Him to all them that look for redemption in Jerusalem." Where on the face of the earth may woman be more highly honored? Away with an infidelity that tells us that christianity limits woman.

But, replies one, did not St. Paul command that the women keep silence in the churches. Yes, when writing to the Greeks. But for a reason. He wrote the work of limitation because he was jealous of woman's reputation. He did not limit the Hebrew women. Acquilla and Priscilla were pupils of St. Paul And Priscilla equally with her husband instructed the eloquent Apollos in New Testament doctrine. But the reason the apostle limited woman in the Greek churches was to guard her christian reputation. Had she spoken freely in the churches the Greeks would have associated her with women of impure character, for the reason that only harlots spoke in public among the Greeks. Thus St Paul's protest was in the interest of good morals. He wished no reproach to come to the noble women of the christian church. But his word of protest was limited to the time. He was woman's noblest companion. But the old Greek world with its impure life has passed away, and we are living under a purer sky. Our women now speak in our churches and the eye no longer says to the hand, "I have no need of thee." Her prayer and song and earnest word are welcome now in Sunday schools and prayer meetings. What splendid work is woman doing along the path of missions for her sister in darkest Africa and populous India and conservative China All hail to the noble work of woman for woman. But mark her work as a teacher in our public schools. She is educating the nation. And since she does her work as well as man, let us pay her as liberally The best teachers in schools are women They have high ideals and color for the better the life of our boys and girls. But her work is equally noble along the path of reform. We need her influence in the state. Without her we shall never make progress in the temperance reform. Hence let us no longer try to move our ship of state over the wide sea with one oar. Give woman her rights along every path and great will be our progress in the world of reform. The eye has need of the hand.

VALUE OF A SINGLE VOTE.

IT MAY CHANGE THE WHOLE COURSE OF AMERICAN HISTORY.

One Vote Way Down In Switzerland County Made a United States Senator, Admitted Texas to the Union, Brought on the Mexican War and Made Taylor President—A Moral For This Year.

Every few years we read of the "one valuable vote" in Indiana that elected a member of the legislature, whose one vote elected a U. S. senator, Mr. Hannigan, and whose vote in the senate brought on the Mexican war and gave us California, Arizona, New Mexico, etc, etc. We copy the following from the Indianapolis Sentinel, and give it to our readers as a reminder of our DeKalb vote, that of Mr. Shoemaker, that we have given before, and which happened in the same election, that of 1844.

Daniel Kelso was the Democratic candidate for state senator in Switzerland county. David Henry was the Whig candidate. The Democrats were in a minority in the county.

At the term of court preceding the election a young man was indicted for shooting to kill a false friend who had basely betrayed him in a love affair, and had sought to ruin his reputation by slanderous reports. Kelso defended the young man.

He secured the acquittal of his client, who, although poor in purse was rich in gratitude, and who promised that he would spare no pains to repay the generous attorney for the valuable services he had rendered him.

But when election day came around the young man was bedridden with a dangerous fever. He determined, however, to go to the polls and vote for the man who had saved him from the penalty of his unlawful act.

Medical protests and parental objections were alike unavailing. It was two miles to the voting place, but the sick man could not be deterred from undertaking to reach the polls, and late in the day his friends yielded to his persistent request.

The bed, with the pleading patient, was placed on the wagon and driven to the polls. Unable to leave his bed, the ticket was taken from his trembling hand and deposited in the ballotbox before the watchful eyes of the wearied voter, and then his attendants hurried him back home. But the seal of death was on his brow and that night his spirit passed away.

When the votes were counted to ascertain the result of the election it was found that Kelso had been victorious by one majority. The sacrifice the young man had made to cast his vote had not been in vain. He had given his life for the effort, but Kelso had been elected by that one vote, and a singular coincidence of important events started on their strange course.

Kelso took his seat in the senate of his state and it became the duty of that legislature to elect a United States senator. The Democrats had a meager majority of the two branches of the legislature.

Tilman A. Howard and Oliver Smith were the candidates. The latter was sure of his election, for his party was in the majority. But to the surprise and indignation of the Democrats Kelso announced his determination to never vote for Smith under any consideration.

He refused to be bound by the rules of the caucus, but proclaimed his fealty to his party and asserted that he was ready to vote for any other Democrat that might be named, but for Smith—never.

He succeeded in getting another member named Hoover to stand with him.

For many days and weeks the weary voting went on as required by law. Each report of the ballot showed: Howard, 74; Smith, 74, and Hannigan, 2,

The senate was at that time, as now, composed of 50 members and the house of 100, making 76 the necessary number of votes to elect, but which number neither of the anxious aspirants was able to secure.

Edward A. Hannigan was a brilliant young man and Kelso selected him as his candidate, without his favorite's knowledge or consent, in the beginning of the prolonged contest.

Every effort to bring Kelso over to the Democratic caucus nominee only strengthened his stubbornness. Day after day he continued to cast his vote for Hannigan, and stand as an immovable barrier between Smith and the coveted senatorial prize.

At last he pronounced his ultimatum, and announced that the tiresome farce of daily voting in the same manner should cease, or he would cast his vote for the Republican and break the existing deadlock. His resolution reconvened the Democratic caucus, and Kelso arose and delivered one of his flaming arguments in favor of his friend Hannigan, and by his persuasive powers, as well as his stubborn opposition to Smith, succeeded in getting the 74 members to come to the support of Hannigan, who was duly elected United States senator the ensuing day.

The following year a fierce controversy took place in the senate of the United States over the admission of Texas into the union. Her admission was finally secured by one vote, and that vote was the vote of Edward A. Hannigan of Indiana.

Smith declared that he would have voted against the admission of the "Lone Star" state if he had been chosen in the place of Hannigan, and thus the one vote that had been cast for Kelso among the wooded hills of Switzerland county by the dying voter led up to the admission of Texas into the Union, from which resulted the war between the United States and Mexico and the making of many illustrious fields of battle, on which the valor of American soldiers was displayed in dazzling brilliancy to an astonished world by the splendor of their wonderful military achievements.

The value and importance of a single vote was never more fully displayed in the history of elections, and never has an individual ballot been followed by greater or grander results than are shown to have emanated from that one vote, cast at the sacrifice of a human life at the little voting precinct in the remote corner of one of the smallest counties in the state.

To Our Subscribers.

Since the prospect of poor crops caused by the wet spring of 1892, we find that many of our subscribers have been allowing their subscription to get behind. Those back one year then, are back three years now, and as the years go by, the sum grows larger, till it is harder to pay. Even people we know are in good circumstances have allowed themselves to fall behind in this way, until our subscription accounts have fallen to the lowest ebb we ever had them, even in the days when our list was much smaller. Now, we wish to urge every one owing us on subscription more than a year to make an effort to settle it. This condition of things cannot be made a success. It works against you, as well as against the COURIER, and it is for the interest of both, that we urge you to attend to this before it grows larger. Come in and see us. If you cannot come, send by some one, or by letter. There are not many who are unable to spare a small sum each year to pay for a paper. Let us have a settlement every year, No man can carry on a business that costs as much each week and month, as it does to run a paper, unless his patrons pay promptly. THE TRAMP STOLE UMBRELLAS.

But a Plucky Auburn Lady Objected and Weary Wanderer Gives Hers Up Under Protest.

MEASLY, mangy and muddy, a tramp rested his overburdened legs last Friday evening, by squatting on the top of a barrel of refuse in the rear of one of our business rooms. He was not only very tired, but he had also that "tired feeling" that comes of a large jag not very evenly loaded on. So he sat and meditated. He had got hold of some pieces of meat and other odd parcels in his meanderings through town, and these he had stuffed into his garments in various places, chiefly in the locations where pockets used to be. The spirit of rest inclined him to remain, but the edge of the barrel was rather sharp for one with a delicate cuticle and heavy jag, and so, the counter spirit of unrest called on him like a policeman's voice, to "move on." So, shifting skillfully on his unpleasant resting place, he managed to slide off onto the ground and straighten part way up. Then he tried to go. But though the spirit was willing the flesh was weak, and it took several different wiggles of several degrees of eccentricity to get the right sort of move and keep it up. But he got off at last, and in a sort of dazed way wandered out into the world again, or at least he was trying to do so. Turning north on Jackson street, at last, he was headed for the outer borders. It happened just at this minute that the ladies of the Presbyterian church were holding a nickel social at John L. Davis' residence and one was looking out at the window as Weary Wanderer approached His extremely uncertain gait attracted attention, and just as he was in front of the door, something fell from his pocket. He tried to pick it up and after several uncertain jabs at the sidewalk he grabbed the package and after a deal of fussing, he got it into his pocket. Just then he seemed to spy the umbrellas on the porch, for as it was storming the ladies had each deposited one of these articles outside the door. The tramp staggered up to the porch, as if coming in, but the door was slammed in his face. He caught up an umbrella and started off The lady who was looking out noticed it and called attention to the theft. Mrs. Mollie Nusbaum ran out onto the porch, and seeing her own umbrella missing, started after the tramp, determined to recapture it or know the reason why The tramp started off at a faster pace, but being somewhat unsteady on his legs and the lady very much in earnest, she overtook him just after he had turned west around Mike Hebel's residence corner. She demanded her umbrella. With a drunken stare, the fellow said, "Which is it? She caught hold of the one she knew was hers, and jerked it from him. He muttered some rough, drunken stuff and went on, seeming to be glad the lady had not given him the thrashing he deserved. In the meantime, there was excitement among the ladies who were watching the conflict. But they all agreed that their friend was equal to the emergency, and cheered her as she came back with her property. (We might remark right here that this mangy tramp can vote, and the lady cannot. Our readers can draw their own conclusions.) After leaving the scene of his defeat the Weary Wanderer reeled on. When he passed Charles Eckhart's residence, another umbrella tempted him to break a commandment. In fact, we believe he tried to steal the "northwest precinct" clean. But the marshal was informed of his doings and went up and put a stop to it. Mr. Baker allowed him to slumber off his jag on the silken couches at the lockup, and next morning opened the big door for him and said "Shoo!" giving him three minutes to leave the town behind. As he left his hotel without registering and refused to give Mr. Baker the name he was honoring, we are unable to send him down to fame in the columns of the COURIER, except as Mr. W. Wanderer.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist church at Rives Junction she was brought down with pneumonia succeeding lagrippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interuption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottles free at Robbins & McCord's drugstore. Regular size 50c. and $1.00. 1

The One Important Vote.

MR. J. A. BARNS:

I see in COURIER No. 45, also in Fort Wayne Journal of November 1, a sketch of what a single vote did in the year 1844. And in order that history may not overlook the truth as I understand it to be in regard to that most wonderful vote, which seems to be attributed by the Ft. Wayne Journal to a voter in Switzerland county. I, at this date, wish to state the facts in regard to the matter, as I think one or two of the members of the election board are yet living, and in order to sustain what I am about to state as facts, I would refer such to the Journal of the Legislature of Indiana as organized in said year. Now if I have a proper conception of facts, the last vote counted which gave a majority in the legislature is the vote that should be entitled to be called the wonderful vote from which so much good has emanated. That said vote, I claim, was cast by my father, Henry Shoemaker, and was his first vote in the state. Now, I will repeat the history of that vote as I know it. My father emigrated from Pennsylvania, consequently was often spoken of by the Yankees as "the Dutchman. I, at the time, was but twelve years old, but I will very nearly give the names of the election board. They were, Pharez Blake, Isaac Smith, Isaiah McClish, —— ——, R. G. Daniels. The latter is still living. So father went to the election and the board gave him a ticket. He asked them for a knife or scissors to cut the tickets apart (as he was accustomed to do in Pennsylvania). The board gave him one or the other and he proceeded to cut the tickets apart, then such as he wanted to vote for he folded together and handed to the board, who received the same with a very cunning grin and placed them in the ballot box, and when the ballots were counted out they came to "the Dutchman's" vote and threw it out, and the Yankees made a neighborhood giggle of "the Dutchman's" vote. Madison Marsh and Enos Beal were the candidates for representative of Steuben and DeKalb counties, and when the votes were counted, it was found that there was a tie vote. Some one was at Angola and told of the Dutch democrat's vote being thrown out. It was not long till Dr. Morse, of Angola, came to inquire of father, who told him the facts in regard to the ticket. He returned and in a few days Madison Marsh and Morse came and saw some, or all, of the board, learned the facts and served notices on the board for taking their depositions at Auburn, which was done, then carried to Indianapolis. There Henry Shoemaker's vote was counted as valid, which elected Madison Marsh representative, who voted for Hannigan, who was elected by only one vote. The rest of the "Dutchman's" vote is the history of the world. I truly hope with the foregoing facts the truth of the wonderful vote will be settled in history, as anyone by looking over the records at Indianapolis with the above can easily arrive at the truth. I subscribe myself the son of said "Dutchman."

Probability Than Japan and China Will Seek the Good Offices of Our Country—Western Bandits Hold Up a Train—Nuns in Our Public Schools.

JEALOUSY.

Foreign Countries Do Not Like the United States to Take the Part of Mediator.

Washington special: Japan has not as yet accepted the offer of the United States to act as mediator in the war between China and Japan. Lengthy cablegrams are passing, however, between the Japanese capital and Washington, with the prospect that a final decision will not long be deferred. A cable from the Japanese authorities was received, asking for more explicit details. A lengthy answer was sent, giving not only the decided details, but adding figures that it is believed will show to the Japanese Government the desirability of the arrangement. China has already formally notified Secretary Gresham that she will join Japan in acknowledging the independence of Corea and will also pay a cash indemnity. The amount she will pay is not specified. It is felt in official circles that the gravity of the action taken by the United States is not yet fully realized by the public, as it contemplates a foreign policy to which the Hawaiian incident is said to be trifling in comparison.

Should Japan and China accept the United States as mediator, it will close the greatest war since the Franco-Prussian conflict, and this country will for the first time occupy a commanding position in deciding Asiatic questions which have heretofore had the attention of European powers only. At present the European powers are endeavoring to reach an agreement among themselves by which they will forcibly intervene. They feel that their interests are so much more extensive than our own, that they are entitled to a voice in the settlement, and the apprehension that some of these powers may suddenly make a bold and decided move is likely to cause Japan to speedily accept our offer of mediation if she really cares to end the war at this stage and place her interests in the hands of a nation which she knows to be disinterested.

WESTERN BANDITS

Hold Up and Successfully Rob a Train.

Monett (Mo.) special: Train No. 1, on the St. Louis and San Francisco railway, was held up at a small station named Verona, five miles east of this city, by two masked men. The affair did not occupy over twenty minutes, and the amount secured by the robbers did not exceed $400. The bandits boarded the train as it stopped at Verona, and as the engineer pulled the throttle to start the train he was confronted with two Winchesters and given orders to go ahead until he was told to bring the train to a halt.

Half a mile out the train was stopped and the engineer compelled to get down from the cab and walk back to the express car. Then he was told to order the express man, Dolph Chapman, to open the door. Chapman did as requested, recognizing Engineer Stevenson's voice. The robbers immediately covered the express messenger with their guns and compelled him to give them the packages that were in sight. Engineer Stephenson was then marched back to his engine and ordered to pull out. The robbers departed in a northerly direction. A posse of citizens is pursuing the men.

Bold Burglars.

Three men masked and heavily armed, entered the bank at Sylvan Grove, Kan., demanded the money and got it; the bandits placed the money in a grain sack and were preparing to mount their horses when the cashier shot one of them in the back. The fellow was able to mount, however, and rode some distance before he fell to the ground, weakened from the loss of blood. The other two halted and rather than see their comrade fall into the hands of the posse which was in pursuit, each put a bullet into his body, killing him outright. Posses are scouring the country in all directions. The robbers are thought to hail from Russell County.

Nuns Can Teach in Our Public Schools.

Pittsburgh special: Justice Dean of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court, has handed down an opinion in the case of John Hysong et al. vs. the school district of Gallitzin borough, an appeal from Judge Barker, of the court below, who refused an injunction to prevent nuns from teaching in the public schools dressed in the garb of their order. Justice Dean affirms Judge Barker's decision in his opinion, which is very lengthy.

The St. Louis Launched.

The first of the two steamships built in this country for the International Navigation Company, was launched from Cramp's shipyard, Philadelphia, in the presence of President Cleveland, members of the cabinet and a large throng of people. Mrs. Cleveland stood sponsor for the vessel and christened it the St. Louis, after the metropolis of Missouri.

Nail Works Resumed.

At Martins Ferry, Ohio, the Laughlin Nail Works, which were closed over two months ago, has been placed in full operation. About 600 men and boys are employed.

Going to Liberia.

A party of twelve negroes reached New York, Tuesday, on the steamship Kansas City, from Savannah, Ga. Their objective point is Monrovia, Liberia, where they expect to found a colony drawn from the negroes of the South.

A Fatal Hunt.

At Huntington, Ind., Bert Anson, a young man, while hunting was fatally injured by the premature discharge of his gun.

Awful Slaughter.

Pittsburgh (Pa.) special: A disastrous collision between a passenger and a freight train, resulting in the loss of six lives, occurred at Rosen Steel Siding, 103 miles east of Pittsburgh, on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. The trains were the Chicago express No. 5, westbound, and the first section of eastbound train No. 64, a fast stock train. The freight train had a time order to reach Pine Grove against the passenger train. Engineer Bush disregarded this order and this caused the accident.

A Connellsville special says that ten or twelve passengers are reported killed at Rosen Steel siding, on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and that the first coach was smashed to splinters and later the wreck took fire. The special also states that the dead bodies of the railroad employes had not been recovered.

AN EXPLOSION.

Three Workmen at Huntington, Ind., Suffer Horrible Death.

A frightful explosion occurred at Huntington, Ind., and resulted in the death of three men and the injury of many more. The dead are: John Hartman, Norton Keefer, and John Flynn, all married. The explosion occurred at the Flint Creek sewer, which crosses the entire city from northeast to southwest. The employes were just going to work. Probably 100 men were in and around the ditch on First Street. Some of them had built a fire on the bank and were thawing out a fifty pound box of dynamite. There was a thunderous crash, and the entire city was shaken. Keefer, Hartman, and Flynn were nearest the fire. Hartman was literally torn to pieces. His body was lifted into the air 200 feet and fell on a Market Street sidewalk a square away. His legs were blown off near the hips, both arms torn off, his head half torn away and the body completely disembowled. One of Hartman's feet were shot through the weather boarding of Frank Windle's residence. Keefer was not killed outright. His body dropped into the sewer. After he was taken out he recovered consciousness for a moment, but died on the way home in the ambulance. His death was caused by shock, no bones being broken. Flynn's legs were both broken, his arms broken in several places and his head crushed. He lived several hours. Every house within ten squares was damaged. The residence of Marion Wilbur was totally destroyed. The building was blown to pieces. Mrs. Wilbur was in bed and was thrown out upon the floor, but escaped without injury.

TRADE WILL GROW.

People Expect It and That Will Help Some.

Dun's Weekly Review of Trade says: Business has been waiting the greater part of the past week, and the elections are expected to give it a sharp stimulus. Whether men are right or wrong in expecting better things, the fact that they expect them, does tend to made things better. In speculative markets there has been scarcely any movement, and nothing favorable to holders. Wheat is 2 cents higher, but with receipts of only 3,845,032 bushels, against 6,598,477 the same week last year, there is little encouragement, because the stock in sight are far beyond previous records. Atlantic exports have been 552,327 bushels against 947,553 last year and prices advanced ¼ cent, but there is scarcely any confidence that the present prices, low as they are, will be maintained. Corn has fallen about 2 cents notwithstanding the fact that Western receipts were only about 1,017,693 bushels against 2,494,647 last year. Atlantic exports were only 72,732 bushels against 662,334 last year, for statistics have little effect when the supply is believed to be so far short.

OUR GOVERNMENT

May Be Asked to Act as Mediator Between Japan and China.

Washington special: As a result of negotiations now pending, it is confidently believed that the United States will very soon be asked to mediate between Japan and China with a view to permanent peace on a basis satisfactory to both countries. It can be stated positively that the United States has declined to join with the European powers in any arbitrary intervention to force a settlement. But while unwilling to act in any arbitrary manner, either individually or jointly with European nations, the representatives at Washington have been given to understand that the good offices of this Government will be gladly exercised to secure peace in case such is their expressed wish. Naturally Japan insists that China shall take the initiative in any negotiations looking to a restoration of peace, but that she is entirely willing to accede to any reasonable proposition is not doubted.

MOTHER AND SON

Killed in an Accident on a Railroad Crossing.

A mother and her young son met a terrible death about five miles south of Wadsworth, Ohio. Mrs. David Epling, wife of a well-known farmer, and her 11-year-old son, were driving toward Doylestown. As they neared the Gate House crossing of the C., L. and W. Railway, which is one and a half miles from Doylestown, they saw north-bound train No. 36 approaching. They whipped up the horse and endeavored to cross the track. The buggy was upon the rails when the train struck it. The vehicle was competely demolished and its occupants thrown many feet. The boy was instantly killed. The mother lived about one hour, but was unable to state how the accident occurred. The bodies were removed to Doylestown. Mrs. Epling was a comparatively young woman and was well known in that County. The horse she was driving was not hurt.

A LOUISIANA MOB.

Hangs One Murderer and Shoots Another to Death.

On the night of Nov. 6 Thomas A. Keys, of the firm of Keys & Penson, merchants, of Lloyd, La., was murdered in his store by being knocked in the head and having his throat cut from ear to ear. After a thorough investigation Charley Williams, a half-breed Mexican and noted desperado, who has figured in numerous murders, robberies, and shooting scrapes, was arrested, along with a colored man, and put in jail. The black confessed to being with Williams the night of the 6th, and that Williams cut Keys' throat. It is supposed that the colored man first brained Keys with an ax, and then Williams cut his throat. The other night a mad crowd went to the jail, hung the black man and shot Williams to pieces. It is reported that the former made a full confession.

Bald of the Cook Gang.

Two of the Cook gang plundered the town of Lenapah, I. T., and left a bloody trail behind. They entered the town without any attempt at concealment, and terrorized the citizens until they had carried out their plans of robbery. Milton, a brave young man, who attempted to stop them when they were riding away, was shot and instantly killed. Another man whose name cannot be learned now, is reported seriously wounded. Both were with a small force of citizens, who hastily armed themselves and tried to prevent the escape of the bandits. The robbers were mounted on fast horses and heavily armed.

A Clumsey Counterfeit.

The secret service is in receipt of a photographic counterfeit ten dollar note, check letter B, act of July 14, 1890, series 1891, J. Fount Tillman Register of the Treasury of the United States, portrait of Gen. Sheridan. The seal, a small scalloped one, numbers have been colored maroon instead of the carmine of the genuine. The portrait of Gen. Sheridan is very dark, the features of the face being almost undiscernable. All the coloring of the note has been unskillfully applied with a brush and the paper is scratched with red ink to imitate the silk threads in the genuine.

Disaster at Montreal.

Montreal special: The seven-story stone building at the corner of Craig street and Place D'Arms Hill, owned by the Montreal Street Railway Company, collapsed recently. Twenty-one men employed on the building were buried in the ruins, of them three are known to be dead, while a number of others are badly injured. But fifteen of the men have thus far been accounted for, and it is feared that the other six are dead in the ruins. The dead thus far taken out are: Pierre Monetti, Regis Pouge, and Joseph Marquis.

Blacklisting to Be Tested.

William Hallet of Terre Haute, Ind., formerly a conductor on the Chicago and Eastern Illinois road, and who was discharged for joining in the strike last June, has sued the company for $25,000 damages for being blacklisted. He alleges that the defendant, verbally and in writing, prevented him from getting employment with other roads. It is specifically alleged that a letter was written October 20 which prevented him getting employment with the Wabash road.

People Alarmed.

City of Mexico special: The volcano of Colima is in active eruption and the people in the immediate vicinity are greatly alarmed as streams of lava are pouring down the sides of the mountain, the flames being visible for many miles. They have abandoned their houses. Police stations in this vicinity report a total of fifteen deaths as the result of the late earthquake and the subsequent eruption.

Lynching in Georgia.

Lee Lawrence, the negro who assaulted Mrs. Polk in Jasper County, Georgia, was taken to Monticello. He had been sentenced to be hanged November 30. The neighbors of the injured woman were not satisfied, however, and taking the negro from the officers carried him to the outskirts of town and hanged him, riddling his body with bullets.

Burned to Death.

At Flint, Mich., Willie Grinnage, aged 10 years, burned his leg by a stove. He then got a piece of cloth and saturated it with kerosene oil, was binding it about his leg when he again came in close proximity to the stove. The cloth caught fire and the youth had his legs, arms, and chest burned to a crisp before the fire was extinguished.

A Hunter Scalped.

In Boone County, Indiana, Mark Booker and Elza Klinger were hunting. Booker had just scared a rabbit out of a log and yelled, "There he goes!" when Klinger turned and fired at Booker. The charge tore away about four inches of his scalp, leaving the skull bare and making a wound which cannot heal.

A Cloud Burst.

The New York Herald correspondent in Venezuela sends word that a cloud burst near Valenci, in that Republic, has killed 150 persons and damaged the coffee and other crops to the extent of half a million dollars. Houses have been leveled, bridges washed away and traffic generally suspended.

Fatal Cave-in at Wabash.

By a cave-in of a ditch north of Wabash, Ind., a man named Conn was instantly killed and J. W. Porter of Huntington, was fatally injured. Porter was buried deep under the earth and was not released for thirty minutes. The other two escaped with slight injuries.

Chopped Himself.

Mike Quigley, a noted desperado, committed suicide at the workhouse at Canton. He cut his abdomen open, cut his throat and then hanged himself to his cell door with a sheet. He was allowed the use of a razor, because none of the prisoners would shave him.

Lost Both Ears.

Joe Farmer and John Donnelly undertook to open a can of powder with a pick in the new Howells mine near Massillon, Ohio. Both men were horribly burned and bruised. Farmer lost both ears.

The Pipes Leaked.

W. H. Wellman and wife were frightfully burned at their residence in Columbus, Ohio, in a gas explosion caused by a leakage of pipes. The injuries will not prove fatal.

The Emery Wheel Burst.

An emery wheel at the Irondale Steel Works, Anderson, Ind., broke while revolving. One of the pieces hit Ed Kline in the head, inflicting fatal injuries.

Terrorized by a Lion.

The people in the vicinity of Washington C. H., Ohio, are in a state of terror by the appearance of an African lion in that neighborhood.

WHO GETS THE VOTES

CONTEST MAY BE IN THE NEW STATES.

Utah, Arizona and New Mexico, with Their Six Senators, May Determine the Political Complexion of the Upper House—Political Classification of Governors.

Point Overlooked.

According to a Washington correspondent a point that has been overlooked in computing the political complexion of the next Senate is the admission of Utah with two United States Senators. The act of the last session of Congress admitting Utah provides that in March, 1895, the constitutional convention shall be held. On the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November of that year the constitution is to be submitted to the people, and if ratified and found by the President to be in accordance with the act he will issue a proclamation admitting it as a State. The act also provides that a representative of the LIVth Congress shall be elected at the same time the vote is taken upon the constitution, also that State officers and a legislature shall be chosen, and that if the constitution is ratified the legislature shall immediately meet and elect two United States Senators.

As there is about a month from the time the election is held until the LIVth Congress meets, there will be ample time to have all the formalities complied with and Utah proclaimed a State in time for its Senators and Representatives to participate in the organization of the next Congress. This would make in all ninety Senators, and, as the new Senate now stands, the politics of the Utah Senators would cut an important figure.

Another probability which arises is the admission of both New Mexico and Arizona, which may be accomplished in time, so that four more Senators would participate in the organization of the next Senate. Bills have already passed the House for the admission of both these Territories. The Senate Committee on Territories has reported them favorably to the Senate and they are now on the calendar. Senators of both parties have been urging their passage, and it is more than likely that neither party would oppose them, because of the effect it would have upon the elections, as the people are anxious for their admission and would resent opposition by any party to that end.

It is, therefore, quite likely that the battle for the control of the Senate will yet be fought out in Utah, New Mexico, and Arizona next year. The admission of these new States would make a total of ninety-four Senators, and any party to control would need forty-eight for a majority. With the Vice President the Democrats could control the Senate with forty-seven Senators.

Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, Montana, North Carolina, Virginia, Washington, and West Virginia will elect Governors in 1896.

VOTE OF THE HOUSE BY STATES.

The Situation of the House If Called On to Elect the President.

The Constitution of the United States provides that in the event of failure of a candidate for President to obtain a majority of all the votes in the electoral college then the choice of President shall be made by the House of Representatives.

The House, however, does not vote in the usual way in passing laws; the vote is taken by States, each State having only one vote. How that vote shall be cast is determined by each State's delegation, the majority ruling. In case of a tie in the State delegation, then the vote of that State does not count.

In the event of the next Presidential election being cast into the House the Republicans will have the choice of President, as will be seen by the following lists. Twenty States have elected Republican delegations:

Colorado,	New Hampshire,
Connecticut,	North Dakota,
Delaware,	Oregon,
Idaho,	Rhode Island,
Indiana,	South Dakota,
Iowa,	Vermont,
Maine,	Washington,
Michigan,	West Virginia,
Minnesota,	Wisconsin,
Montana,	Wyoming.

In the following States the majority of the Congressmen in each are Republican:

California,	Nebraska,
Illinois,	New Jersey,
Kentucky,	New York,
Maryland,	Ohio,
Massachusetts,	Pennsylvania.
Missouri,

This makes a total of 31 out of the 44 States, leaving the Democrats 13 States, or a Republican majority in the House of Representatives on a vote for President of 18 States.

TO SETTLE THE WAR.

Cleveland Willing to Act as Arbitrator Between China and Japan.

Tokio advices say that United States Minister Dun has communicated to the ministry the substance of an important cipher cable proposition received from Secretary Gresham at Washington. It suggests that if Japan will join China in requesting the President of the United States to act as a mediator in settling the war he will exercise his good offices in that capacity. A similar proposition has been sent to China. The cable was presented to a special meeting of the ministry. The proposition presents a grave question to the ministry. They are urged on one hand by the popular sentiment to continue the war and crush China; on the other hand European powers are threatening to intervene. As between these conflicting influences the ministers find great difficulty in reaching a decision on the American proposition, but the prospect is that it will be accepted. It is learned that four days before France made a proposition to the United States to intervene.

It is the belief in Washington that China wil readily accept the mediation of the United States, and Japan will do so after she is assured of the indemnity China will yield. China has already gone so far as to notify this government that it will join Japan in recognizing the complete independence of Corea, which would result in the Japanese evacuation of Corea and the re-establishment of the former reigning powers. China has also made known to this Government that it was willing to pay a cash indemnity to Japan. It has not stated how much the indemnity will be, and this promises to be a serious problem.

Japan does not intend to be robbed of the fruits of her victory by any indefinite arbitration Therefore she, in effect, asks: "What do you propose doing, and how much will you give? If you will offer enough, then we will accept the United States as the intermediary to execute the agreement. But we will not go into any blind arrangement by which a third party will determine the whole basis of peace." Being a victor, Japan does not intend to go in on even terms with the vanquished.

Mr. Gresham's cable inquiries to China therefore contemplate, first, China's acceptance of the United States as a mediator; second, a statement of China's exact offer to Japan of the terms and amount of cash indemnity she will pay. As to the amount of cash it is not likely that Japan will accept the mediation unless $100,000,000 is offered. This will about represent what Japan has actually spent on the war. She does not ask for exemplary or punitive damages as the term is used in law, but merely the damages which will reimburse her outlay. When France paid Germany an indemnity for the Franco-Prussian war it represented not only what Germany had spent, but exemplary or punishment damages as well. Japan does not expect this, but she will insist on actual damages. This is roughly figured as follows:

Japan had a reserve fund of $25,000,000 on hand when the war began. This has been spent. Then she negotiated a war loan of 50,000,000 yen (a yen being about equivalent to our dollar). This makes $75,000,000 actually used in the war. Besides this Japanese citizens have contributed large sums. The total outlay, including obligations incurred, is estimated at about $100,000,000. The extra session of the Japanese Diet resulted in a law authorizing a war expenditure up to $150,000,000, but this limit has not been reached.

YERKES' BIG MANSION.

Chicago Street-Car Magnate's New York House Nearly Completed.

The residence which C. T. Yerkes, of Chicago, has been building for several years at the corner of Fifth avenue and 68th street, New York, is very nearly completed, and will be one of the handsomest houses in New York. The material is brown stone, the design is simple and dignified, and the mansion when completed will represent the very highest type of residential architecture. It is said that the house will cost $2,000,000 when it is finished and ready to live in, that the designs for decorating Mrs. Yerkes' bed-room and bath represent an investment of $50,000, and that a quarter of a million will be expended upon the walls and ceiling of the lower floor. But there are now no signs of such extravagance.

CHAS. T. YERKES' RESIDENCE, NEW YORK.

The building has a solid and permanent look, and what impresses one most is the choice material used and the absolute perfection of every detail. The walls are firebrick and stone, and the floors are of steel, tera-cotta and cement, surfaced over with marble and mosaic. There is no wood used in the construction except the cabinet work about the doors and windows, and it is thought Mr. Yerkes couldn't burn it down if he tried.

CHAPTER IV.—Continued.

An hour afterward he had safely located his charges at the house of a friend of Mme. Jardine's, where she was thankful to rest, had shared the hospitable meal, and was lingering uneasily about, shy and strange, when some one remarked that the English monsieur ought certainly to climb to Signale, and see what, all travelers knew, is one of the finest views in Switzerland. But there was no one to show him the way, except two little boys, sons of the house, and Silence.

A sudden impulse, as of a man who is determined to have his way, conquered Roderick's diffidence.

"Madame, will you trust her with me? It is not Swiss fashion, I know, but in England I should be thought good knight enough to deserve the charge of any fair damsel, if she would so far condescend. Mademoiselle ma cousine?"

Silence looked up, looked down, and smiled. The mother cast a penetrating glance at the two, so innocently happy in one another's company.

"The good God makes it, not I," muttered she to herself. "My daughter, you, Adolphe, and Henri will show the view to our dear English cousin. He will acknowledge there is scarcely a more beautiful sight to be seen in this world."

He did acknowledge it, when, having climbed the steep hill alone—for Silence mounted merrily with a big schoolboy at either hand—he saw the whole lake from Geneva to Montreux, with its girdle of mountains from Mont Blanc to the Bernese Alps, spread before him like a picture, as still and as clear.

Suddenly, though the gray, cloudy sky, the sun broke out, poured down a torrent of light, like a cataract of molten gold, into the lake, then spanned it with a bridge of rays from shore to shore.

"Oh, how lovely," cried Roderick, and both of them, shading their eyes from the dazzling glory, stood watching it, till the descending sun, suddenly touching the verge of the mist, plunged into it and disappeared.

"Is all ended?"

"Not quite," said Silence; "wait a minute more." And through the death-like grayness which had fallen instantaneously upon mountains, lake and sky, he perceived a gradual, wonderful change. "See!" She spoke in English, and touching him—the lightest possible touch, yet it thrilled through every nerve—pointed to the mountains nearest the sunset.

What a sight! Slowly a faint color, like a blush, crept over the "everlasting snows," deepening more and more as it spread from summit to summit along the whole range of Alps.

"It looks as if an angel were stepping from peak to peak with a basket of roses."

"Yes," Roderick answered, also beneath his breath; "only their color is not like earthly roses. We shall never see the like again till we see it in paradise. Please God we may!"

As he said the we deliberately, markedly, intentionally, he saw a faint trembling in the sweet mouth, firmly closed though it was; and coming a little closer he took hold—not of her hand, but of her dress. Like a revelation which some will no more believe than a blind man could believe in that wondrous sight before these two, there came into him—perhaps into both—the love, the one passionate, yet pure and perfect love, of one man for one woman, which, if both have strength to accept and be true to its blessedness, makes all life a joy, and death itself no longer a fear. For even then, standing close beside her, with the mere touch of her garments and the stirring of her hair giving him a rapture indescribable, Roderick could think of death of his own dead. Strangely enough, the first words he said were:

"Oh, if my father could but have seen this sight!"

"Perhaps he does see it, and mine, too. They were friends when they were young."

"Yes. And we? We must be friends all our lives."

"I hope so."

"Friend was the only word he dared to say—a wiser word than he was aware of; for friends may be lovers some day, but lovers who are not friends will cease to be both.

The "colorization" slowly faded, and that cold, gray, deathly shade which comes so suddenly after sunset here began to creep over the sky and lake and mountains—even over Silence's face; till there came into those far-away eyes of hers an expression—Roderick could have imagined it that of an angel standing by a sealed grave, but looking upward still, waiting for the resurrection day.

A few minutes after Roderick followed Silence down the hill, which she descended as she mounted, with a boy on either hand, and all went back to tea—that simple Swiss tea which he had long since began to prefer to the grandest of Richerden dinners.

Dull, to a certain extent, was the journey home, for Silence had neither eyes, ears nor thoughts for any creature except her mother, and Roderick, in the reaction after strong suppressed feeling, half fancied himself de trop. Shrinking into a corner, he scarcely spoke to either, but soothed himself by taking the tenderest silent care of both mother and daughter till he deposited them at their own door.

That kindly "Bon soir!"—"Au revoir!"—just the ordinary adieu which had taken place at the door so many times; this time it was almost briefer than usual, for he saw Silence was glad to get her mother home; and he, too, was not sorry to rush away, afraid lest the strong self-repression of the last few hours might give way and betray him by some unguarded look or tone. So he hurried down the stairs, having seen them safe, but scarcely looked at either, scarcely even answered Mme. Jardine's gentle "Au revoir!"

"Au revoir!" How strange it all felt afterward.

CHAPTER V.

He scarcely slept all night—a new experience to his young, healthy nature; or, sleeping, woke fancying he was falling down a precipice, or Silence was falling and he was leaping in after her—all those vague troubles in which dreams carry out the prominent idea of the day. He rose gladly, but only rose to vexation: no letter from his mother, but one from the family lawyer, saying Mrs. Jardine had been consulting with him, and that she altogether objected to her son's denuding himself of his patrimony, the only absolute property he possessed, and giving it to unknown foreign cousins, who might "make ducks and drakes of it" in no time.

Spite of his annoyance Roderick could not help laughing. The idea of Silence and her mother as extravagant spendthrifts, bringing to ruin the Jardine inheritance, was too comical. He had not been lucid enough, he must write again and explain—what? If he told his mother the whole truth, that he had deliberately made up his mind, and meant, if by God's blessing he was fortunate in his love, to bring her home as a daughter-in-law this portionless Swiss girl—probably the very last daughter-in-law she would have expected or desired—how would she take it? What would happen?

In this serious business light he had never before regarded the question; and though it perplexed him, it gave him also a delicious sense of reality. His nebulous passion was resolving itself into the clear, steady glow of a fixed love, a love meant to end in those solemn duties of married life which all good men are born for, and good women, too; and which neither sex can shirk or set aside, or by any sad fate lose, without involving a certain incompleteness in character and destiny.

"Yes; I must write again to my mother," he said to himself, and even took up pen and paper. But how to write? That tender confidence—from babyhood to manhood—which sometimes exists between mother and son, had never existed here. "She would not understand."

Nevertheless, in writing to his mother, as he at last did write, determining to pay her the just filial respect of telling her his intentions before he made the offer of marriage, he explained that he had no idea what Mlle. Jardine's answer would be; and he begged her to keep his secret entirely to herself until he could tell her the result.

"So the deed is done—thus far," said Roderick to himself, as he posted the letter, and then braced his courage for the next step. For he judged rightly—no English wooing, trusting to sweet chance and the impulse of the moment, would do here. He must speak to the mother first. Until he won her approval he could never be to Silence more ostensibly, than a common acquaintance.

Trying, but inevitable. So that very evening—giving the gentle invalid a whole day to recover from her fatigue—he determined to present himself, and ask formally of Mme. Jardine permission to woo her daughter. Perhaps he might then be allowed to tell Silence himself all she was to him. And when she understood it all—the first look, eye to eye; the first kiss, mouth to mouth; the open, mutual recognition of a love that was to last them through life and go with them, please God, into the life eternal—at the bare thought of such bliss the young man felt dizzy.

He half staggered as he walked, and at last stood quite still at the solitary street corner—the street he knew so well—to command himself before he attempted to mount the stair. Though it was still early all was dark—the quiet darkness of a mild November night, with the stars shining overhead. Roderick looked up at them, trying to gain a little quietness too.

So standing, he scarcely noticed a gentleman, almost as self-absorbed as himself, till they ran right against one another.

"Pardon, monsieur," said the kindly voice of M. le Professeur Reynier. "What, Monsieur Jardine—can it be you? How fortunate! I was just coming to pay you a little visit."

Roderick muttered some civil answer, but did not offer to turn back. Indeed, he had come to that point when he felt he could not turn back—could not defer his bliss, or fate another hour for any mortal creature.

"I—another time I shall be most happy. Now—I have an engagement."

"Pardon again," said the gentle old man, touching the arm of the younger one; "but—were you going there?" He pointed up the stair which he had just descended. "Indeed, you must not go."

"Why not?" said Roderick, angrily, then recollecting himself, added, with a careful indifference: "Your daughters told me Madame Jardine was not well; I was going to inquire for her."

"Mon Dieu!" cried M. Reynier, clasping his hands with a gesture which we unemotional islanders would smile at as "so un-English." "Mon Dieu!—then monsieur does not know?"

"Know what?"

"She is dead—she died this morning."

"She—who?"

"Madame Jardine, alas! It was quite sudden—there was nobody beside her but her daughter. Quite peaceful, too—without any suffering; and the doctor had dreaded much one day, for it was disease of the heart. Her child's only thought now is thankfulness for that. Poor Mademoiselle Silence! Madame Reynier is with her now—she, or my girls, will not leave her until the interment."

Here the old man fairly gave way, took out his pocket-handkerchief, and wiped his honest eyes. Roderick wrung his hand in the silent English way—no more. He was utterly stunned.

"It can't be true, it can't be true!" he said in English, putting his hand to his head.

"Monsieur is very much shocked, I see; and no wonder. I, too, can scarcely comprehend or believe it. But we must leave all in the hands of the good God. He will take care of her, as she said, poor child! even though she is left an orphan, without any dot, without a penny in the world. But I will not detain monsieur any longer. Bon soir! Au revoir!"

The very words she had said to him in her brief adieus, only two nights before on the stair-head—the sweet soul who was now beyond the sun." Roderick's heart gave way, with a great sob, like a child's.

And then he choked it down and turned away. To no human being would he betray himself—not now.

"Monsieur," and he drew the old man's arm through his with a tender courtesy. "You will allow me to accompany you home. Then perhaps I may be honored by hearing a little more—perhaps assisting you in the arrangements you will have to make. Remember, I am a relative—I believe, the very nearest relative now left to Mademoiselle Jardine."

"Yes, yes, I am very grateful. And, she, too, poor child! she cannot but be grateful, also, for the monsieur's goodness. Let us go."

So they went together—the old man talking volubly and cordially, the younger one replying in little more than monosyllables, through the already empty streets of the little town.

CHAPTER VI.

There are two kinds of love—man's love; I am not speaking of woman's just now. The first born of sunshiny selfism, basking in pleasure, shrinking from any pain, either its own or that of the object beloved, which is, for the time being, itself; the second, strong as tender, while equally capable of pleasure, fears not pain, either personal or vicarious. Sorrow, suffering, the helplessness of failing powers, only rouse in it a deeper passion, a fonder care. Happy the woman who has found a resting-place there! She need fear neither sickness nor sorrow, old age or beauty's decline. Living, however sad and broken a life, she will be cherished to the last, and dying, she will be mourned eternally.

Such a love, though he knew it not at the time—indeed, he hardly knew himself at all, so suddenly and strangely had circumstances developed his dormant nature—such a love, in all its devotedness and intensity, had taken possession of Roderick's heart for his "cousin" Silence.

He did not attempt to see her—that, of course, was impossible; and he felt capable of making any sacrifice or exercising any self-restraint for her sake; but it seemed as if only to be near her, throwing over her the faithful shield of his silver love, was at once a consolation and a protection

He walked the streets till all lights were out, except that solemn one which marked the death chamber; and then, with a blessing on his lips and a prayer in his heart—young man as he was, Roderick was not ashamed to pray—he departed.

Next morning, at the very earliest hour he could venture without exciting suspicion, he was at the Reyniers' door, to hear all that was to be heard concerning Mlle. Jardine, and to volunteer any help that he delicately could to the professeur—who, he saw, was a little perplexed and unpractical—in arranging the details of the funeral. Nay, it being a pelting wet day, and the old man very rheumatic, he succeeded in being allowed himself to go and choose the grave, in the pretty cemetery which all the Neuchatellerois are so proud of, and where he had been taken by Mlle. Jardine herself one sunshiny Sunday afternoon, almost the first Sunday he came to the town.

Coming back to the Reyniers, he explained all he had done in the most matter-of-fact and unemotional way. He seemed suddenly to have gained the power of unlimited self-restraint, for her sake. To do everything for her that could possibly be done, and never to let her know it, was all he desired.

The third day was arranged for the funeral. The only communication that passed between him and Mlle. Jardine had been a request he had sent by Sophie Reynier, that he might be allowed to attend it, in right of relationship, and Silence sent him word back that she was "grateful."

This done, there was no more to be done for her; nothing but to wander restlessly about through the long dreary winter day, and wonder how she was bearing it. The very hardest bit to him of all this time was those few hours when, having done all that was possible for him to do, and having no excuse for inflicting himself further on the Reynier family, he went back to the hotel, and tried to lead his ordinary life there—eating, drinking and sleeping; for he had no young men's small vices; he thought billiards dull, and detested smoking. He could not, this night, even read, and it was not until he woke next morning that it occurred to him he ought to write again to his mother, who would just be receiving his letter of two days before.

A PATCHED PONY.

Tricky Indians Make Use of a Rabbit Skin.

"These stories of Indian troubles in the Southwest remind me of an experience that I had down in New Mexico," said Henry Davidson, of Albuquerque. "I was new to the region then, and although I had heard all sorts of strange tales about the trickiness of the Indian, I did not know that he was as shrewd as I afterward found him to be.

"I wanted a pony for some reason, and I communicated my desire to a friend of a crowd of the greasy citizens of the outskirts. The next day I was besieged with offers. I looked all over the lot and picked three or four to make my selection from. After several hours I settled on an animal that I thought to be in the pink of condition and form. I took him for a good round sum and a trade thrown into the bargain.

"I rode home on the animal. As I got into my quarters I noticed that the horse appeared to be uneasy, as if suffering from injury. As I live, I found that a patch of skin several inches square had come off his back. I looked into it and discovered that the horse was raw there, and that he had been patched up with rabbit or some other skin for the time being. Those Indians stood by each other, too, for I could never locate the scoundrel who had swindled me. I have since concluded that they were all wrong, and that had I bought the outfit I would have found the oddest assortment of patched horses that it was ever the fortune of a white man to look upon."

Two Kind of Pies.

There is a certain class of restaurants, very numerous in the lower part of New York and on the avenues, where the bills of fare announce: "Pies, all kinds, 5c; home-made pies, 10c." The name 'home-made pies' is supposed to be very attractive to people whose taste is offended by the machine-made pie turned out by the bake shops, and who have memories of the pies their mothers used to make. In serving the pies the experienced waiter rarely asks a man what kind he will have. He simply sizes up his customer, and decides how much money he wants to spend on his luncheon, and brings the 5c or 10c pie accordingly.

But the name "home-made pie" is only a name. Both kinds of pie are made by the same factory, composed of the same materials, flavored with the same spices and baked in the same oven. The only difference is that the so-called "home-made" is bigger than the other. There are a great many bakeries in New York that furnish pies to restaurants, but the greater mass of the pies eaten in New York restaurants are made by two big pie factories. They make pies, and nothing else, and employ big crews. These two factories manufacture more pies than all the small bakeries in town put together. Only a few of the high-priced restaurants bake their own pies.—New York Mail and Express.

Novel Exhibition.

Vienna will have a novel exhibition in the winter of 1895-'96, the arrangements for which have just been made. It is to be a collection of all objects of interest connected with the Congress of Vienna in 1814-'15, which redivided Europe after the fall of Napoleon. It will include portraits of the persons who took part in the Congress—Metternich, Talleyrand, Wellington, Castlereagh—and other distinguished men of the time; paintings of the chief occurrences during the session of the Congress, and reproductions of the fashions, uniforms, court dresses and furniture of the day.

MANY of the early wood cuts employed in books were painted over by hand, after the printing had been done.

POET AND AUTHOR.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES A GIFTED MAN.

Last of the Literary Lights of New England and One of the Most Remarkable Men of the Century—His Sweet and Well-Ordered Life.

"The Last Leaf" Falls.

In the death of Oliver Wendell Holmes one of the most loved and respected of contemporaneous Americans passed away. During the greater portion of a life which extended over 85 years Mr. Holmes had been in one or another way prominently before the public. He was editor, essayist, novelist, poet, lecturer, professor and doctor. In all of these departments his light shone brilliantly. He was a man of broad vision, of ample equipment, of joyous, sanguine vitality, sympathizing with the march of thought and standing in the front ranks of advance.

With his departure the last of the literary lights of New England has disappeared. Dana, Emerson, Longfellow, Hawthorne, Whittier, Curtis—these, all sons of New England—are at rest, and now Holmes, "the last leaf upon the tree," has gone to join them. The same year he was born there came into the world Darwin, Lincoln, Gladstone, Tennyson and Poe. Each of these attained distinction that is given few men. Each performed a notable part in the world's work and all, with the exception of Gladstone, have gone to the shoreland.

A Puritan by descent and a New-Englander by birth, Oliver Wendell Holmes was one of the most remarkmen of the century. He knew the world, and whether in essay or novel or poem or speech he gave to his fellowmen the inspiring watchwords of labor and hope. The gentle light of his refined humor illuminated his every written word, and his unquestioning faith in the final prevalence of right is manifested in every passage. The world is the better and happier because he has lived in it, and to-day in every civilized land there is poignant sorrow over his demise.

His Career.

Mr. Holmes was born in Cambridge, Mass., Aug. 29, 1809. In 1825 he entered Harvard and graduated in 1829. In discharge of a patriotic act he gained his first distinction. It was then proposed to break up the old frigate Constitution, which in many a memorable battle maintained the glory of the American flag. Holmes wrote "Old Ironsides" as a protest against the vandal act and the Constitution was saved. The "Ironsides" ranks among the best of Holmes' poems. Following are the words:

Aye, tear her tattered ensign down;
Long has it waved on high,
And many an eye has danced to see
The banner in the sky;
Beneath it rang the battle shout,
And burst the cannon's roar;
The meteor of the ocean air
Shall sweep the clouds no more!

Her deck, once red with heroes' blood,
Where knelt the vanquished foe,
When winds were hurrying o'er the flood,
And waves were white below,
No more shall feel the victor's tread,
Or know the conquered knee;
The harpies of the shore shall pluck
The eagle of the sea!

Oh, better that her shattered hulk
Should sink beneath the wave;
Her thunders shook the mighty deep,
And there should be her grave:
Nail to the mast her holy flag,
Set every threadbare sail,
And give her to the god of storms,
The lightning and the gale!

In his early studies Holmes devoted himself to law, but soon discarded it for medicine. To this profession he adhered all through life; but while medicine furnished him with occupation, literature was his love, and as a poet and author he became known to the people.

In 1839 Mr. Holmes became professor of anatomy and physiology at Dartmouth College. In 1847 he accepted the professorship of anatomy at Harvard, a position he held until 1882. He wrote forty-two works on medical subjects, and lived to see many of his early ideas of medicine, which at first met with condemnation, accepted by the leading physicians of the world. One of his famous epigrams, which raised a storm of indignation, was that if all the medicine in the world were thrown into the sea it would be all the better for mankind and all the worse for the fishes.

The "Autocrat."

In 1857 Holmes began his series of papers known as "The Autocrat of the Breakfast Table," in the Atlantic

HOLMES' BIRTHPLACE, CAMBRIDGE, MASS.

Monthly, and they met with a wonderful popularity. In them he discussed, with genial wit and sound philosophy, the social, moral, and intellectual topics of the day. They were followed by "The Professor at the Breakfast Table" and "The Poet at the Breakfast Table." Among the "Autocrat" series appeared such gems as "The Chambered Nautilus" and "The One-hoss Shay." Flight after flight of song followed. There were poems of nature and of the heart, patriotism, pathos—all the gamut of expression, each note touched with faultless skill. Perhaps one of the sweetest poems he ever wrote was that entitled "The Last Leaf," and which Poe pronounced the most perfect extant.

I saw him once before,
As he passed by the door,
And again
The pavement stones resound,
As he totters o'er the ground
With his cane.

They say that in his prime,
Ere the pruning-knife of Time
Cut him down,
Not a better man was found
By the Crier on his round
Through the town.

But now he walks the streets,
And he looks at all he meets
Sad and wan,
And he shakes his feeble head,
That it seems as if he said,
"They are gone."

The mossy marbles rest,
On the lips that he has prest
In their bloom,
And the names he loved to hear
Have been carved for many a year
On the tomb.

My grandmamma has said—
Poor old lady! she is dead
Long ago—
That he had a Roman nose,
And his cheek was like a rose
In the snow.

But now his nose is thin,
And it rests upon his chin
Like a staff,
And a crook is in his back,
And a melancholy crack
In his laugh.

I know it is a sin
For one to sit and grin
At him here;
But the old three-cornered hat,
And the breeches, and all that,
Are so queer!

And if I should live to be
The last leaf upon the tree
In the spring,
Let them smile as I do now,
At the old forsaken bough
Where I cling.

It was not until late in life that Holmes was known to the world as a writer of fiction. In 1860 "Elsie Venner" appeared, and seven years later came "The Guardian Angel." In 1885 he published "A Mortal Antipathy." When lectures were popular, forty years ago, Mr. Holmes was in demand, and his refined wit and philosophical treatment were everywhere appreciated.

His home life was sweet and beautiful. His wife, who died in 1888, was a woman of grace and culture, and will be remembered by many as one of the leaders in the work of the Sanitary Commission during the war. His eldest son, Oliver Wendell Holmes Jr., is a Justice of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts. The second child, Amelia Jackson Holmes, who died in 1881, was a writer of marked ability, and a leader in many benevolent works. The third and last child, Edward Holmes, is a distinguished lawyer.

Rattled Him.

James Payn says that there was a queer resemblance between himself and another Trinity man. "Not only was I often addressed by persons who took me for him, but people used to ask, apropos of nothing, whether I knew So-and-so. I remember making a considerable impression upon a chance passenger in a railway train on the Cambridge line, who was staring at me rather hard, by suddenly observing: 'No, sir; I do not know Mr. So-and-so.' It had been the very question he was going to ask me, but my anticipating it seemed to him so uncanny that he got out at the next station."

A FRENCH BONNET.

BOSE WAS MOTHERLESS.

Maternal Attentions Were Supplied by Baby's Bottle.

When Bose was born he was a little ball of fluffy white and black fur. My, but he was just too pretty for anything! Bose's mother was a big St. Bernard that had taken several prizes at the Westminster Kennel Club's show, and the royal blue blood that flows in the mother's veins was transmitted to her fuzzy offspring, says the New York Journal.

Three days after Bose was born the mother dog died. Great was the sorrow thereat, and many the fears expressed over Bose's future. He was such a big little dog that he required a great deal of milk, and how was he to be fed, was the question.

Finally little Miss Dimple, the daughter of Bose's owner, suggested that her baby brother's bottle be given Bose, and at once it was done. Did Bose take kindly to his foster mother? You should have seen him! No baby in all the world took nourishment more greedily than did this same Bose.

ALECK, THE NEGRO.

He Is Probably the Oldest Resident of New York City.

A character who was born and has spent nearly the whole of his 107 years in the same place is of more than local interest. Such a one is "Old Aleck," a negro who has lived since 1857 in the Sailors' Snug Harbor in New York. Alexander Freeman is his proper name and he is the oldest resident of the metropolis—that is, he has lived in New York longer than any other person. In spite of his great age, his claim to which is well authenticated, he is still hale and hearty and does as much work and smokes as much tobacco as any of the old salts in the institution. Says he: "I was born in Murray street and remember New York City when it did not extend further that. When I was a boy the city was nothing but like the country, full of trees and creeks and the like. We used to fish in a little stream that ran down about where James street is now."

"OLD ALECK"

He was born a slave, but at 21 became free and shipped as a sailor. He has seen nearly every part of the navigable globe and is full of interesting stories.

AN American syndicate is negotiating for the purchase of a volcano in Mexico. Bets of two to one are offered that some enterprising American will gobble up the privileges of navigating the canals of Mars.

Napoleon's Shrewdness.

When the great Napoleon was urged to conquer China, he replied:

"Better let China alone. The Chinese do no harm at present. If we conquer them we shall teach them the art of war. They may then raise and equip armies, buy or build navies, endanger France, and perhaps all Europe."

THURSDAY.....NOVEMBER 15, 1894.

TEXAS went democratic on governor, about 40,000.

LEIGHTY beat McNagny 2468, carrying every county but Allen.

NORTH DAKOTA went republican by about 6,000. Idaho about the same, and Montana also.

U. S. TREASURY statement shows an increase of the money in circulation of about 17 millions.

MONTANA voted on the proposition to move the state capital from Helena to Butte. But Helena won.

SEVERAL famous democratic congressmen were defeated, including Bland Wilson, Holman and Hatch.

THANKSGIVING Nov. 29, so say President Cleveland and Governor Mathews. No one objects except the turkey.

OWEN, who got the nomination away from Breckenridge in Kentucky, beats his republican opponent by 101.

POPULISTS united with the republicans in several southern states, and so managed to get a number of congressmen.

READ our full election returns. If you are a democrat, it will not hurt you much, and if a republican, it will do you a sight of good.

COXEY, the idol of the great populist party, received about 9 000 votes for congress, standing however, only third in the list.

JERRY SIMPSON, Gov. Lewellyn, of Kansas, and Gov. Waite, of Colorado, all noted populists got left. Jerry talks of moving to Indiana.

NEW YORK and Brooklyn voted to consolidate with the other cities and towns about them. This will make one city of about three millions.

W. C. B. HARRISON, not long ago, editor of the Hicksville Independent, has been elected joint representative from Elkhart and Kosciosko.

CALIFORNIA went democratic on governor, by about 2,000. It is the only northern state that did this. All the other state officers are republicans.

BUSINESS will revive as soon as it is seen that the new republican House cannot change our democratic tariff laws under a year and a half or perhaps never.

SANDERS, the commonwealer "general" who stole a train out west, will be tried for his crimes. How did Bliss forget to have this eminent populist speak in Auburn?

THE fusion candidate for governor of Nebraska got a pluralty of nearly 3,000. But at latest reports, the legislature is republicans, which insures a republican U. S. Senator.

SENATOR HILL was beaten for governor of New York, by Ex-Vice-President Morton by 153,838 The republicans elected the mayor of New York City by a majority of 44,265.

NEBRASKA went "fusion." The democrats and populists had fused on a state ticket. The legislature stands in the same way, and may elect either a democrat, or a populist to the U. S. Senate.

SATURDAY evening a west bound Lake Shore freight was looted, near Osceola, several hundred dollars' worth of different sorts of goods being thrown out of box cars and taken away. Tramps did it.

THE democratic victory in Allen county, is complete. It is glorious:" This queer little shout comes up from the Ft. Wayne Journal. For a county that has a normal democratic plurality of 3,000 to 4,000, last week's pluralities of 700 to 1400 must be very exhilarating.

Now let congress get down to work and pass the laws for free raw material, and a law coining a limited but generous amount of silver dollars that shall be legal tender. Such a course will do the democratic party more good than all this congress has done so far.

DEMOCRATIC principles and policy, are not condemned by the recent adverse election. There principles and policies are so favorable to the people that republicans will not dare to disturb them. But the people took this way, and this time, to rebuke a few unworthy servants.

IN INDIANAPOLIS, about 400 tickets had the first name only, stamped, the parties evidently supposing they were voting a straight ticket. And 117 blank ballots were found in the boxes. The voters evidently did not want to vote, but did not want it known, and so went in and pretended to vote.

William Hodge.

The untimely death of a promising young man, William Hodge, on Sunday last, cast a feeling of sadness over our city. He had been in poor health for some months, but it was hoped that skillful treatment would bring him through. But all was of no avail. Last week, he began growing worse, and about noon Sunday he breathed his last. His age was 26 years, 3 months and 24 days. The funeral was at his home, the residence of his father, on Monday, and he was taken to West Rushville, Ohio for interment. He was a young man of excellent qualities and good promise, and a large circle of young friends mourn with his bereaved relatives. The Young Men's Athletic Club attended his funeral in a body, he being an honorary member.

Address.....W. H. McIntosh

All the exercises we heard were excellent in their way, and it would be difficult to decide which had the greatest interest. We were especially pleased with the scholarly paper of Mae Rose, though we are told there were others of equal merit. Mr. McIntosh's address dwelt considerably, and properly so, on the struggles and burdens of building our several school houses. He paid a just compliment to the school board that had the courage under such difficulties to secure for us the present new and beautiful building, and spoke of the financial ability shown by them and their helpers in the business management by which it was accomplished. Nor did he forget to say a good word for the liberality of the taxpayers, who assumed this additional burden. And as he spoke of those two classes of our people, the visitors could not but recall the compliment to Sir Christopher Wren in Westminster Abbey: "If you would see his monument, look about you." For our new building is not only convenient, but beautiful. When we have more time we will speak of it more in detail. All present, and there were many, were highly pleased with what they saw and heard. At the close of the regular exercises, the visitors looked over the different departments of the new building. Little Aileen Garwood came into the Grammar room and we secured from her a part of the songs she had given in her own room, which none in the new building had heard. The visitors wish to thank her and her mother for this extra treat. All went home feeling that we ought to visit our schools more frequently and keep up warmer and friendlier relations with all, pupils, teachers and officers connected with it.

A BARREN VICTORY.

Republicans Will Gain Nothing from the late Landslide.

Republicans, when the returns came in, and they had about got the earth, as far as votes were concerned, were exceedingly jubilant. But since then they have had time to stop and study over it. What good will the victory do them? Let us see.

They have an enormous majority in the House of representatives. But the democrats still have the senate. The present democratic House, and its democratic partner, the U. S senate, will have a solid session of three months, in which to complete any reforms still needed. It is to be hoped, they will get down to business and do this. Then on March 4, next, they go home. In December of next year the newly selected republican House will meet for the first time. In all these thirteen months, the new democratic tariff will be on trial. If it proves what we hope it will, the good results will begin to show, and no one will be caring much to repeal it. And if a repeal should be attempted and a bill pass the House it would stick fast in the democratic senate, and even if the senate were republican, it would be killed by the veto of a democratic president. And this condition would last till Cleveland goes out of office. Nothing could be passed over his veto, as neither House could show a majority of two thirds for any bill.

So in the meantime, the people will have a chance to see the good results of democratic reforms, and will not care to kick them over, even if they could, and we have shown they could not, if they wished. The big republican majority in the House, however, would be held responsible for any delay in legislation, or any disadvantages that might come into the conditions of the people, and they would be complained against, just as the democrats were under Cleveland's first term, when a republican senate prevented the democrats from passing any laws. Thus the republicans elected their president in '88. So, it is quite likely the democrats will elect the president in '96

There is another reason for believing the democrats will elect the next president. The political pendulum has started to swinging, and will likely continue to swing back and forth. In 1872, the democrats were utterly overwhelmed in that great landslide. Four years later, in '76, Tilden swept the country for the democrats. In 1880, just four years later, the republicans elected Garfield. Four years after that, the democrats elected Cleveland. Four years later, Harrison beat Cleveland in 1888. But again the pendulum swung back, and four years later, in '92 Cleveland beat Harrison by as big a landslide as that which has now overtaken the democrats. The only difference in this present swing of the pendulum is that it came back at us a little sooner, being pushed along more rapidly by the unusually wild panic and hard times. It hit us hard, but now it will swing back and hit the other fellows, making its trip against them in the same time it did its recent trip against us. This gives us the president and House of representatives in 1896, when if they had not hurried up and shortened the swing of the pendulum it would have gone against us in '96 instead of '94. It is reasonable to believe all these conditions will exist and all these changes happen, just as regularly as they have happened. So with the exception of the loss of our state, and local tickets, we have little to regret. Our present misfortune may prove a blessing. For had we carried this middle election. Nothing in the future is more certain, than that we would have lost the next president. The delayed pendulum would have come back at us in '96 instead of '94.

In other words democracy don't need the doctor. We are not as sick as we thought we were.

WATERLOO.

The sick are generally convalescing. J. O. St Clair is on the gain. Edward Braun had one of his attacks, but not so severe as usual, and he is better. Geo. Braun was sick with quinsy but is now nearly well. His little girls also who have had diphtheria are recovering. At one time in their family of six, five were taking medicine.

At the regular quarterly election of officers last week Tuesday evening of the Ladies' Minerva Club, the results were as follows: Mrs. Josephine Willis, president; Mrs. Olive C. Jackman vice-president; Mrs. Olive Showalter, secretary; Miss Mattie J. Maxson, treasurer; Mrs. Emma Plum, critic The next meeting is at the home of Mrs. Fancett.

Col. Eli and Maria C. Lilly have invitations out in which they "send love and greeting to their kinsfolks and ask them to join in celebrating the twenty fifth anniversary of their marriage At their home in Indianapolis, 520 Meridian St., North, on the twenty third day of November, eighteen hundred and ninety four," The invitations are beautifully printed in silver. Mrs Maria C. Lilly is a niece of Mrs J. U. Winslow, of Waterloo.

We are having a very long squaw winter; the sky is grey and looks heavy with snow. It snows every day now, and if it does not hold up pretty soon there will be no time for Indian summer in November. Possibly the skies are weeping frozen tears on account of the result of election last week.

Court.

Most of the time for a week has been spent on the Nodine case, which seems to be about settled, as the commissioners appointed to dispose of the property are discharged. The case of Susie Prosser against the Wabash railway for death of her husband, Adam Prosser; she gets $1,500. The case on during Monday and Tuesday was to see if Mr. Humbarger, of Newville township, is of sound mind. Judge Powers goes out of office Friday and Judge Penfield begins next Monday at Angola.

The entire top was torn off. Virgil had but lately bought it. The boy that thinks a thing like that is cute should be made to pay for a new hat.

Harriet E. Hall, of Waynetown, Ind., says: "I owe my life to the Great South American Nervine. I had been in bed five months from the effects of an exhausted stomach, Indigestion, Nervous Prostration, and a general shattered condition of my whole system. Had given up all hopes of getting well. Had tried three doctors with no relief. The first bottle of the Nervine Tonic improved me so much that I was able to walk about, and a few bottles cured me entirely. I believe it is the best medicine in the world. I can not recommend it too highly." Sold by Robbins and McCord druggist Auburn Ind. 34tf

Ft. Wayne papers tell of an explosion of gas at the Westminster Seminary in that city last Tuesday. The lady cook, was in the kitchen, and hearing some noise, as of escaping gas, in a closet, lighted a match to look for the leak. The explosion blew her over, and set fire to her clothes, The other helpers, including Miss Edith Masters, the girl who used to work for Mrs. D. A. Hodge of this place, ran to help the woman, and in trying to put out the fire and save her life, were terribly burned themselves. The woman is still alive and Miss Masters was soon out of danger. As this is the school where Pearl Kelley attends, it will please her friends to hear she was not in the accident.

Bro. Willis comes out in a card of thanks last week, to the voters who supported him. He especially thanks the papers of the county, for courteous treatment during the campaign. And we wish to remark, that they have treated him with more courtesy than he would have extended to anyone of them had the situations been reversed. He also hopes they won't "roast" him when he gets into the legislature. Well, that depends on whether he tries to repeal any of the wholesome laws the democrats have enacted. His other wish is "people will not expect too much of him." We assure him he is in no danger in that regard People who know him will be very conservative as to their expectations.

ACCORDING to the system of conducting elections in Norway it takes some time to choose members of a new Parliament. The voters ballot for many delegates and these elect the members. Primary voting began in the kingdom nearly two months ago, and is now about completed. The returns indicate that the radicals, who favor the separation of Norway from Sweden, will not have a working majority in the new Parliament, so that the question of a dissolution of the union remains an open one.

SURGERY's discovery of a way to obliterate facial blemishes has given the European detective forces a great deal of difficulty in locating well-known criminals. By these operations the whole character of the facial expression is sometimes changed by a few deft jabs of a lancet. The wound heals in a very short time, and in most cases can never be noticed. The criminal fraternity are not slow to take hold of this knowledge, and, in consequence, the descriptions in the possession of the detectives cannot always be depended upon.

THE interviews with a convicted Chicago murderer whose death sentence was commuted to imprisonment for life are rather suggestive of the sensations of a man waiting for death. The criminal said: "No one can possibly describe them. It is a continual, awful torture. If the people only knew the agony of it there would be no murders committed, no matter what the provocation might be. I didn't sleep a wink night before last. Whenever I shut my eyes I could see the gallows over that corner of the jail, and every footstep near my cell sounded like the drop when Higgins went off." It may be doubtful whether society depends or has the right to inflict this "continual, awful torture" even in revenge for the commission of the irredeemable crime of murder. But, on the other hand, it is still more doubtful whether society desires to dismiss the convicted murderer in a state of idiotic bliss. Asked how he felt when the news of commutation of his sentence arrived, the murderer—whose crime was the most heinous, since its victim was a woman—replied: "Never was happier in my life. To think I am not to die is to give me the greatest pleasure I ever experienced." It may well be doubted whether this is really the purpose for which the capital law exists.

THERE is a general impression that the humidity of the air is greater in the woods than in the open fields. This is contradicted, however, by the result of observations recently made in Germany. It was found there that the humidity, both relative and absolute, was slighty greater in the open than in the woods, and this was true equally in the morning and in the afternoon. As to the temperature of the air among the trees, it was a trifle higher than in the open in the morning, and in a more marked degree in the afternoon.

IT is interesting to note that the salary of the late Lord Chief Justice Coleridge was $40,000 a year, while that of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States is $10,500. The Lord Chancellor receives $50,000 a year while in office and a pension for life of $25,000 The Lords of Appeal get $30,000, and all other judges $25,000. The income of the British Attorney General is at least $60,000 a year, against a salary of $8,000 for the Attorney General of the United States. The latter figure is the salary of our Secretary of State, while all the English Secretaries of State get $25,000 a year, and, after serving for a certain time, they are entitled to $10,000 a year for life.

MICHIGAN has a law requiring foreign corporations doing business in the State to file copies of their articles of incorporation and to pay a franchise fee to the State. Of course the act was passed for the purpose of holding to local accountability railroad and insurance companies and similar corporations of other States operating in the State. Recently there was an attempt to enforce the law and collect the franchise fee against manufacturing and mercantile companies doing business under a charter and selling goods in Michigan by agents with samples. The Supreme Court has held that the law does not apply to such corporations, and that no franchise fee is required if they do business in the State. The decision is on the same grounds as those holding that statutes of States requiring a license fee from commercial travelers and peddlers is an interference with interstate commerce.

OUT West the train robbers took several bags of gold from an express car; and in Virginia other robbers captured $150,000. These incidents followed somewhat closely the two cases in which the companies, having got wind of intended robberies, not only defeated the robbers, but turned the tables upon them, and either killed or captured all the members of two bands. Those successes of the companies have, therefore, not thrown much of a damper upon this industry; and perhaps it was too much to expect that they should do so. Express companies are sending across the country at all times safes containing large sums of money, practically undefended. No doubt the robbers have their confederates in the service of the companies. They know to the littlest details all the facts—just how many dollars go by a given train; where that train will be at a certain hour, and what men have charge of the money. They stake their lives against the money, and generally win; for the employes are men of peace, without any incentive to make themselves targets. An unguarded railroad car full of ready money is the weakest point in the whole financial system of the country. What are the express companies going to do about it?

Electrical Wire Fences.

"Once when I was traveling between Dallas and Austin, Tex.," said an electrical salesman, "I noticed a roughly clad man in the same car with me. He had the appearance of a miner, but on making his acquaintance I was surprised to learn that he was an electrician. It seems that he made a specialty of installing battery and induction coil outfits for charging wire fences with electricity. Down in Texas there are thousands of miles of barbed wire fence on the ranches which serves the purpose of keeping the cattle in bounds quite successfully, except where there is a stampede. Then they go through the fences like a landslide. This electrician found, so he said, that a fence charged with eleccricity would stop even a stampede. He told me he had fixed up over 500 miles of fence, but that the interrupter he used wore out too fast, and he was going East to see if he couldn't get better apparatus for charging fences.—"Electrical Review.

NORWAY'S SEABOARD AND ITS MANY ATTRACTIONS.

Customs and Resources of a Far Distant Country Which Has Little Besides Its People and Its Scenery—Grand Future and Glorious Past.

An Iron Coast.

The climate of all Western Europe, so far as the influence of the sea extends inland, is so tempered by the balmy waters of the Gulf Stream during both winter and summer that the population do not seem to be in special need of going elsewhere to escape either the heat or the cold. In England, when the summer temperature rises above eighty degrees, the heat is considered oppressive; in winter when the thermometer sinks below twenty degrees the cold is regarded as exceptional. But like the inhabitants of other regions favored in the matter of climate, the people take advantage of the first warm wave or the advent of frost to rush off to localities where the climate conditions are more favorable to comfort. In winter the Riviera, Italy, Greece and North Africa are crowded with refugees from the cold of Russia, Germany, France and Great Britain, while in summer, travel turns again to the north, and thus the ebb and flow of the human tide continues as regularly as the migration of the birds.

The nearness of the Norway coast to Great Britain, and the convenience with which it may be reached from any part of Western Europe, have, during recent years, made it an exceedingly popular resort among tourists. Steamship lines have been established along the coast to carry the tourists from place to place: like magic, hotels have sprung up at every point where the least attraction is offered to the tourists; dealers in natural curiosities, in photographs, books of descriptions, and the thousand and one articles of which the traveling public stands constantly in need, do a thriving business, and all Norway is rendered richer by the summer travel.

It has need of something to enrich its population, for, with the exception of Switzerland, there are few countries on the globe that have fewer resources of wealth than the narrow strip of coast, which seems to have been created merely for the purpose of making Sweden an inland country. But Norway is by no means so small as it looks. Over 1,000 miles from north to south, nearly 300 miles from east to west it is double the size of Missouri, containing more than 130,000 square miles of territory. In the case of a country which is one-fourth straight up and down, a fourth more too steep to climb, and most of the remaining half too rocky to cultivate, superficial area counts for little, for, as was once said in the case of the black-acre land of a Western

MANSION OF A LAPLAND FAMILY.

State, the more of it a man owns, the poorer he is. That this is almost literally true in the case of Norway may the more easily be seen when it is remembered that a European government, like every other, must have money, and, however poor the land may be, its owner must pay his taxes, and plenty of them, too, and if he cannot prevail on any one to buy the land, he must keep on paying indefinitely. If he cannot get his money out of the land, that is his misfortune. The Government of Norway is just as hard-hearted in such matters as any State or municipal government in the United States, and just as prompt at enforcing collections.

In one way or another the government of Norway manages to squeeze out of the people $12,000,000 every year in taxes, and, as may be naturally supposed in a country so poor, the inhabitants are kept busy in the effort to make a living and pay their taxes. But they manage to do both, though it must be confessed that, to people who live outside of Norway, their efforts in the former direction do not seem to be a brilliant success. But no one ought to starve with oats and barley, with eggs and butter and fowls and milk and reindeer meat in comparative abundance, and so the hardy Norwegians live, though it cannot be said that they get fat.

The contrary, however, may soon be the case, for thousands of tourists now crowd the coast towns of Norway, and the hotel-keepers and other classes that live on the traveling public are rapidly learning how that public may be fleeced out of its last dollar, and are acquiring a dexterity that will soon place them, in the traveling mind, on a plane of respect similar to that occupied by the innkeepers of Switzerland, France, and the tourist part of the Rhine. If magnificence of scenery were any justification for robbery by hotel-keepers, waiters, hack drivers, and others of that persuasion, the consciences of the Norwegians ought never to give them a moment's disquietude, for in no part of the world, save the north coast of Lake Superior, is there a grander spectacle than in almost any inlet on the Norway sealine. Some one has said all Norway is but one grand mountain after another, and to this statement any one who sails along the coast is forced to give in his adhesion. It may also be remarked that the seaboard is really only one inlet after another, for so numerous are the islands along the coast that it is possible in places to sail for many miles in the narrow passages between islands and the main land and rarely catch more than a glimpse of the sea without.

The islands are worthy of the name. Huge masses of rock rise from the sea, often 3,000 or 4,000 feet in perpendicular height; their summits have never been trodden by the foot of man. No attempt is ever made to ascend them, for the difficult and dangerous task would be utterly fruitless of result. From some of the Alpine peaks the prospect, for variety and beauty, is unsurpassed. For a hundred miles there is an alternation of mountain and valley, while far away in the dim southern distance stretch the sunny plains of Italy, dotted with the domes and steeples of cities, specked with the white marble villas of the nobility and gentry. A score of cities, every one famous in story and song, are visible at a single glance, while the beauty of the natural features of scenery, the scenery that created a furor of enthusiasm when pointed out by Hannibal to his dusky warriors from beyond the sea, and later drove Napoleon's soldiers wild, amply repays the fatigue and labor of the ascent. No such compensation awaits him who climbs a peak in Norway, for after the ascent, if it can be made at all, he sees to the north and south an endless succession of gigantic peaks similar to the one on which he stands, to the east are apparently boundless table lands, broken by an occasional peak, while to the west is the sea that has more than once been covered with the sails of the Norsemen, whose dread fame a thousand years ago spread so far and wide that even in the south of France the monks to their daily prayers added the petition:

A furore Norman orum Libera nos, O Domine.

So nobody tries to ascend the peaks, and, indeed, not a few are inaccessible, having not even a landing place for the smallest boat. Rising perpendicularly from the water, their bases have been tunneled by the buoy waves beating against them for thousands of years; the billows rush into the caverns with a sound like a boom of thunder, rush out again like a pent up flood, and with a force that no boat could withstand, so that, sometimes for miles, no spot can be found where even the nimblest sailor could leap in William Tell fashion from the boat to the shore. But the mighty cliffs and cone-shaped rocks that rear their heads among the clouds are not left in solitude, even though their tops have never been trodden by the foot of man. Millions of wild fowl of every kind have their nests among the crags, and fly to and fro in midair, suspended far above the range of the sportsman's shot. Ordinarily, almost unseen, save for one sailing out or lazily returning, fish laden, to its nest, no idea can be formed of their numbers. The discharge of a gun brings them out by thousands; the air is darkened with their numbers; the ear is offended by their noisy remonstrances against the invasion of their solitudes. When winter approaches, they gather and leave for the south in vast flocks.

AALESUND, A FISHING TOWN.

Every peasant in Central and Western Europe is familiar with the sight and sound of these aerial armies passing far above his head, and has learned by their movements to judge of the near approach of cold or warm weather. They are true tourists. All day long, with noisy clamor, they travel: at night, well aware of the danger, they descend in perfect stillness, feed and rest. A passer-by might walk within fifty feet of a thousand of them and not hear a single sound. They are not bothered with waiting for trains or making connections, or paying hotels or tipping the lazy waiters who do more waiting in the kitchen than at the table. For thousands of miles they travel, and the birds that spend the summer among the barren rocks of Norway pass the winter among the wild rice marshes of Central Africa.

The Norwegians they have left behind would be glad to go with them, for Norway is not over cheerful even when summer is at its height, and the sun wheels round the horizon instead of sinking below, but in winter the desolation becomes tenfold more apparent, and the limited resources of the inhabitants are taxed to the utmost to get through the season. More than one Arctic explorer has given a graphic picture of the horrors of a winter in the frozen north: but to the Norsemen every winter is an Arctic winter, and the inconveniences and suffering of which the explorers complain so bitterly are by him borne as a matter of course. To him a temperature of 40 to 50 degrees below zero does not seem excessively cold, for he is prepared for it. Well protected without by a dress of fur from head to foot, well provided within with an abundant supply of fish and oily food, his system defies the cold, and without injury he endures a temperature that would speedily prove fatal to the inhabitants of a warmer zone.

Whether it is that only the strong can live in such a climate, or whether the climate makes all who live in it strong, is a question that only those versed in such matters can answer; but certain it is that no country in the world produces better examples of the human animal than the Scandinavian peninsula. Tall, well formed, robust, the men of Norway and Sweden are capable of enduring almost any amount of labor and hardship. The soldiers of the Swedish and Norwegian armies average the tallest in Europe, and although during the last few centuries they have not had the opportunity to keep up the reputation they won when the viking ships were known and dreaded on every coast from the mouth of the Rhine to the mouth of the Tiber, they are still prepared to give a good account of themselves should the political necessities of their country ever again demand their services in war.

Their home life is as simple as could be imagined, for there are only two leading lines of industry in Norway—farming and fishing—and very often both are practiced by the same individuals, who, during the short spring and summer, do the heavy work of agriculture, leaving the lighter tasks to their wives and children, while in the winter they devote their time almost exclusively to the fisheries. The latter pay much better than farming, for the Norway summer is so short that only the quickest growing and hardiest grains, such as oats or barley, have a chance to mature at all. But oat cake and barley bread are good enough for the man who has never known anything better, and the Norway peasant has few dainties, while his style of living is on a par with his plainness of diet. His house is never luxurious, but one thing must be said in its favor, it is always comfortable, even in the coldest weather. It is often shared by his goats and reindeer, and as cooking, eating and sleeping are all done in the same room, the atmosphere is often of overpowering thickness; but to a Norwegian oxygen does not appear to be a necessity; he lives and thrives in air that can almost be cut into layers.

Ordinarily regardless of personal appearance, there is one occasion when every inhabitant of Norway must look fine, and that is on the wedding day. Even then, however, the distinction between the rich and the poor is very trifling, for in every church in the kingdom there are kept a set of wedding regalia and a silver gilt crown, for the use of those who have not the money to purchase a set of their own. The crown is a heavy affair, and by paying a small sum the poorest bride can, for a day, look as gorgeous as a queen. Many of these wedding crowns are 600 or 700 years old, and were worn by Norse brides at a time when the memories of the viking invasions were still fresh along the German Ocean, and there is therefore an odor of sanctity about these articles of personal adornment which renders their presence almost as necessary at a wedding as that of the preacher. In the rural districts of this peculiar country there still linger the traditions and legends which are found among the common people of every country in Europe; nor, any more than the Greeks or Italians, have they forgotten their glorious past. There is a great future before Norway and Sweden, and the evidence of a new national life is seen everywhere; in the cities, where modern structures are taking the place of the old-fashioned dwellings and offices; in the country, where men and women dress better, fare better and look better than did their fathers and mothers. The time may never come when the viking will again carry terror to France and England, but the day is near at hand when the Scandinavian powers will exert far more influence in the affairs of Europe than they have ever done before, and this broadening of their power will be due in no small degree to the improvement in the condition of their people.

They Are Men at Ten.

In Corea the boys are called men as soon as they reach the age of ten. They receive their final names at that age, and assume the garments of full-grown men, all except the horsehair hat, which they cannot put on until they have passed through a period of probation. Permission to wear the horsehair hat is the final act of transforming the small boy into a real sure-enough man—though he doesn't look it.

Such a short childhood may, at first thought, possess a charm for boys in our colder climate. But it will be quickly understood that making boys into men as soon as they are old enough to feel that they would like to be men is not a wise idea. The Coreans, although possessing a certain degree of a queer kind of civilization, are not a people to be patterned after. In Corea if a young man's parents are not rich, he can never hope to become so by his own efforts. And if he is not a member of a noble family he can never hope to reach an exalted position. As for courage, the Coreans have never shown much of that. The Corean men are not in themselves a good argument for a brief childhood.

All They Wanted.

While Lord Coleridge was on his way to Chicago, an interviewer, failing otherwise to draw him out, began to belittle the old country. Lord Coleridge bore it all patiently; finally, the interviewer said: "I am told, my lord, you think a great deal of what you call your great fire of London. Well, I guess that the conflagration we had in the little village of Chicago made your great fire look very small." To which Lord Coleridge blandly responded: "Sir, I have every reason to believe that the great fire of London was quite as great as the people at that time desired."

From Chambermaid to Actress.

"Clara Morris," recently remarked a Cleveland woman, "used to be a chambermaid in the house next door to my father's. We saw her daily—brushing, sweeping, and dusting, as is the habit of that craft. After a while we heard that she had gone upon the stage, and later that she was meeting with some success. We knew her then as Miss Heriot. It was not until Eisler took her in hand that she developed into anything remarkable, however. I wonder if she would remember me if I were to make myself known to her!"

ISSUED BY GRANT'S FATHER.

Curiosity in the Shape of a Check Owned by a Chicagoan.

An unredeemed check for 25 cents, issued by J. R. Grant, leather merchant of Galena, Ill., the father of General Grant, is in the hands of a Chicagoan, who values it, of course, and who could not be induced to exchange it for a thousand times its value, though the administrator of the estate of J. R. Grant should return and open up the concern's affairs. The accompanying cut is a facsimile of the check.

It used to be the circulating medium in a small way, this pasteboard check business. It was soon after the beginning of the war. That event favored the people with nothing but silver for currency. The nimble penny was not much in vogue, to use a social coinage. As the war progressed silver followed gold into seclusion, until the time came when a 5-cent silver piece was quoted at a premium, as were all silver pieces. A little later no silver was to be had. There was nothing of a monetary character less than a paper dollar, and the value of that was sometimes called in question. The business men found it necessary to make change. A customer did not always want to buy a dollar's worth at a store. It was at this time that the merchants agreed to issue pasteboard checks in denominations of from 5 cents to 50, and when a man had a dollars' worth of these he could redeem them at any store or bank in the town where they were issued if he didn't want to hold the checks or use them to purchase. J. R. Grant was in the leather business at the time, as above stated, and he with others issued the pasteboard currency. Previous to that condition of affairs postage stamps were taken for currency, but so stringent were the conditions of commerce later on that people held on to their postage. The check in question was issued when U. S. Grant was a clerk in his father's store, and it is not improbable that this identical bit of pasteboard may have been handed out to some customer by the man who afterward received the sword of Lee at Appomattox, and later became President of the United States.

HE LIVES IN A TREE.

The Curious Dwelling Place of an Eccentric Louisiana Man.

Among the lower branches of an immense white oak on the Calcasieu River, near Lake Charles, Louisiana, lives Tom Rogers, an eccentric old fellow who seems to enjoy life as much as if he lived in one of the most palatial houses in the country. His house, while necessarily constructed in a rambling and circular manner in order to obtain a suitable foundation for a chamber of comfortable size, shows ingenious design and much strength. So strongly and compactly is it built that it seems almost a a part of the tree, and there would be little danger of its destruction, except by fire or the uprooting of the monarch oak by a storm. It is several miles from any other habitation and is well adapted to the solitary life chosen by the strange old hermit.

He cultivates a few acres of land to meet his simple wants, and the adjacent river and forest afford him an ample supply of fish and game for food and to sell in the town market. He never leaves his retreat except when compelled by his necessities to sell farm produce and game to supply him with food and clothing. On his trips to town he avoids all conversation, and to the country round about he is a veritable enigma.

A Plain Fact.

The teacher in geography was putting the class through a few simple tests.

"On which side of the earth is the north pole?" she inquired.

"On the north side," came the unanimous answer.

"On which side is the south pole?"

"On the south side?"

"Now, on which side are the most people?"

This was a poser, and nobody answered. Finally a very young scholar held up his hand.

"I know," he said hesitatingly, as if the excess of his knowledge was too much for him.

"Good for you," said the teacher, encouragingly. "Tell the class on which side the most people are."

"On the outside," piped the youngster.

And whatever answer the teacher had in her mind was lost in the shuffle.

Was Too Conscientious.

Indigestion Cured

"I suffered with indigestion. Food distressed me very much. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla after meals, and before one bottle was gone I could eat heartily without distress. I have recommended Hood's Sarsaparilla to many. I never heard of its failure to cure. Recently our station agent had the grip. After he was able to get up he had a disagreeable sensation in his head. He said it felt as large as a stove, and he was unable to perform his duties. He took Hood's Sarsaparilla, and after using one and a half bottles he was fully cured. Truly, there is no humbug about Hood's Sarsaparilla." JOHN BENNETT, Sunman, Ind.

After Nineteen Years.

A young man walked up to Headkeeper Manley at the Zoo a day or two ago, and asked the keeper if he remembered him. He was frankly answered in the negative. "Well," said the young visitor, "I made your acquaintance nineteen or twenty years ago. My mother brought me to the Zoo one summer day, and we visited the monkey house. She held me up to the bars of the cage to hand one of the monkeys a knick-knack, and instead of taking that, the animal bit off the end of my finger." Here he showed one of his index fingers, the end of which was scarred. "Don't you remember that you bathed and bandaged the finger for me?" Mr. Manley recollected the incident, although it happened so long ago, and he and the young man had quite a talk over old times.—Philadelphia Record.

CHINA MUST SETTLE.

REPARATION DEMANDED FOR THE CHUNG KING AFFAIR.

Great Britian Insists that Taotai Sheng Be Degraded and that a Money Indemnity Be Paid for the Seizure of Japanese Passengers.

Chinese Soldiers Were Brutal.

The British officials in Shanghai have sent an ultimatum to the Chinese Viceroy demanding a settlement of the Chung King affair. The British demands are that Taotai Sheng be dismissed and degraded, the Chung King is to be saluted with twenty-one guns from the Tuku forts, and a money indemnity is to be paid to the owners of the Chung King. If these demands are not complied with within the specified time, reprisals upon the part of the British fleet are threatened.

The Chung King affair is one of the remarkable incidents of the war between China and Japan, and may have serious results. On Aug. 4 last a Tien Tsin dispatch announced that thirteen Japanese soldiers, who had been forcibly removed by the Chinese from the British steamship Chung King, were returned immediately upon the Viceroy, Li Hung Chang, being notified, and it was added that the Viceroy apologized to the British Consul. On Aug. 7, however, a dispatch from Shanghai announced the arrival there of the steamship Chung King, and the Captain of that vessel gave his version of the affair, which gave it a more serious aspect. The Captain said that while his ship was at Tungku on the Gulf of Pe Chi Li, Chinese soldiers went on board of her for the purpose of seizing the Japanese passengers. They found on board that steamship sixty Japanese, mostly women and children, and at once began to hunt them down. The Chinese pursued the Japanese all over the vessel, bound them hand and foot as soon as caught and flung them over on the wharf. Li Hung Chang eventually, upon the protests of the British Consul, commanded the Japanese to be returned on board the Chung King and ordered the Chinese soldiers who had made the raid to be severely punished.

DAY TO GIVE THANKS.

President Cleveland Sets Apart Thursday, Nov. 29, for Praise and Gratitude.

The President has issued the following:

The American people should gratefully render thanksgiving and praise to the supreme Ruler of the universe, who has watched over them with kindness and fostering care during the year that has passed. They should also with humility and faith supplicate the Father of All Mercies for continued blessings according to their needs, and they should by deeds of charity seek the favor of the giver of every good and perfect gift.

Therefore I, Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, do hereby appoint and set apart Thursday, the 29th day of November, instant, as a day of thanksgiving and prayer, to be kept and observed by all the people of the land.

On that day let our ordinary work and business be suspended, and let us meet in our accustomed places of worship and give thanks to Almighty God for our preservation as a nation, for our immunity from disease and pestilence, for the harvests that have rewarded our husbandry, for a renewal of national prosperity, and for every advance in virtue and intelligence that has marked our growth as a people.

And with our thanksgiving let us pray that these blessings may be multiplied unto us, that our national conscience may be quickened to a better recognition of the power and goodness of God, and that in our national life we may clearer see and closer follow the path of righteousness.

And in our places of worship and praise, as well as in the happy reunions of kindred and friends, on that day let us invoke divine approval by generously remembering the poor and needy. Surely he who has given us comfort and plenty will look upon our relief of the destitute and our ministrations of charity as the work of hearts truly grateful and as proofs of the sincerity of our thanksgiving.

Witness my hand and the seal of the United States, which I have caused to be hereto affixed.

Done at the city of Washington on the first day of November in the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and ninety-four, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and nineteenth.

WE HAVE BEEN DECEIVED.

Potatoes Instead of Being Wholesome Are Digestion Destroyers.

"Life is too short," said a famous cooking teacher, "to waste time in digesting potatoes." Physicians agree with her that the digestive powers could better be employed on less difficult food, and the good people who feel that their stomachs must not be overworked have declared against the potato. No matter how alluringly they are presented—hashed and brown, in crisp balls or slender spikes, in chips or mashed to flakiness—potatoes must be tabooed.

The woman who has been struggling against an ever increasing embonpoint has known for many years that potatoes were her enemies. The starch and the sugar they contain are fattening, and she who loves sylph-like outlines better than dainty dishes should beware of them. But nowadays, when every woman is seeking after health and the beauty supposed to accompany health, the potato has no place in even the most slender woman's diet.

When people, however, have not the strength of mind necessary to exclude the potato entirely from their menus they should at least learn a few facts about the proper way to cook it. They should know that to leave potatoes in even the smallest amount of moisture after they have been cooked is to render them sodden, soggy things, unfit for the consumption of civilized beings. On the other hand, soaking uncooked potatoes in cold water improves them. The uncooked starch does not unite with moisture, and so makes the vegetable poor, but the cooked starch absorbs water like a sponge, and makes the potatoes damp and most unpleasant.

Snakes.

Some light is thrown by the English Surgeon General Francis upon the question why it is that poisonous snakes still annually destroy so many thousands of persons in India in spite of all the efforts of the Government to exterminate them. Under the present system a reward is given for every serpent brought before the magistrate or civil authority of the district. A cobra lays from eighteen to twenty eggs at a time, so that, for every one captured, a large number remain at liberty. Mr. Francis proposes that the eggs of snakes, which are to be found in the neighborhood of old walls and where the sun can reach them, should be secured. Unfortunately, there is an obstacle in the attitude of the people themselves. Supposed to be associated with Deity, snakes are, in some parts, well cared for, and even worshiped. The low-caste natives, therefore, who will alone undertake the work of extermination receive but scant assistance from the community at large.

In Case of Apparent Death.

The new method of Dr. Laborde, which consists in making rhythmic traction on the tongue to bring about the respiratory reflex action, has been tried a great deal in France in the last two years in all sorts of cases of asphyxia by drowning, electric shock, lightning stroke and the cases of apparent death in the newly born. Some sixty-three cases are given where patients were recalled to life by this method, and as it is so simple (using an ordinary tongue forceps, such as is on hand during chloroform or ether inhalation, the tongue is pulled forward and regular rhythmical movements are given to it,) it is proposed to issue some simple direction that can be posted in every hospital and be in the hands of every midwife, or any one who may be liable to see asphyxia, such as those who give anesthetics.—American Therapist.

Foods that Restore Harmony.

Proper foods do more than appease the appetite. Nourishment is certainly obtained from such articles as meat, milk, eggs, butter, beans, and bread, but other things are required. The menu should be three-quarters fruit, vegetables, nuts, and coarse grains, like hominy, cracked wheat, cornmeal and graham flour. These foods rebuild the tissues, they cleanse the system of impurities, restore harmony so as to resist disease and often eradicate the germs of consumption and scrofula. But something else is needed, in bulk. When the food has been converted into blood the blood goes to the lungs to be aerated and receive life-giving oxygen from the air, without which neither health or beauty can exist.

Our Fuure Population.

The territorial area of Japan is about one twenty-fourth that of the United States, not counting in Canada, which is likely some time to come in; and it supports 40,000,000 people. At this rate it is computed that the North American continent would sustain a population of 1,000,000,000,000. How soon that limit is to be reached may be remitted to the prophets and the statisticians, but it will come some time without doubt, requiring an increasingly wise type of statesman and politician on the way if we are to hold together and carry out the destinies which seem appointed to us.—New York Tribune.

To "Suffer and Be Strong"—

In other words, to exhibit fortitude when enduring bodily pain, is, of course, praiseworthy, but sufferers from rheumatism would undoubtedly forego the praise which the exercise of this Spartan virtue calls forth, to obtain prompt and easy relief. It is at their very threshold in the shape of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which arrests this formidable disease at the outset, and acts as an efficient anodyne upon the afflicted nervous system. Take time by the forelock if you feel rheumatic twinges, and give them a quietude at once. Rheumatism is, reader, you may perhaps not be aware, liable to attack the heart. Many a man and woman with a heart thus attacked has promptly "shuffled off this mortal coil." The Bitters is also an excellent remedy for kidney trouble, malaria, constipation, debility, neuralgia, sleeplessness, and dyspepsia.

Curiosity Rewarded.

Some travelers were recently visiting at an elegant private garden at Palermo, in Sicily, and among the little ornamental buildings they came to one upon which was written, "Non aperite," that is, "Doors open." This proposition only served to excite their curiosity, and they very uncivily proceeded to disobey their hospitable owner's injunction. On opening the door a strong jet of water was squirted into their faces.

Onyx in Arizona.

The beds of onyx in Arizona are of such vast extent that several car-loads are shipped daily from one mine. This mine is said to represent an almost solid body of the beautiful stone, measuring one mile by a mile and a half in area. A piece of onyx, the largest ever dug, was recently removed from the mine, which measured twenty-three feet by ten feet, and twenty-six inches thick. The Arizona onyx is finer than the Mexican, and will take a very high polish. It is now being extensively used for table tops and all kinds of other ornamental purposes.

Improvement in Boilers.

The experiment has been made of endeavoring to increase the efficiency of the heating surface in steam boilers by placing within the tubes a number—eight or more—of ribs, running nearly from end to end; these ribs project into the space through which the gas flows, in this way offering a large surface for the absorption of heat, while they also penetrate into the hot center of the gaseous column. It is stated that tests show an average gain in evaporation of some 20 per cent. in favor of these ribbed tubes.

That a remedy

TOWNSHIP RETURNS,

We get the following township returns from the Poll Books left in the Clerk's office, but fear that some items are not correct. The election boards were somewhat careless in getting names out of order, leaving out some figures, etc, etc. We shall be pleased to have our friends in any township suggest any correction needed. Corrections should be made at an early date.

WE CHANGED JUDGES.

IT IS NOW JUDGE PENFIELD AND EX-JUDGE POWERS.

BLIND Goddess, is what they often call her. We mean by "her" the goddess who is supposed to preside over courts of justace, and to weigh with exact scales, all cases that come before her. And so as to make sure she can't see which is plaintiff and which is defendant they blindfold her. But we have our own opinion about that blindfolding. We used to see young people play "blind man's buff.', and we feel sure that there was generally a little slipping of the handkerchief, so one eye could peek out a little. But, be that as it may, we have changed judges in this 35th judicial circuit. It happened like this: There was an election Nov. 6.—Well, never mind that election. It makes one weary to think of it. There had to be a new judge anyway, and if the republicans hadn't got it, we would. But we didn't. There was a good sized majority for Mr. Penfield, and as Judge Powers' time was up last Friday, court work was hurried up and between four and five o'clock that afternoon, everything was in good shape, and excepting a few signatures on the docket, the Judge was ready to quit. Mr. Penfield was sent for, and while waiting for him, the attorneys who happened to be present, including Judge McClellan, James E. Rose, J. H. Rose, A. J. Baxter, J. W. Baxter and C. M. Brown, gathered in a circle, told stories and cracked jokes. Just then J. F. Shuman came in and wanted to enter up a motion of insolvency in a certain case, and the Judge had the matter fixed up f r him, Then Mr Penfield came in, and busied himself about some preliminary matters, while Judge Powers signed the docket in a number of places quietly indicated by Deputy Clerk Blanche Shilling. That finished the work. Soon after, Mr. Penfield stepped inside the railing of the clerk's office and took the oath, Clerk Moody performing this important function for the new officer. Before the group of attorneys had become aware of what had happened, Judge Penfield was in the judge's desk, and with the docket before him, was making entries therein. The first public official act was to appoint his predecessor, Ex-Judge Powers, to be a special judge to try the Kelley ditch case, a case in which Judge Penfield had acted as attorney. Then Judge McClellan rose and moved "his honor" appoint Judge Powers also, to try the Nodine case, which in one form or another has been up in court for some time. This was also agreed to. And then Miss Shilling swore Judge Powers as such special judge. James E. Rose here made a motion, the drift of which we did not get. This good start being made, Judge Penfield produced the rules of court and asked the members of the bar to help him consider them. This they all proceeded to do. The rules that have been in force since Judge Powers has presided, are substantially those adopted by Judge McBride in 1885 and each rule was considered separately. The new officer had evidently looked them over carefully, and in several instances suggested changes. All the attorneys present took part. When these rules are all printed, we shall take pleasure in laying them before our readers. After a session of about an hour, court was adjourned till next day at 9 a. m.

Judge Powers, the retiring official, has made scores of warm friends in this county during the six years he has occupied the bench. There has been a great deal of litigation during his term, some of it of a very difficult and perplexing character. And he has had in his court some of the ablest and strongest attorneys in northern Indiana—men who are not only able, but are hard fighters The struggles that will come up among such attorneys are always a great trial to a judge, but as far as we can learn, Judge Powers acquitted himself with credit, and made but few enemies. True, there were those who sometimes thought the work was going on too slowly, but it should be noted that the litigants themselves appear to be well satisfied, for even if defeated, they have felt that they were given a full chance to do all they could, and their failure to win was owing either to the law being against them, or that their case was not one on which a victory could be secured. They felt that they had "had their day in court" and that the Judge had given them as fair a showing as he could. He has been pleasant to attorneys to court officers, litigants, witnesses and spectators. We do not remember a judge who had passed his six years amid the strife, the contentions and heartburnings that always center about the judicial desk, surrounded all the time by people anxious to win, right or wrong, and looking largely to him for their success, or the want of it, who left his high and responsible position at the end of that time with as many friends as Judge Powers does. He lays aside the ermine as unsullied as it came to him and retires to private life. He has fitted up his law office again, and will continue in his profession.

Judge Penfield, of course, must give up his law practice entirely. He comes to the bench with the reputation of an able lawyer, well fitted for the position. He comes to the work also, with the implied understanding on the part of the people, that he will do all possible to keep our great court expenses within reasonable bounds. We believe the members of the bar have confidence in him and that their relations will be satisfactory and pleasant.

Dedicatorial Address.

A paper read by Miss Mae Rose at the High School Building, Nov. 9, 1894.

A few years ago we learned that a new school building was to be erected and we looked forward with pleasure to the time when we should occupy it. Eighteen months ago the structure was commenced and we watched its gradual progress with delight. As the building grew under the hands of skilled workmen our interest increased. Our attention was first attracted by seeing stakes driven in the ground, not an unusual sight but one of great interest to us as we knew they had commenced work on the proposed building, and the Junior class anticipated the occupying of the new building in which to complete their last years course. In due time the foundation was laid and walls commenced. We daily watched the progress of the workmen and noted from day to day the change that had taken place in the building; and in due time as the work went on the structure assumed majestic proportions. Last year we looked longingly at our future school house, but as we were not permitted to view its interior we lived in ignorance of the beauty, comfort and convenience of it, until on the last day of school our ex-teacher, Mr. Coe, conducted us through the building; and for the first time we realized the advantage we would have over scholars who had finished the course in previous years. After our long vacation we looked forward with unusual interest to the time when we should again resume our studies.

With our new laboratory and so much new apparatus we ought not only to appreciate our advantage, but also to do better work and receive greater benefits from it.

An ex-graduate said to me, "Mae, I envy you your laboratory work."

We are assured that with the apparatus, the study of chemistry will be a pleasure. This is the day set apart for the dedication of our new building; to-day we give to the present and the future this structure of beauty and stability in the cause that called it forth—the cause of public and universal education. That glorious conception that casts its influence over all, that elevates and enobles the individual; that sets up high standards for the masses; the tabernacles, of knowledge, the seat of learning and the center of culture and refinement; and which robes the offspring of the poor in the armor of intelligence and learning, that makes him the peer of the child of luxury and wealth.

We say, with some eminent writer, "Massive pile of brick and stone, rear your proud head, vaulting the heavens, for a high mark is set before you, a divine mission imposed upon you, a noble purpose it is yours to serve; and to the cause of free schools and free institutions; of sturdy men and noble women of intelligent minds well filled with the education of the ages, you we dedicate."

May the doors of our school house ever swing inward to the ambitious who enter these portals to discover the resourses it contains. May it ever hold those within its embrace who like a hive of busy workers, storing away the honey for the future, are gathering knowledge for eternity.

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

CONCISE HISTORY OF SEVEN DAYS' DOINGS.

Many Miners Killed in a Railroad Wreck Near Pittsburgh—Frightful Loss of Life by Earthquake in Italy—A Village Almost Wiped Out by Fire.

DOWN TO DEATH.

A Freight Train Goes Through a Bridge, Causing Death and Destruction.

A disastrous railroad accident occurred at Larimer on a branch line of the Pennsylvania Railroad about twenty-five miles east of Pittsburgh, in which it is believed four or five coal miners and probably more lost their lives. The list of the dead as far as can be learned, is as follows:

FRANK RICE, married.
FRED LOYS, married.
FRED LOYS, JR., his son, aged 17.

The train wrecked consisted of sixteen carloads of coal and was just pulling out from the New Larimer mines, and on board were a number of miners. As it was crossing over a trestle near Larimer station the axle on the second car broke down, the balance of the cars piling up in a heap, which resulted in the breaking of the trestle, and the whole mass of cars and human beings went down with a crash into the creek below. The miners on the train at the time were returning from work. The exact number of men cannot be learned positively. The railroad official say that four or five miners probably went down in the wreck, and the last report from Larimer stated that the body of Rice had been taken out of the mass of debris. The unfortunates who went down in the wreckage are undoubtedly dead.

The place where the wreck occurred is but a short distance from the main line of the Pennsylvania road.

FATAL EARTHQUAKE.

Thirteen People Killed and Fifty Wounded.

Rome special: Dispatches from the earthquake shaken province of Reggio di Calibria say that more slight shocks were felt in that district. Although no further damage was done the inhabitants continue terror stricken, and numbers of people are fleeing from the towns into the country. Thirteen persons were killed and over fifty injured at the village of Semenia. This village is nearly destroyed. At Palmi where nearly all the houses are ruined, seven persons were killed and fifty injured. Number of houses at Malochehio and Andrevuve were damaged. Although nobody was killed or injured at those places the populations are camping out in the fields. The troops in the province of Reggio di Calibria are rendering all the assistance possible to endangered inhabitants. Two violent shocks of earthquake were felt at Milasson on the north coast of the island of Sicily. The terrified inhabitants fled from the town and spent the night in the open air.

Home for Old Soldiers.

The Grand Army of the Republic of Indiana owns over 200 acres of valuable land near the famous Tippecanoe battle ground and it is proposed to ask the next Legislature for an appropriation that suitable buildings may be erected upon this land which will always be open to the heroes of the late war. A bill appropriating $150,000 for a soldiers' home passed the Lower House last session after being cut to $75,000. The bill reached the Senate too late for action and there it stood at adjourment. It is estimated that over 1,000 veterans are in the poor asylums of the State.

After Indiana Gas Wells.

William Dieterich and J. L. Starrell, representing a New York syndicate, are at Wabash, Ind., negotiating and will probably consummate a deal for the purchase of the Wabash Natural Gas company's plant. The syndicate is said to have unlimited capital behind it, and is endeavoring to secure control of the gas plant in several of the Indiana pipeline cities. The Wabash company owns thirty wells and a vast amount of gas territory. The offer for this plant is said to be in excess of $200,000.

A Village Almost Wiped Out.

Scranton, (Pa.,) special: A fire which broke out at Mudtown, Pa., destroyed fourteen houses and nearly effaced the village from the earth. The fire originated in the hotel of John Harvey, but just how is not known. The loss is estimated at $25,000, with slight insurance.

Another Train Held Up on the Sante Fe.

Kansas City (Mo.) special: It is reported a passenger train on the Santa Fe Railroad was held up somewhere between Van Buren and Macy, and Joe Brown, a Pullman conductor, was shot and killed by one of the bandits. The success of the raid is not known.

Volcano in Mexico in Flames.

A special from the City of Mexico says a sheet of flame from the volcano Colima reaching to a height of several hundred feet is lighting the country around about for many miles. The inhabitants are terribly frightened.

Fire at Flint, Mich.

At Flint, Mich., the general store of C. D. Ulmer was almost completely gutted by fire. The loss on stock is $20,000, fully covered by insurance.

A Ship Lost.

Halifax special: A startling bulletin comes from Shelburne that the ship Dauntless was run down off there by an unknown steamer and twenty-two lives were lost. The Dauntless was bound for Boston, consigned to Hale & Son.

Will Give $30,000 for Alix.

New York special: H. O. Havemeyer, the sugar king, is negotiating for the trotter Alix, and will probably secure her for $30,000.

A Bread Riot.

A large detail of police was called out to quell a riot in the City Hall, Chicago. Two hundred and fifty discharged employes of the Water Department gathered about the Comptroller's office and demanded the wages due them. The Comptroller sent a clerk to inform the men that there was no money in the City Treasury to pay them. Instantly the crowd grew riotous. Cries of bread and threats of instant vengeance were howled forth by the angry crowd, and the Comptroller, gathering his clerks, barred the doors to his office and sent a hurried call for policemen. A half dozen officers appeared, but were promptly rushed out of the corridor by the thoroughly aroused men. A battalion of patrolmen was summoned and after a liberal use of force the rioters were clubbed into submission and driven from the City Hall. The large crowd which had been attracted by the disturbance was heartily in sympathy with the ex-employes, and threats to compel instant payment of the over-due wages were numerous until the police succeeded in dispersing the throng.

OUTLOOK BRIGHTER.

Business Revives Somewhat in Manufacturing Lines.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says:

"In nearly all branches of business gradual improvement appears, and the hopeful feeling observed last week has continued. Then it was also noted that the main conditions of business and trade had not suddenly changed, and this becomes clearer, to the disappointment of some. Low farm products, low wages, and only partial employment of labor, still retard distribution, and the limited demand hinders the recovery of industries. Progress toward recovery has not ceased, and many establishments have resumed or added to their producing forces, some also advancing wages, but it will take time to lift business out of its depression and the progress made, if less than the sanguine expected, is at least encouraging. The decision to offer $50,000,000 bonds for the replenishment of the treasury was, by bankers, generally approved but events are showing that restoration of confidence cannot by itself remove all embarrassment.

"It is generally assumed that the offered bonds will be taken at once. The reported importation of gold from London, with a loss on its face of $7,500 at present exchange rates, is presumably meant to affect bond subscriptions. There have already been some withdrawals of gold from the treasury by redemption of notes to make payments for bonds, and goods rather than gold are likely to come from Europe."

MUTINY AT SEA.

Knives, Hatchets, and Clubs Played an Important Part.

During a recent trip of the steamship Naushai, conveying 900 Japanese from their native country to Honolulu, the crew mutined and the vessel was worked by officers only. A quartermaster started the row. He was not steering properly and Captain King called his attention to the bad service. The man ordered Captain King away from the wheel. The Captain was thunderstruck at the audacity of the petty officer and sharply reprimanded him. At this the quartermaster struck Captain King. The scuffle forward soon attracted the attention of all on board and there was a wild rush in that direction.

Several officers turned their attention to the 900 passengers, doing all possible to prevent a panic. The crew to a man came to the aid of the quartermaster. Two or three had hatchets, others knives and the remainder bars and clubs. Capt. King and the Britishers who came to his aid recognized that the odds were too great to think of entering into a combat. No effort was made to enforce discipline. The crew mixed in with the passengers. The immigrants were in sympathy entirely with the mutinous body, and leaders among the travelers threatened to take up the quarrel of the crew and stood ready at all times to help the sailors. Upon the vessel's arrival at Honolulu the mutineers were arrested.

CASUALTY AT MUNCIE.

Five Men Frightfully Scalded and Burned.

A horrible accident occurred in Muncie, Ind., in which five men were dangerously scalded and burned. The injured are:

John Gainer, aged 50 years; Valentine Gibson, aged 45 years; John Curtis, Lenzy M. Taylor, and John Bowers.

They were employes of the Muncie muck bar mill. In the mill there are five large boilers, and under these is a mud drum twenty-five feet long and three feet square. One end of the drum cracked and then burst. A stream of hot mud, boiling water and steam was thrown out the length of the mill and five men who were standing in the line of the stream fell to the ground, either burned or cooked. They were carried to their homes, where a number of physicians were summoned. The flesh on Gainer's face, hands, and legs is completely cooked, and when his clothing was removed, the outer flesh peeled off. It is thought he is burned internally and cannot recover. Gibson is also in a bad condition, his face and hands are in a blister. Curtis is in about the same condition as Gainer. Taylor and Bowers are burned about the face and hands and their bodies were scalded. Their eyes were filled with hot mud and they ran wild around the factory screaming for help. Their suffering was intense and cannot be described.

The factory was slightly damaged.

FEARFUL TRAGEDY.

A Most Appalling Affair Takes Place in Nashville.

Nashville special: Of all tragedies Nashville has experienced, the most appalling was perpetrated the other day. Chancery Court Clerk George K. Whitworth shot and killed instantly Chancellor Andrew Allison, in the upper hallway of the court in this city. He fired both barrels of a shotgun loaded with buck-shot, and about twenty-two of the shot took effect in the breast and side of the chancellor, who fell near the stairway, gasped once or twice and died. Only one man, Joseph H. Acklen, saw the tragedy. The Chancellor had just adjourned court, entered the hall and was about to descend the steps. Whitworth, who was in the hall, said, "Oh, Judge," and as he turned fired at him. Acklen rushed to him, and as he did so heard two shots behind him. Turning, he saw Whitworth shoot himself with a pistol. Whitworth was perfectly cool and collected during the shooting and also after the affair and expressed no regrets, but desired to know if he killed his man, stating that no man who had treated him as Allison had done could live in the same country with him. Whitworth is still alive, but sinking rapidly, and death is expected at any moment. The trouble was over money matters.

LIVES LOST.

Many Perish in the Forest Fires of the South.

Memphis (Tenn.) special: Reports from the forest fire districts in this vicinity show that while the loss to property is not great, considering the extent of territory covered, the loss of life exceeds apprehensions. Within fifteen miles of Memphis, three lives have been lost by fire in the past two days, and there are rumors of a fearful burning in Arkansas, where five lives were lost. The remains of five human beings were found, the flesh and clothing all burned off, in the St. Francis bottoms, all within a quarter of a mile of each other. There are fears that they are the remains of a party of hunters from Texas that went into that country last week, but there is nothing to support this except the number of bodies. The fatalities in this county were peculiarly distressing. Fanny Woods, an aged negress, had her dress ignited as she fled from a burning house, and she ran, surrounded by the flames, until she fell dead. Pitt Roy, a 9-year-old boy, ran into his father's house, which was on fire, to save some property. The house collapsed and he was burned to death before many spectators. The name of the third victim is not ascertainable.

Frightful Collision.

While running at the rate of twenty miles an hour freight train No. 71 and Work Extra No. 43, on the Cleveland, Lorain and Wheeling road, collided at Warmington, three miles south of Massillon, Ohio. The wreck is one of the most disastrous in the history of the road, and cost the life of Engineer David Rosenburg of Lorain. The locomotives came together head to head and were literally torn to pieces, and twenty coal and box cars were derailed and rendered worthless. The disaster was caused by the work-train flagman misunderstanding his orders. The engine men on both locomotives jumped. Rosenburg was first to take the chance, but was hurled under the engines. Death resulted instantly. The injured were:

Fireman Darwin Barker of Massillon, wrist broken, cut and bruised.

Engineer Charles Shaver of Lorain, ankle fractured and breast injured.

Fireman Jacob Hoffman of Lorain bruised and cut painfully.

The Nicaragua Canal.

The Manufacturer's Record published at Baltimore, publishes special letters from a large number of United States Senators and Congressmen giving their views on the question of governmental aid to the Nicaragua canal. About an equal number of Democrats and Republicans replied. Senator Sherman of Ohio, writes that he is thoroughly committed to the construction of the Nicaraguan canal. Senator Walsh of Georgia, says that the Nicaragua canal is the greatest enterprise now before the business world. Senators Lodge of Massachusetts, Gallinger of New Hampshire, Allison of Iowa, Messrs. Grosvenor of Ohio, Wise of Virginia McDowell of Pennsylvania and Curtis of New York, write in a similar strain.

Burned to Death.

Peru (Ind.) special: While the family of William Reeder was up town witnessing the jolification of the Republicans over the recent election, Mrs. Josephine Weist, mother of Mrs. Reeder, aged 80 years, who has been an invalid for the past fourteen years, was in some manner unknown burned to death. A daughter of Mr. Reeder, with a gentleman friend, returned to the house just as she cried for help. They ran to her assistance and wrapped her in bed clothing, but she was burned too badly, and after lingering a few hours her suffering was relieved by death.

Struck by the Cars.

At Coshocton, Ohio, Daniel Fair, Commissioner of Coshocton County; Newton Speckman, County Auditor, and a 10-year-old son of the latter, were attempting to drive over the Pan-Handle Railroad crossing when their buggy was struck by a train. They were hurled several feet and Fair received injuries from which he will die. Speckman and his son were bruised but not seriously.

A Triple Tragedy.

Martin V. Strait, a well-known flour and feed dealer, of Elmira, N. Y., fatally shot his wife, put one bullet in the body of his sister-in-law, Mrs. William Whitford, which may cause death, and then shot himself. Strait separated from his wife twice, and when she refused to live with him he followed her down town and killed her.

Fatally Hurt.

Charles Thomas, a fireman on the Pan Handle engine No. 76, met with a perhaps fatal accident while giving his engine water at Elwood, Ind. He was knocked from the tender by the automatic water spout, striking his head and rendering him unconscious, and, it is thought, injuring him internally.

A Ship Lost.

Halifax special: A startling bulletin comes from Shelburne that the ship Dauntless was run down off there by an unknown steamer and twenty-two lives were lost. The Dauntless was bound for Boston, consigned to Hale & Son.

The Saw Slipped.

At Versailles, Ky., while Daniel Green was sawing a tree on his farm the cross-cut saw slipped and struck him in the back of the head, sawing entirely through the skull.

Passenger Coach Burns.

The rear passenger coach of train No. 36 on the Big Four road became ignited near New Dover, Ohio, and was totally consumed. The estimated loss is $3,000.

Explosion at Elwood.

At Elwood, Ind., the boilers of the electric light plant exploded. Will Clark, an employe, cannot survive. John Fahr, a motorman, was seriously injured.

Crushed by a Train.

Arthur Tetters of Huntington, Ind., was killed by a Wabash train at Andrews.

REPORT IS A ROAST.

OPINION OF THE STRIKE COMMISSION MADE PUBLIC.

Clear Statement of the Facts and a Thoughtful Review of the Conditions that Created Them—Pullman Company Severely Criticised—Cleveland Justified.

General Managers Hit.

The report of the United States Strike Commissioners appointed by President Cleveland July 26, 1894, to investigate all matters relating to the famous Chicago strike has been submitted to the President. The report is a voluminous document of fifty-three pages and is devoted largely to the findings of fact and the conclusions and recommendations of the commission. This commission was appointed by the President under the provisions of section 6, chapter 1,063, of the laws of the United States passed Oct. 1, 1888, and is composed of Carroll D. Wright, United States Commissioner of Labor; John D. Kernan, of New York; and Nicholas E. Worthington, of Peoria, Ill.

CARROLL D. WRIGHT.

By its report on the circumstances attending the strike of Pullman employes and the great strike on the railroads centering in Chicago declared by the American Railway Union, together with the recommendations made as a result of its investigations of these remarkable labor disturbances, the strike commission has added a notable and valuable work to the growing literature dealing with the practical side of the relations between labor and capital. Its showing of the arrogant and unjust attitude of the Pullman corporation toward its employes, of the illegal and dangerous methods of the General Managers' Association and of the errors and weakness of the labor organizations opposed to these great aggregations of capital presents in a clear light the real causes leading to the astonishing occurrences which culminated in riot and bloodshed and a general muster of the soldiery of the nation and the State in Chicago last July.

The conditions prevailing in the town of Pullman are set forth at some length, and the conclusion is reached that they "enable the management at all times to assert with great vigor its assumed right to fix wages and rents absolutely, and to repress that sort of independence which leads to labor organizations and their attempts at mediation, arbitration, strikes, etc." On the part of the American Railway Union there is found a failure to guard against the possibility of disorder and violence among its members. Such an organization, in the opinion of the commission, must oppose all strikes except as a last resort against unbearable grievances and must advocate conciliation and arbitration; also, through wise leadership, it must aim to secure legal standing and the assistance of wise laws sustained by public opinion.

JOHN D. KERNAN.

Of the General Managers' Association, which dealt with the great railroad strike, the commission "questions whether any legal authority, statutory or otherwise, can be found to justify some of the features of the association," which has all the effects of a pool, the extension of whose power would be dangerous to the people, and would lead to the serious consideration of Government ownership of railroads. "The refusal," says the report, "of the General Managers' Association to recognize and deal with such a combination of labor as the American Railway Union seems arrogant and absurd when we consider its standing before the law, its assumptions and its past and obviously contemplated future action."

N. E. WORTHINGTON.

The reduction of wages at Pullman to offset losses are found to have thrown by far the greater burden on labor, though during the time of reductions no salaries of officers, managers or superintendents were reduced—employes who manifestly could have sustained a reduction much better than the workmen in the shops. The refusal to cut down the high rents in Pullman is regarded as unfair and unwise, considering the reductions in wages of those paying the rents. Failure to make any concession and the discharge of members of the committee calling on the Pullman officials for increased pay precipitated the strike. The orderly conduct of the Pullman strikers is commented on with favor.

When the great railroad strike was on the General Managers' Association, like the Pullman corporation, refused to consider the matter of arbitration. The commission is of the opinion that "a different policy would have prevented the loss of life and great loss of property and wages occasioned by the strike." The commission would have labor organizations recognized and made responsible. While declining to take up the question of Government ownership of railways as a remedy for railway strikes, it points out that if railway combinations continue it will not be long before the Government will have to seriously consider Government ownership and Government regulation will have to be increased. Finally, the commission's recommendations are that a permanent United States strike commission be formed, and that power be given to the Federal courts to enforce the findings of the commission. In the case of public corporations, like railroads, it is the commission's opinion that there would be no difficulty and no hardship in compelling the acceptance of terms of settlement as agreed on by the commission. Besides this recommendation it is urged on States to establish systems of conciliation and arbitration similar to that in Massachusetts and to render illegal contracts requiring men not to join labor organizations or to leave them as conditions of employment. The commission further urges employers everywhere to recognize labor unions and to treat with them and to raise wages voluntarily when trade conditions will permit.

Taken as a whole, the report must be regarded as highly favorable to the cause of organized labor and to the principle of arbitration.

NEW ISSUE OF BONDS.

Will Increase Interest-Bearing Debt of the United States One-Twelfth.

The contemplated new issue of bonds by the government, if it be a $50,000,000 issue, will increase the interest-bearing debt of the United States about one-twelfth. It was $585,039,315 Jan. 1, 1894. The whole amount of bonds issued by the government from the beginning of the union to 1880 was the enormous sum of $10,690,000,000. Of course a good deal of this is made up of bond issues to refund other bonds which were falling due and which the government was not ready at the time to pay. So that this amount is a larger one than the interest-bearing indebtedness which the United States has been, or will be, called on to pay.

The United States issues two kinds of bonds. One kind is known as registered bonds, the other as coupon bonds. The coupon bonds are payable to bearer, and attached to them are coupons each representing three months' interest on the bond to which it is attached, or if the interest is paid semi-annually, six months' interest. The coupons are all numbered. When interest is due the owner of the bond cuts it off, and if he has a bank account, as bondholders usually do, he deposits it just as he would a check or draft and it is credited to his account. The bank gets them cashed at the subtreasury. It is clipping off these coupons that is popularly supposed to be the principal occupation of bondholders.

Registered bonds have no coupons. Each bond is made payable to the person whose name is written on the face of it. A record of these is kept in the office of the register of the treasury. When an owner sells one he transfers it by indorsement witnessed by persons appointed by the government, and the transfer is recorded as the original ownership was. A month before interest day the clerks in the register's office go through the books, and treasury drafts are made out for the interest due, payable to the person who stands of record as the owner of the bond. The largest amount for which a single bond was ever issued by the government was for $15,500,000. That was the amount paid by the British government to Secretary of State Fish under the Geneva award. Congress had failed to make any provision for the disbursement of the money, so pending legislation on the subject Secretary Fish invested it in government 5 per cent bonds and one bond, engrossed by hand, was issued to him for the whole amount.

The oldest United States bond known to exist is in the possession of the treasury. It is about the size of a $5 bill, and acknowledges the receipt of $300 from John Bonfield and promises to pay it three years from date with interest at 4 per cent. The promise was redeemed.

The first loans ever negotiated by the United States were with foreign countries, Holland, Belgium, Spain and France taking up the bonds. The first issue of bonds for home investment was in 1775, when what were called loan office certificates were negotiated. Part of these bore interest payable in specie and part in paper money.

In 1790 the first large bond issue was made. The amount was $64,000,000 and the rate of interest was 6 per cent. This issue was made to fund the debts incurred by the various states of the United States to carry on the war of the revolution. The debts incurred by the several states were assumed by the national government. This was Alexander Hamilton's scheme and it was bitterly opposed.

In 1812 another loan was made for war purposes. The amount of bonds issued at this time was $11,000,000.

There were other loans made between that and the beginning of the civil war. The year 1861 and the beginning of the war marked the era of large bond issues. At this time Secretary Chase negotiated with the bankers of the country a loan of $150,000,000, the largest that up to that time had ever been made. There were larger ones made during the war and since to refund other issues falling due, but it was this loan which established the credit of the country.

TO RESTORE THE DEAD.

Physicians Will Attempt to Bring Back to Life Electrocuted Murderers.

Gov. Flower of New York is willing to allow experts to make a test to ascertain whether a man killed in the electrical chair can be resuscitated. Ever since the adoption of the electrical-execution act by the State, the Westinghouse people, whose dynamos are used, have declared that electricity was not the cause of death, but that death was assured by the holding of an autopsy directly after the body was taken from the electrical chair.

No less an authority than Nicola Tesla, the famous electrician, contended that he could bring back to life a man killed in an electrical chair, provided the attempt was made immediately after execution. Mr. George Westinghouse has always asserted that electrical death was a sham and that a New York commission headed by Elbridge T. Gerry had added the autopsy clause to the law so as to make it certain that the man was dead. Within the last few weeks the agitation of the subject has been prominent and an appeal is to be made to the Governor to allow the next man condemed to be used as a subject to be experimented on. The Governor says he will grant permission to do this.

The attempt, if made, will undoubtedly create great excitement and intense interest in the scientific world. It will also arouse curiosity among laymen, because, if successful, it will bring to life a new man who cannot be executed, having once suffered the penalty of death. It will also prove that the State executioners have really been the surgeons who held the autopsy rather than the State electrician.

THE GREAT VIOLINIST.

The Most Distinguished Performer in the World.

Cesar Thomson, one of the greatest living violinists, and the one generally recognized to be the superior exponent of the instrument's technical possibilities, recently arrived in this country. He is under contract to appear in thirty concerts during his stay here. Mr. Thomson's appearance betokens the artist. He has a high forehead, deep, soulful eyes and thin, nervous hands, and is utterly free from mannerisms and affectations. Mr. Thomson is an enthusiast on yachting. He devours all that is written on the subject, and in his home, in Liege, he has gathered a collection of models, which, in its completeness, illustrates the history of yachting.

CHAS. E. STRONG DEAD

MANAGER OF THE NEWSPAPER UNION PASSES AWAY.

The Well Known and Highly Esteemed Head of the Largest Auxiliary Printing Establishment in the World Succumbs to Heart Paralysis.

Sketch of His Life.

Charles E. Strong, general manager of the Chicago Newspaper Union and its branches, died at his home in Chicago early Wednesday morning, paralysis of the heart being the immediate cause of death, although his illness dates from the time of the annual meeting of the Typothetae at Philadelphia in September. While in attendance there he contracted a severe cold. This aggravated a complication of heart and bronchial troubles from which he had long suffered, and on Nov. 7 he was obliged to take to his room. There were no particularly alarming symptoms, not even on the day and evening of his death; in fact, his jovial spirits had given the anxious ones hope of final recovery. At midnight, however, Mrs. Strong was awakened by unusual restlessness on the part of her husband, and before the physician could be summoned death had come peacefully and painlessly in the presence of his devoted wife and daughter.

CHARLES E. STRONG.

The deceased leaves a widow and two children, George and Emily, the former in his capacity as manager of the Newspaper Union's supply department being well known to the newspaper fraternity of the Northwest.

After a touching funeral service in Chicago, the remains were conveyed to Milwaukee Friday by special train. Nearly one hundred devoted employes accompanied the body to its last resting place, and by the side of the open grave in Forest Home Cemetery mingled their sorrow with that of the grief-stricken family, and paid tribute to the memory of one whom they all loved.

Story of His Life.

Charles E. Strong was born in Union City, Mich., March 23, 1841. His parents were among the early pioneers of that State, having located there in 1836. In 1850 they removed to Milwaukee, Wis., where, at the age of fourteen years, their eldest son, Charles E., was apprenticed to S. M. Booth, then publisher of the Daily Free Democrat, to learn the printer's trade, with whom he remained for four years. Afterward Mr. Strong was engaged in the different newspaper and job printing offices in Milwaukee until the year 1860, when he entered the office of the Evening Wisconsin as compositor, and two years later was made foreman of that establishment, which position he held until October, 1870, when he was sent to Chicago by his employers to establish and put in operation the Chicago Newspaper Union, which has become, under his management and direction, the largest auxiliary printing house in the world. He had probably done more to advance the ready-print newspaper system than any other man in the country, and was the pioneer in practical work pertaining to that business, his first experience in making up what is termed "patent inside" forms dating back to the spring of 1864. Probably no man in Chicago had a larger or more agreeable acquaintanceship or was held in greater esteem among the country publishers of the West than Charles E. Strong.

NEW DIPHTHERIA TREATMENT.

Serum Greatly Reduces the Death Rate, but Is Very Costly.

Among the reports coming to the State Department upon the new serum treatment for diphtheria is one from Consul General Charles DeKay at Berlin, exhibiting the efficacy of the new treatment by comparison. He says that the establishment at Schering, near the Jungfern Heide, has forty horses under treatment for the production of serum, yet the demand has been so great that the hospitals ran out of it in September. This has a singular effect on the death rate, which in children under four, the most difficult age, had sunk to 11 per cent. before the exhaustion of the store of serum; it rose during October to 60 per cent.

The serum is costly, because establishments for its production are few; it takes a long while to prepare and must be had comparatively fresh. It takes at least nine months and sometimes a year to get the animals—all under three years old—into condition. One animal does not furnish much blood at a time—say, two quarts. It must be carefully fed between dates of tapping, and as in time the strength of its blood as a means of cure gives out, it is necessary to go over again the process of cultivating the bacillus. Absolute certainty is not ascribed to the cure, and cases in which other diseases are present should not be considered a fair test of its virtues.

MRS. THOMAS WILLIAMS, wife of a farmer living near Monroe City, was burned to death. Mr. Williams was at work in the field, and when he went home to dinner he found that his wife had prepared the noonday meal and had fallen into the fire and was burned to death. Her body was a crisp.

PHILIP MARKEY, a young man who came to Brazil a few days ago from St. Louis, was instantly killed in the yards of the Chicago and Indiana Coal road. THERE are now ten cases of scarlet fever at the Indiana Home for Feeble-minded Children north of Fort Wayne. "JACK the Spitter" is being watched for by the Muncie police. For ten days past women have complained that some vagrant along the streets delights in squirting tobacco juice on their dresses. He has been seen standing in dark alleys, but disappears and cannot be caught. The other evening the Knights of Pythias ball and reception kept him busy. As a result of his actions some of the women were compelled to retire from the ball-room and changed their elegant silk gowns.

GOVERNOR MATTHEWS is giving much thought to the threatened outbreak of lawlessness at Roby. He said that he had again received a letter from one of its prominent members assuring him that the place would be run on an eminently respectable basis, and that the stock used in the races would be of sportsmanlike quality. The racing he was assured, would be fair and square. Governor Matthews replied in a scorching vein, rebuking the correspondent for presuming to try to make him believe such misrepresentation. He said that the racing would be cruel and brutal on the horses, and would be nothing more than an attraction during the winter of the gamblers, thieves, thugs, and prostitutes of Chicago, disgracing the locality as well as all concerned in it. He plainly told the Roby backer that he would suppress the place if possible to do so within the law, and he thought it as possible.

WHILE three men were working in a deep ditch on a farm near Lebanon, the sides caved in. Jesse Conn, the contractor, was killed, and Louis Porter, an employe, was perhaps fatally injured.

RICHARD WHEELER, a prominent farmer, shot and instantly killed Ambrose Wilcox, a large land owner residing near Mt. Carmel. Wheeler had put up Wilcox's stock and Wilcox came to Wheeler's house after the stock, when hot words ensued, resulting as above. Wheeler claims that he acted in self-defense and has surrendered to the Sheriff.

W. HEMPHILL, while hunting, ran a rabbit into a drift pile on the river, south of Edinburg, and discovered the body of a child covered up in the drift. The child had evidently been murdered and placed there to conceal somebody's shame. There is no clew as to where the body came from.

MISS MARY BANEY, aged 20, residing with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Baney, south of Muncie, became despondent over love affairs, and attempted to take her life with a revolver. The weapon was placed against the left side of her breast and fired. A corset stay changed the course of the bullet and the bullet penetrated only her shoulder.

ONE THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION.

It happened a long time ago. Once in a great while some one of the oldest inhabitants, in exploring the chambers of his memory, brings it from some hidden corner—dusty, covered with cobwebs, and gray with age—brushes it up, and tries to restore its old-time vividness to gratify the curiosity of an inappeasable grandchild who wants "to hear a story." It happened away back in the East.

The tall, dignified man with iron-gray hair and beard, with clothes of irreproachable cut, and a general air of culture and self-possession about him, who sat looking somewhat wearily out of the car window, was traveling on an Eastern railway. He had been "out West"—merely on a visit.

It was a raw, chilly day in November, and the sky was overcast with clouds. However much one may revere Emerson, Bunker Hill Monument, the Charter Oak, the old mill at Newport, and the memory of the Pilgrim Fathers, there is seldom anything attractive in a New England landscape in November, and it is no wonder the sun himself often gets tired of looking at it, puts a veil of clouds over his face, and hastens on to the golden West.

The elderly, dignified traveler soon wearied of the bleak landscape flying past. He took a paper from his pocket, opened it, and began to read. There was an article on the editorial page, written in the editor's ablest and most pessimistic vein, that attracted his attention. The country—so the editor said—was going to the dogs. Crops had been a failure. The national finances were at a low ebb. The State was misgoverned. It had been a year of failure, and the editor could see no ray of hope ahead.

It was small satisfaction to the traveler to note that the paper was nearly a week old. If things were so desperate as they appeared to be they surely could not have improved much in one week. He laid the paper on his knee, took from his pocket a memorandum-book, wrote rapidly in it for some minutes, pondering awhile, looked over what he had written, added a few words, replaced the book in his pocket, and bowed his head in reverie.

"Travelin fur, mister?"

The voice that disturbed him was that of a lank individual on the seat in front.

"I am on my way to the State capital," he replied courteously.

"On business, mebby?" hazarded the inquisitive man.

The elderly traveler did not reply. He had lapsed into reverie again.

"Anything p'tickler on your mind?"

"Why, sir," and an amused smile lit up for a moment the serious, preoccupied face of the gray-haired man. "I have been wondering if there is really anything to be thankful for this year."

"Anything to be thankful fur! Land o' goodness, American, ain't ye?"

"Yes."

"In good health?"

"Fairly."

"Alive, anyhow, ain't ye?"

"Unquestionably. But look at this article," and he handed him the paper he had been reading.

"Ya-as," said the other, as he slowly ran his eye down the column. "I saw that day 'fore yistedy. It don't amount to nuthin'."

"It is one of the ablest papers published in the State."

"Yas."

"And is published at the capital."

"That don't cut no figger. It's an opposition sheet. Why, look h'yer! B'lieve in God, d'ye?"

"Yes," reverently replied the elderly traveler.

"An' the promise that all things shall work together fur good to his children?"

"Yes."

"What might be yer name?"

"My name's Hendrickson."

"Why, you're——"

Crash!

Without a moment's warning the train in rounding a curve had dashed into a "wild" freight-train coming from the opposite direction.

The visible effects of a railway disaster were not disposed of as quickly then as now, but the accident had happened within a few miles of the capital, and a relief train was quickly dispatched to the scene.

Tender hands cared for the wounded and dying, and the lifeless remains of those whose eyes had closed forever on this world were gathered up for transmission to friends.

Down at the bottom of a heap of broken timbers in the wrecked car at the foot of the embankment they found an elderly, gray-haired traveler, alive but insensible.

Later in the day he opened his eyes. He was in his own home in the capital city. A sweet-faced matron was bending over him.

"What is it, dear? Where am I? What has happened?" he asked.

"Hush, John," she answered. "You are among your own——"

"Ah! I remember," he broke in, feebly.

He closed his eyes. In a moment he opened them again.

"Rachel," he said, "will you please—look in the inside pocket of—my coat and see if there is a little—pass book in it?"

She complied.

"Will you please—read to me the last entry in it?"

Among the friends standing silently about the bed was one who seemed to sustain some confidential relations to the disabled man. To him she handed the little book and he opened it and read aloud as follows:

"The tender mercies of God have failed not and we have not been consumed. The word of the Lord abideth forever. It speaks to us through his providence today, as it spoke to the inspired psalmist through lips divine. With unchangeable will the ruler of the universe works out his righteous purposes with us. He makes even the wrath of man to praise him. How much more, then, shall the tribute of praise from grateful hearts rise as incense to Him of whom it was said: 'O, give thanks unto the Lord, for his mercy endureth forever!'"

"In compliance with the customs of our fathers we meet once each year to express our gratitude to the giver of all good and renew our covenant with him as a people. Now, therefore, I, John Hendrickson, Governor of this State, do hereby designate and set apart Thursday, the —th day of November, 18—, as a day of thanksgiving and praise to Almighty God, and recommend that, laying aside our secular occupations for the day, we repair to our accustomed places of worship and bow in grateful adoration before the most high, as becometh a people whose God is the Lord.

"The silence that followed the reading of this was broken by the feeble voice of the maimed, disfigured, helpless man on the couch:

"I had intended to—write it over and—finish it a little—better, but perhaps it will—do as it is. Rachel, is anything the matter with—my right arm?"

"No, John."

"Then—raise me—up."

His purpose was divined. He was raised gently in bed, a pencil was placed between his fingers, the book laid on a pillow before him, and in a tremulous, cramped but legible hand he slowly wrote the signature:

"JOHN HENDRICKSON."

"Now—kiss me—Rachel!"

They laid him down again. The pencil fell from his fingers, a faint, quivering sigh parted his lips, the light went out of his eyes, and, with his last earthly duty done, the soul of John Hendrickson, Governor, entered into life.

Thanksgiving Song.

In safe and restful keeping,
Beneath the autumn sun,
The fields to-day lie sleeping,
For harvest work is done.

The blossoms prone are lying,
Touched by a chilly hand,
The birds are southward flying
To find a warmer land.

But neither doubt nor sadness
Can mar our song's refrain,
Each heart exults with gladness,
For spring must come again.

The gloomy clouds are breaking
And drifting far away,
God's peace and love are making
A glad Thanksgiving day.
—Wm. H. Montgomery.

The Turkey.

A turkey that is hatched from an egg is of few days and full of trouble.

He cometh forth like a flower and is cut down: he fleeth also as a shadow and continueth not.

As for the hen turkey, her days are as grass: as a flower of the field, so she flourisheth. In the morning she is alive and clucketh: in the evening she is cast into the oven.

Even so is it with the gobbler. To-day he plumeth himself; he strutteth abroad and draggeth his wing on the ground as if one should say "Aha!" To-morrow he falleth a prey to the carver: his flesh is parted asunder and his bones are distributed among the spoilers.

In his pride he eateth corn and waxeth fat, saying to himself, "All things are made for my enjoyment." When his fall cometh there is none who remembereth the day of his triumph, and all men mock him.

The hen turkey thinketh in secret she will raise a young brood, and layeth eggs: but when she is served upon a platter the eater lays to, and she passeth away.

The young turkeys, even the little ones, in the spring, hide themselves in the stubble and strive against the wind and the storm, for life is sweet to little turkeys.

But when they are become large and fat, and the voice of Thanksgiving is heard in the land, suddenly their clucking ceaseth and they become a part of the people.

Heart to Heart.

TURKEY cried, "Ah sweet my love,
Our souls shall mingle ever.
Not e'en the mighty powers above
Our fond young hearts can sever."
When cruel fate their lives did part—
The fact there's no repressing—
It was his giblets, not his heart,
Met hers—within the dressing.
—Ray Brown.

THE FIRST HE REMEMBERS.

Edward Everett Hale Describes an Early Thanksgiving.

The scene is Brattle Street Meeting House in Boston. The time is the middle of November—on Tuesday morning. A boy of years old, who has the fortunate privilege of sitting on the cross-seat of the pew, is the person who describes, after sixty years, what he remembers. The little boy, whose self and successor is now trying to reproduce him, could sleep if he chose, extended on the cross-seat, with his head in his mother's lap, while she listened to the minister. I will not say that on this particular day he or I had been asleep. What is important to the present business is that she whispers to him that he had better listen now, for the minister is going to read the proclamation. The boy stands up on his seat, and with that delight which even conservative childhood sees any custom defied sees with rapture Mr. Palpey unfolding the large paper sheet which might have been a large newspaper; and sees the sheet cover even the pulpit Bible.

Mr. Palpey is a young man of 30 or thereabouts, who is afterward to be the distinguished Dr. Palpey, a leader of the anti-slavery opinion of Massachusetts. He read the Governor's proclamation with sense and feeling, so that even a child follows along, about the taking care of the poor; the happiness of home; but especially about the success of the fisheries. It is only in the latest times that any Massachusetts Governor is so disloyal to that ocean from whose breast she has drawn her life that he fails to mention the fisheries in his proclamation. But home, poor people, fisheries and all sink into their own insignificance when, with resonant voice, the minister ends with the grand words:

"Given in the Council Chamber at Boston, in the year of our Lord 1826, and of the independence of the United States the fiftieth.

"LEVI LINCOLN, Governor."

This fine relationship between "Thanksgiving Day" and "Independence Day," of which the glories, six months ago, are a certain hazy dream, is not lost upon the child. And then follow the words, most grand in all rituals:

"By his excellency the Governor, with the advice and consent of the Council. EDWARD D. BANGS,
"Secretary.

"GOD SAVE THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS."

That words so inspiring, pronounced with such a clarion voice, should be uttered in a church on Sunday—this was indeed something to fill high the cup of wild, intoxicating joy. That Edward D. Bangs, the secretary, should be sitting himself, watching, as it were, his own petard, on the other side of the aisle, with his finger resting on his right ear in a peculiar manner such as was unknown to others—he, clad in a brown coat, with a velvet collar—that he should see and hear all this unmoved—this added to the grandeur and solemnity and high dignity of the whole.—Fashion.

How to Choose a Turkey.

On Thanksgiving Day every American family makes an effort to dine on turkey. The turkey, being a gift for which all Americans should be thankful, seems especially appropriate as a Thanksgiving offering. If you are a town-dweller you must secure your bird from a poulterer; and let me whisper to you not to rely too implicitly on his judgment. Tastes differ, and upon this occasion you wish to suit your own. Some persons prefer a gobbler to a hen turkey, but I will advise you a hen. The meat is whiter, sweeter and more tender. The bill and toes should be soft, and the flesh have a bluish-white cast, twelve pounds being an exceedingly good weight. The fortunate country-dweller has his own turkeys, or should have at least, and can mold them at will. The feed can be so managed that the meat will be be white, tender and of a delicate flavor, or the flavor may be greatly heightened by a change of diet. Chopped turnips, cabbage and parsley, varied with corn-meal, boiled rice and chopped celery tops, impart a peculiar gamey flavor, which to many persons is very desirable. This food may be given three or four days before killing.—Mrs. S. T. Rorer, in Ladies' Home Journal.

TURKS IN A CONCLAVE

TOM GOBBLER CALLS AN INDIGNATION MEETING.

Imminent Danger Threatened, and Immediate Action Was Imperative—Their Lives at Stake—Rebellion Advised, but Christian Resignation Finally Prevails.

Words of the Martyrs.

His gracious majesty, Emperor, King, and Prince of all America, Thomas Turkey Gobler, R. S. V. P., gathered his minions about him at a late hour on the night before Thanksgiving, and in the dim glow of a moon half obscured by poultry coops held secret conclave. Imminent danger threatened and immediate action was imperative. Their lives were at stake.

"My beloved subjects," began his royal highness in a voice quivering with emotion as he nervously stroked his trembling beard of blood-red hue, "we are beset by the enemy, falsely betrayed into the camp of our foes by promises of cranberries and newly picked sage. Shall be submit to the oppressor without a struggle? Shall we go to our death without striking one blow for our dearly loved roosts and sweet old barnyard?"

"Never! never!" fiercely answered the heir apparent, his highness Willie Wishbone, as he strutted before his father's subjects. His eyes shone with a desperation which boded no good to the exultant enemy.

"Give us liberty or give us an ax," he cried. "Rather than hand myself over to the greedy palate of the epicure, I will fill up on tacks and rusty nails and get sweet revenge by boring large holes in his plethoric and baggy abdomen."

"Hear! hear!" came in chorus from the huddled minions.

To Die Without Fear.

"If we must get it where the chicken received his death blow let us go to our fate without fear, without a tremor. Let us, at least, merit the praise of brave men by our fearless conduct at the stake." Thus spoke Amos Darkmeat, one of the oldest and most highly favored of his majesty's advisers.

"Our fate seems inevitable, oh, king," he cried, as he gazed with fixed eyes on his brothers. "Already we are bargained for and soon will be sold to the chef de cuisine at so much per pound, feathers and all. Let us, therefore, bear with fortitude that which we can not avert. See how patiently Gertrude, my beloved daughter, awaits the keen blade of the guillotine. And to think that it was but yesterday that she was so happy in her girlish innocence at the thought of her forthcoming nuptials with his highness Willie Wishbone. So happy, so happy. And now all is undone."

"Your talk is that of a coward," fiercely declared Isaac Gizzard, known to all his tribe as a turkey full of bravery and the choicest corn in the barnyard. "Never will I submit without a struggle."

"Neither will I," shouted Felix Featherfoot, the wag of the party.

"Gentlemen, you will please come to order," gravely spoke the old king, as he vigorously rapped the gavel. "This is not a moment for gayety, nor is it a meeting for the discussion of the tariff. We must face the inevitable. Let us at least go to our death as befits the high station we hold in the estimation of the American palate. This being the case, it is now in order for each of you, my beloved subjects, to suggest to whom you would wish your lifeless clay given after immolation. Watson Whitemeat, you have the floor. Attention, gentlemen and ladies, while our learned brother makes his address."

Disposition of the Remains.

"Most worthy sire," began Watson, who was of a religious bent, "if it please this honorable body of noble martyrs, I would wish that, after the cruel headsman has done his bloody work I be handed over to the Society of Secret Sisters of Cranberry Avenue Church. Festivals will be held over my corpse and the wake of the Celt put to blush at the high old times which will be enacted."

"As for me, said Charity Drumstick, "nothing would suit better than to forward my plump and toothsome remains to the home of some poverty-stricken family. Even now I can see some wan-faced, sunken-eyed little prattler holding aloft one of my juicy limbs and shouting gleefully as he buries his little nose against my gravy-covered leg. And his poor half-starved mother! how greedily does she relish my tender flesh. That is my wish, most worthy ruler." And Charity sat down amid murmurs of applause, which made her blush to the color of her father's beard.

"Just ship me over to the Orphans' Home, old man," shouted Louey Last-Part-Over-the-Fence, the wildest little rascal that ever spread a feather. "What a time the kids will have as they scramble for my sage-stuffed body. And I'll bet a dish of cranberries that there won't be enough of me left after the assault to hold a grain of corn."

For the Old People's Home.

"Nothing would give me greater pleasure," said Dorothy Dressing, a matronly and serious-looking old lady, "than to be the center of attraction on Thanksgiving Day at some worthy widow's home. There, at least, I would be appreciated."

"And you, mighty potentate, where, oh, where, do you wish your remains to be sent when death has set his seal upon your bill?" was cried out in lusty chorus by all his subjects.

"Let my remains," and a deep silence fell like a pall over the gathering, "let my remains be sent to the editor of our paper," responded his royal highness.

The convention was over, and in less time than it takes to tell the story the band of noble martyrs were on their way to death.

MOTHER'S THANKSGIVING.

Such a quaint little Mother, in a gown of silver gray,
Her snowy hair smooth-parted, in the dear old-fashioned way,
And on her head a lint-white cap, of softest, filmiest lace,
That made a picture-frame about her sweet and placid face.

Such a brave little Mother! So many a year had fled
Since her husband, leal and loving, had been numbered with the dead.
So many, many summers had she borne a lonely heart
That her fair age and his bright youth were half a life apart.

Such a gentle little Mother! Ah! the boys remember now,
Sorrowfully, every shadow on that tender, tranquil brow;
They remember how she taught them, how she kissed them each at night,
And they felt no need of angels keeping watch till morning light.

Such a trustful little Mother! There were dark days now and then,
Though the dear lads never dreamed it until they were bearded men;
She would go away alone, kneeling in her chamber dim,
And would tell the Lord her troubles, casting all her care on him.

Such a happy little Mother! With a laugh like bells a-chime,
Ever swift to see the bright side, ready with a quip and rhyme.
O, so quick with love's own pity! O, so earnest 'neath the jest!
Ever lavishing her kindness, giving ever of her best.

Such a winsome little Mother! Why the village children came Trooping merrily about her; she knew everyone by name;
Baby faces smiled to greet hers, by some subtle impulse stirred,
As if fledgings knew the brooding of the tender mother-bird.

Such a true little Mother! Never dallying with wrong;
Honest to the very heart's core; bearing burdens late and long;
Paying every debt with interest; filling every day with wok,
With a deep disdain for any who the day's demand would shirk.

Such a blessed little Mother! Through their tears her sons to-day
Thank the God she served and honored that she sleeping passed away;
Lifted to the home in heaven, to the comrade gone before,
Just as earth's Thanksgiving greetings floated through the open door.
—Margaret E. Sangster, in Harper's Bazar.

In Our Dreams.

The Professor of Psychology was conversing with Mr. Higgins, the grocer, as that worthy man was wrapping up five pounds of coffee for the Professor.

"Did you ever notice, Mr. Higgins," remarked the Professor, "that what occurs to you in dreams never seems to be at all strange or out of the ordinary?"

"Come to think of it, Professor," replied Mr. Higgins, "I have; but I never gave it much study. Now that you mention it, I recollect several dreams that I have had that seemed to be right enough until I waked up and got to thinking about them."

"Ah," beamed the Professor, "that is interesting. Tell me about them."

"Well," and Mr. Higgins shoved the wrapped-up coffee across the counter to the Professor, "they didn't amount to no great deal, I guess. I only dreamed that my wife couldn't talk."

Christians Observe It.

Thanksgiving day is now celebrated by union services in all the Protestant, Catholic and Jewish churches in the United States. In the homes of citizens, without respect to religious faith or church affiliations, it is made a day of merriment and feasting, at which families long separated are reunited, and ceremonies of a social character prevail.

AN OLD-TIME CLERGYMAN.

Preached the First Protestant Sermon Where Chicago Now Stands.

In Plainfield, Ill., lives Rev. Stephen R. Beggs, who preached the first Protestant sermon delivered in old Fort Dearborn, where Chicago now stands. Despite the wear and tear of ninety-four years, this venerable preacher retains a wonderfully clear memory of the events of his early life and his trials as a Methodist minister. "Previous to my assignment to the Chicago circuit," said Rev. Mr. Beggs the other day, "I had a circuit in Missouri. That was where I first preached after being ordained. Ministers nowadays have no idea of what the work was in the '20's. It took me a month to make the round of my circuit. I traveled on horseback, and there were times when progress from place to place was nearly impossible. There were no roads laid out, no bridges over the streams, and there would be miles and miles of rank woods and underbrush unmarked by human habitation. When there were no fords the traveler had to swim, and in flood seasons on part of the circuit it came pretty near being a swim for it most of the time. The minister was not troubled much with fees in those days—it was lack of them. I worked one year and received $23 in cash, most of which went for extra clothing.

REV. S. R. BEGGS.

"The next year I received $33. The workers were called missionaries, and most of the money received was donated them by the Missionary Society of the church. The missionaries subsisted on what was given them by the members of their congregations. I had to look to the sisters for my clothes. The women made them of homespun, and great times they used to have in getting a new article of wearing apparel for the parson. The women of one congregation in the circuit would notice that my coat was frayed and threadbare. They would get up a sewing bee, and cotton they had raised themselves, perhaps, would be carded, spun and woven. Then they'd make a coat of the cloth, and when I got around again, lo, I'd have a new coat. Another congregation would furnish a pair of pants, another a set of shirts. I had no underclothes. At the end of each week I managed to reach a post where I had a clean shirt waiting. I would don the clean shirt and leave the other one to be washed. Thus, you see, it was necessary for me to have a set of five shirts—one that I wore and four that would be left at the stations along the circuit where my laundries were located."

Rev. Mr. Beggs was born in Virginia and on his mother's side is a descendant of the old Custer family, of which Gen. Custer was a scion.

PLAGUE AMONG THE FLIES.

Fungous Growth that Kills Them Off Rapidly in the Autumn.

During the fall of the year the housewife who has been pestered with house flies will begin to find their bodies sticking to walls and other places, and surrounded by a white, halo-like powder. A favorite place for the flies to die upon is a window pane, and upon the glass the peculiar character of their surroundings may be plainly seen.

Placed under a microscope of moderate power, the cause of the death of the flies can be plainly distinguished. It is caused by a fungous growth, which begins in the tissues of the insect, somewhat like a cancer, and finally pushes through the skin and goes through a sort of blossoming, producing spores by which it is further propaagated.

Other insects are attacked by related growths. Grasshoppers are particularly subject to such attacks, and the plant that kills them is known as the grasshopper fungus. That which attacks the fly is called Eupasa musca. It is a plant of simple organization, and is apparently related to the black molds. About forty related species are recognized. This one consists of short tubular threads. These push through the skin of the fly and produce the spores near their tips. When this happens the fly's body swells up, and he fastens himself somewhere to die.

Vast numbers of flies are killed by this fungus every year, particularly in the autumn. The marks they leave are a great annoyance to neat housekeepers.—New York Sun.

A Misnomer.

The schottische was so called from a popular idea that it was a Scotch dance. It really originated in Bohemia, was introduced into England in 1848, and was at first called the German polka.

THURSDAY.....NOVEMBER 22, 1894.

GOLD again began to go out of the country last week. We wonder if republicans will credit this to the election.

FORT WAYNE Natural gas Company has sold out to an eastern syndicate for nearly a million. Senator Brice owned about half the stock, and Ft. Wayne parties, the rest.

HON. NORMAN LATTA, of Haw Patch, died Tuesday of Bright's disease. He had been a member of the legislature and was well known over the north part of the state as a progressive farmer.

MILLERS from all the chief points in the country, met at Chicago last week, and decided to cut down the amount of flour made so as to raise the price. What farmers need is a higher price for wheat.

AARON JONES, of South Bend, is already a candidate for warden of the Michigan City prison. It will now be in order for republican editors to explain the strange freak of a republican wanting an office.

WESTON, the great walker, who about 26 years ago tried to walk 100 miles in 24 hours, going along the Lake Shore road from Wanseon to South Bend, is still in the ring. He lately made a 500 mile walk in New York state.

DR. McCOSH, so long the president of Princeton College, is dead. He was one of the ablest and best known educators of his time, and gave his college a prominence it had never known before. He was the idol of the students, whose favorite refrain was, "Dr. McCosh, by gosh."

MORAES, the new president of Brazil, was inaugurated Nov. 15. He is the first president really elected under the new republic. The first president, who went into office by a revolution, died. He was succeeded by his vice president, who held the place till the regular election last spring.

BIDWELL, who slandered the Catholic hospital officers at Ft. Wayne, is in a hard row. The supreme court has affirmed the judgment of $500 awarded against him in the circuit court. He is not worth the money, but a case against him for criminal libel may catch him yet.

THERE seems to be at least one new industry that has really started up since, and as a result of the late republican victory. It is the new sausage factory at Hammond, that uses up old broken down horses, and even the ones already dead. They had one before election, and now under the new impulse have started a second one.

IT WAS a republican boast that "the gates of Castle Garden always swing inward." And this encouraging foreigners to come in has made us worlds of trouble. For the past twenty years, the worst citizens of Europe have been coming in Now, there is a reaction, and many are going out. Let the gates of Castle Garden swing out a few years, and our own workmen will have more to do.

IT IS laughable to hear republican party papers tell of the killing effects of their success in the election. But they never mention the much greater success the democrats had only two years before Then, the democrats changed the presidency, the senate, and the House of representatives, all having been republican before. This time, the republicans change only the House of representatives. They seem to think this partial victory wipes out democracy, though they see that the greater democratic victory of two years ago did not wipe out republicanism. A party that controls the great destinies of this country is far from dead.

REPUBLICAN editors in the same breath call Wilson a free trader, and ask for "reciprocity" with Peru, or Brazil, or some other nation. But reciprocity with Peru is free trade with Peru, and reciprocity with Brazil is free trade with Brazil, and so on over the world. The Wilson bill did not secure free trade with any nation except on a few articles—not more in number than were on the free list in the McKinley bill. Why not call McKinley a free trader? The great difficulty with the McKinley bill was, it provided no revenue, because it put on the free list those articles that would produce a revenue. The Wilson bill put on the free list those articles that do not produce revenue enough to offset the injury they do our business interests, and it taxes those things that will produce a revenue. But neither Wilson nor McKinly are free traders in the light these editors put it. As to the "free trade" called "reciprocity," if it is a good thing to have wich Peru, Brazil, etc., why not have it with other nations whose trade relations are more valuable to us? Why not have it with the whole world if it is so desirable a thing?

Croup is a terror to young mothers. To post them concerning the first symptoms, and treatment is the object of this item. The first indication of croup is hoarseness. In a child who is subject to croup it may be taken as a sure sign of the approach of an attack. Following this hoarseness is a peculiar, rough cough. Children Cry for Pitcher's Castoria.

No Bliss for Bliss.

Strange to say, Bliss is unhappy. He says he "has been counted out." He says this several times in several different and sorrowful tones of voice. A man who will make such an assertion under the Indiana election law, ought to be investigated by a commission in lunacy. He certainly ought to be sent to the asylum for the feeble minded. The law has been for many years, even before we got the new election law, that two good men of each of the leading parties, should hold the elections as assistants to the inspector, and should count the ballots. This has always secured a fair count. Indiana has had less trouble in the matter of counting the votes than perhaps any other state in the Union. We recall only one case in her history, when there was trouble in the returns, and that was when Sim Coy, Perkins and Bernhamer altered the tally sheets at Indianapolis. And these worthies, two of them, were promptly sent to serve terms at Michigan City, Perkins only, getting off because he turned state's evidence. He did the work himself, but the others assisted in it. And this good job of punishing ballot tamperers, was partly the good work of two DeKalb county jurors, one democrat and one republican, both of whom voted to convict. This goes to prove that we can rely on, even "the old corrupt parties" to do justice in election cases. But even this noted case was not about any work done by the judges or clerks who sat on the elections boards, so it may be safe to say that we know of no election board in the state that proved false to their oaths to count the votes honestly. Yet it is these men, right here among us, men we know to be honest, that this imported early candidate accuses of "counting him out." The charge is ridiculous. It is infamous. He says he believes he "can find 200 old party men that will swear they voted for him." And yet he says he is only 10 ahead of his state ticket. Why ten DeKalb voters should desert their own candidates, respectable and well known citizens to vote for a man to represent them, who was on the same day casting his own first vote at a general election in the county, is one of those things no one can understand. These ten men could not altogether give one good reason for such a course. "The populists counted on about 2,000 votes" he says. Yes we know some of them did. But it was as wild a belief as some of the other things they tried to believe. There never was a reason for expecting 2,000 populist votes We had repeatedly shown them that they could not expect more than they had two years ago. In 1892 their average vote on county officers was 962. This year their average on county officers is 921, a loss of 41 votes, when comparing only county officers. If we take an average of the vote on all the officers, it will be found that their average in 1892 was 919, and this year it was 919, coming out the same. This also shows that their party vote on state ticket was 754 two years ago, and 952 now, an increase on the state vote of 198, which goes to prove that their local candidates ran behind their state ticket. Bliss gets 10 more than the state ticket, but according to his reasoning, this might have been caused, not by his great popularity but by the corrupt election boards counting out ten of the state ballots, so as to leave him ahead. The state ticket would be as likely to be cheated as the local.

"Do the old parties want the populists to have a fair count? If so, why do they exclude watchers?" This is one of several similar questions Bliss asks. Most certainly, the old parties, want to give populists and all others a fair count. At least the democrats do. For did we not frame the law so that election boards would be made up of two parties, the two parties that cast the highest vote at the last election? It was by this law, that the populists got half the judges and half the clerks on the election boards in Jackson township. Now, as to his second question, as to why watchers were excluded. They are excluded in obedience to a law, which distinctly says no other persons shall be present at the count except the five members of the board and the two election sheriffs. The two election sheriffs take the place of the two "watchers" provided for under the old law, the dropping off of which Bliss complains of. If seven men of different parties cannot insure a fair count, we do not know how many would do it.

The Place Where Farmers Make Money

There is one part of the country in which farmers have made money during the past year, and that is northern Wisconsin. There has been a demand for every product they can raise as well as for the timber and cordwood which they cut, at good cash prices. Any man who is industrious can get and pay for a farm in northern Wisconsin in a few years and can get employment at good wages while he is doing it. As much of the money for this great enterprise has been given by public spirited men, young and old, the association is able to give every member for the small sum of $10 00 per year (the cost of a full membership ticket) wonderful opportunities in the line of bathing, gymnasium, evening educational classes, reading rooms, entertainments, etc., etc. The talent secured for the members' receptions are in harmony with the building, embracing as it does some of the most talented artists in the country in their different lines. Such as Mrs. Genevra Johnston Bishop, the famous soprano solo singer, Mr. and Mrs Frank Beard, Mrs. Emma Hodge, the noted contralto soloist, Prof. S. E Jacobsohn, the violinist, Miss Maude Caruthers, the talented elocutionist, Prof Otto Pfefferkorn, Madame Chatterton, the celebrated harpist, Mr. Frank Pollock, the young and talented tenor, Miss Morgan, director of Elocution and Dramatic Art at the Chicago Conservatory, Rev. Frank W. Gunsaulus, D. D. and others of equal ability.

We are much pleased to note also the name of Miss Estella Merica of this city, daughter of County Superintendent C. M. Merica and we wish to offer our congratulations to Miss Merica that so early in her career, talent and character have secured for her a position among such artists.

We are informed visitors are welcomed and advise our friends when in Chicago to visit the Association Rooms at 153 La Salle St., particularly young men.

WATERLOO.

Mr. Pargue, of Fort Wayne, visited Waterloo Tuesday.

Mrs. O. C. Dickinson has gone on a visit to Marshall, Mich.

Dr. Showalter has purchased the Harmes property on South Wayne street.

If the people who will keep dogs would keep them at home they would greatly oblige their neighbors.

The south end meat market has again changed hands, this time a Mr. Scattergood, from Sedan, being the purchaser.

Mrs. W. H. Leas was shopping in Fort Wayne Wednesday. Mr. Leas was also there to attend the great Masonic meeting.

Mrs. Clara Day, of St. Joe, is at home with her parents, Mr. and Mrs Charles Voss. She has been very sick but is now getting along nicely.

Another family from Toledo have within a week moved into the east side of Giles Abbey's building on corner of Railroad and Franklin streets.

Mrs. Fletcher's lecture Thursday evening of last week was well patronized, and listened to with much interest. The C. E. feel greatly encouraged.

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Boozer are rejoicing in the arrival of an 8-lb. baby girl at their home the 17th. The little lady is named Julia, after Grandma Butler.

J. S. Holly, wife and daughter Katie, of Sulphur Springs, Colorado, are here, the guests of E Y Williamson and family. They called on many of their old friends, as they formerly resided here.

The G. A. R. post were pleasantly surprised Monday eve. by a social visit from the W. R. C. The ladies spread a fine lunch, and with speeches, recitations and music, the evening passed quickly away.

George Luce, of Toledo, has moved his family to Waterloo, where he will engage in the manufacture of cigars. He has rented and occupies Eli Williamson's fine building south of P. Fisher's on Wayne street.

The Jackson Contest.

DeKalb county has all the modern improvements. Next Tuesday the commissioners meet to hear the Jackson township trustee contest. At the late election, W. S. Dancer, populist, received 114 votes; James Provines, republican, 111 votes; Thomas McNamara, democrat, 107 votes. It now appears there were a number of republican votes thrown out for supposed irregularities, which Mr. Provines believes were not irregular and should have been counted. These, if counted for him, would more than elect him. Mr. Dancer was served with papers last Friday, and has employed J. E. and J. H. Rose as attorneys, while Provines has Hartman & Hartman. It promises to be an interesting case.

Got Their Judgment.

The judgment obtained by George McIntosh, administrator of the estate of Frances E. Anthony deceased, against the L. S. & M. S Ry. Co., was sustained last week, thus giving to the estate a judgment for the killing of Mrs. Anthony at what is known as the Long Crossing in Steuben county. Also the case of Daniel Anthony, for personal injuries received in the same accident, was sustained, giving him a judgment for $3,500. Since this sad accident, repeated efforts have been made to have these dangerous crossings so changed as to subject the public to less peril in traveling the public highway between Angola and Pleasant Lake. But the change is not an easy one to make and as yet nothing has been done. Penfield, Roby & Shuman were attorneys for plaintiff.

Courier Agent at Corunna.

We have secured the services of an active agent in the live town of Corunna, Mr. W. A. Cremean, the postmaster there. This will be not only an advantage to the COURIER, but to the good people of that section. He will receive all new subscribers who wish to take the COURIER, and is also authorized to take subscriptions from old subscribers and give receipts for same. Items of news, church notices, etc, may also be handed to him. We have a large list at Corunna, but there are still a few of our Richland and Fairfield friends who have not their names on the COURIER books. We hope to get more of them, for we think we shall give them the best paper in this section. 47tf

HARPER'S MAGAZINE IN 1895.

THE SIMPLETONS, a new novel by Thomas Hardy, will be begun in the December number, 1894, and continue to November, 1895. Whoever may be one's favorite among English novelists, it will be conceded by all critics that Thomas Hardy stands foremost as a master artist in fiction, and THE SIMPLETONS may by expected to arouse enthusiasm not inferior in degree to that which has marked Trilby—the most successful story of the year. Another leading feature will be the PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS OF JOAN OF ARC, by the Sieur Louis de Conte, Her Page and Secretary, under which guise the most popular of living American magazine writers will present the story of the Maid of Orleans. In the January number will appear a profusely illustrated paper on CHARLESTON AND THE CAROLINAS, the first of a series of Southern Papers.

Northern Africa is attracting more attention than at any other time since it was the seat of empires. The next volume of Harper's Magazine will contain four illustrated articles on this region, and three of them will depict the present life there. Julian Ralph will prepare for the Magazine a series of eight stories depicting typical phases of CHINESE LIFE AND MANNERS. Besides the long stories, there will begin in the January number the first chapters of A THREE PART NOVELETTE, by Richard Harding Davis—the longest work yet attempted by this writer. Complete short stories by popular writers will continue to be a feature of the Magazine.

Send for Illustrated Prospectus.

The Volumes of the MAGAZINE begin with the numbers for June and December of each year. When no time is mentioned, subscriptions will begin with the number current at the time of receipt of order. Cloth cases, for binding, 50 cents each—by mail, postpaid. Title-page and Index sent on application.

Remittances should be made by Post-office Money Order or Draft, to avoid chance of loss.

An exchange says roller skating is likely to come in again, after having lain quietly in the grave for several years. The cause of the resurrection is the pneumatic skate, a genius having fitted pneumatic tires to an arrangement that can be buckled to the foot. On a fair road, it is said, a speed of from ten to twelve miles an hour can be attained comfortably, and hills can be mounted or decended with as little exertion as attends the rider of a cycle. The weight of a pair of skates is only 2¾ pounds, so that they are readily portable when not in use, and the wheels are 4¼ inches in diameter, furnished with two tires, giving a total diameter of about 7½ inches.

The Art Amateur probably has never given two more attractive color plates than "The Boot-black," by J. G. Brown, and "The Old Home by the Roadside" by D. F. Hasbrouck, which appear in the November issue. Looking at these highly artistic facsimiles of oil paintings, it is easy to understand why a medal was awarded at The World's Fair to The Art Amateur, and why the Chicago Board of Education lately introduced into the High School of that city The Art Amateur's color studies as painting models—they have long been so used in the best art schools and academies. But these charming pictures are equally valuable for framing, and, indeed, they are so used in thousands of American homes. This very practical art magazine, however, by no means depends on its color plates alone for its popularity. What most conduces to its extraordinary success is that by giving a profusion of working designs, with easily understood directions for carring them out, it enables so many young people, of both sexes, to earn a living by painting, carving, designing and illustrating. No person of artistic tastes, who wishes to turn them to profit, can afford to be without this sumptuous periodical. (Price, 25 cents) MONTAGUE MARKS, Publisher, 23 Union Square, New York.

DI DIO, a New York concert hall high-kicker, has just married a millionaire clubman of that town. Serves her right.

THERE remains in the faces of women who are naturally serene and peaceful, and of those rendered so by religion, an after spring, and later an after summer, the reflex of their most beautiful bloom.

MEN are not altered by their circumstances, but as they give them opportunity of exerting what they are in themselves, and a powerful clown is a tyrant in the most ugly form in which he can possibly appear.

THERE is nothing more difficult to attain than measure. It is comparatively easy for the ascetic to spurn comfort and for the luxurious to deride asceticism, but it is hard for the wisest man to find out how far from either extreme the true path lies.

"MORGANFIELD," the Quantico train robber, turns out to be Charles Morgan, of Missouri, a popular young business man, whose wife knows only that he is "away on a business trip down East somewhere." We still maintain that we never have known of but one double life that was a success. The Siamese twins were all right.

CHINA has books 3,000 years old on the art of war. The maxims and rules of warfare as laid down in these books are something wonderful. One of the principal maxims that are instilled into the life of every Chinese officer is: "Spread in the camp of the enemy voluptuous musical airs to soften their hearts." Any one who ever heard the voluptuous airs of a boiler factory in full operation will appreciate the softening influence of Chinese music.

FROM all parts of the country come statements showing that the millers and dealers in breadstuffs are making desperate attempts to organize and stem the tide that is forcing flour and bread downward. We do not know what may be accomplished by the trust organizers in the way of keeping prices up. But we do know that there is not the slightest shadow of excuse for the maintenance of high prices so long as wheat is selling for 50 cents a bushel. Why should a loaf of bread made of 50-cent wheat sell for as much as one made of $1 wheat?

THE authorities have decided that Herr Most cannot act in Newark, N. J. Newark has been experiencing some labor troubles and the police prohibited the performance. Most then appealed to the Mayor and he took the matter under advisement. He read the play with great care and gave due attention to all other details of the proposed reduction. Then he retired within himself and thought, after which he announced his decision. It was that Most cannot act in Newark. Possibly the Mayor is right. In fact we are inclined to think he is. But why add "in Newark" to his decision? Why not say merely "Most cannot act" and let it go at that?

WE are not quite prepared to agree with Justice E. Clarence Murphy, of Brooklyn, in the valuatisn that, by implication at least, he puts upon Lottie Collins' ankle. Lottie sprained her ankle not long ago, and employed a physician to put it in "Ta-ra-ra-boom-de-aye" shape again, which, of course, means to make it as good as new. The physician, realizing the importance of the case—for what would "Ta-ra-ra" be with a sprained ankle—made ten professional calls and then sent in a bill for $87. Lottie thought that was too much, forgetting, apparently, that the injury was the most serious she could well sustain. She refused to pay, and in the suit that followed the Justice scaled the bill down to $20. In view of the circumstances, this seems to be an undervaluation. Had it been her voice or her wrist or her head that was injured, $2 a visit might have been enough to pay for repairs, but her ankle is of more professional value to her. What would Lottie amount to without a good strong ankle, anyway?

WHAT'S this? Vice President Wickes, the great Pullman leader, sued for divorce! There must be some mistake about this. Mrs. Wickes asserts that her husband is a brute and a coward, a domestic tyrant, cruel, vindictive, unmanly. She says that he habitually kicked her, beat her, abused her, and made her life shameful, miserable, and unbearable. She adds that he has brutal, disgusting, and beastly personal habits, and often used abusive and obscene language toward her. But perhaps she is mistaken. She has lived with him only twenty-three years, and every wife knows that such a period is not long enough for a wife to learn her husband thoroughly. Mr. Wickes during the recent Pullman strike occupied a moral and ethical pedestal several feet higher than any one else in the community. He was a great and good man and admitted it. He felt so sure of his position that he "hung out his banner on the outward wall" and inscribed on it in flaming letters: "There is nothing to arbitrate." It looks now as if that legend would have to be revised.

A BOSTON woman has been arrested for swindling a milliner. Any jury of married men will acquit her without hearing the evidence.

ADVICES from New York say that "Lillian Russell has taken on a new English accent since she went to London." Bosh! Who cares about what accent she may have taken on? How does the matrimonial score stand?

IT is but a little the wisest of us can know or the ablest of us can do. Modesty is becoming in all—it is the handmaid of truth; but neither truth nor modesty requires us to fear or to shun any knowledge, however small. Let us rather welcome it gladly, only endeavoring to add to it with every opportunity, and to hold it simply at its real worth.

CAPRIVI went out finally much in the same way that Bismarck did; because he was not supple enough in lending himself to the caprices of a shallow-minded Emperor played upon by intriguers opposed to the Minister. For in these cases it is not merely that the statesman has to wrestle with the immature and absurd fancies of a prince incapable of comprehending that an empire is not a toy, not a new yacht or other plaything, useful for the exploitation of his freaks and whims. But the Minister has to deal with undeclared elements of opposition—elements unknown to the public forum, but which play their malevolent intrigues in the circle immediately around the prince and inspire him to make difficulties of a sort that render it finally impossible for the Chancellor to hold his place. Bismarck had this experience before; Caprivi has had it now.

THE president of the Chicago Board of Education, who is opposed to what he calls fads in the public schools, but is desirous of introducing new arithmetics prepared or edited by the able instructors of the public school establishment, laughs loudly at a member of the board of education who, he said, was unable properly to spell separate. At the same time, however, the President of the Board of Education admits that he found himself unable to ascertain the answer to a proposition in arithmetic, one submitted to his boy. An able instructor, however, was quite ready with the process and the answer, though the president himself had not only wasted the midnight incandescent, but had seen rosy-fingered morn lifting up his curtain shades before he gave up the problem as too difficult for his solution. It is more discreditable to a member of the Board of Education to be unable to spell separate than it is to comprehend an ordinary proposition in simple rules of arithmetic? Much depends upon earlier education.

THE Notovitch story about an alleged sojourn of Christ in India is pretty effectually exploded by Max Muller in the October number of the Nineteenth Century. He says that letters have been received not only from missionaries, but also from English officers passing through Leh, who made careful inquiries on the spot, declaring that no Russian gentleman of the name of Notovitch ever passed through Leh, and that no traveler with a broken leg ever was nursed in the monastery at Himis. One of these letters is given in full. It is from an English lady, dated Leh, Ladahk, June 29, and contains the following words: "Yesterday we were at the great Himis Monastery, the largest Buddhist monastery up here—300 lamas. Did you hear of a Russian who could not gain admittance to the monastery in any way, but at last broke his leg outside and was taken in? His object was to copy a Buddhist life of Christ which is there. He says he got it and has published it since in French. There is not a single word of truth in the whole story. There has been no Russian there. No one has been taken into the seminary for the last fifty years with a broken leg. There is no life of Christ there at all. It is dawning on me that people who in England profess to have been living in Buddhist monasteries in Thibet, and to have learned the mysteries of esoteric Buddhism, are frauds." Max Muller discourses at some length on the improbability of the story, but this hardly is necessary. The direct report from Himis may be compared with the statement by a lawyer that there were fifty reasons why a certain person was not present at the trial, the first being that the man was dead. The court observed that the other forty-nine reasons for his absence need not be stated.

A Harp 320 Feet Long.

The largest harp ever built, so far as is known, was that invented and constructed by M. Veritau, provosst of Burkli, near Basle. It was known as the gigantic meteorological Æolian harp. It was 320 feet in length and was erected in the garden of its inventor in 1787. This harp consisted of fifteen iron wires, 320 feet in length, stretched between two poles. The wires were from two to three inches apart, the largest being one-sixth of an inch in thickness and the smallest one-twelfth of an inch. They were placed in the direction of north and south, and inclined in such a manner as to form an angle of from twenty to thirty degrees with the horizon, being stretched by means of rollers properly disposed for the purpose. Whenever the weather changed the wires sounded with such loudness that it was impossible to go on with a concert in the house. The sound sometimes represented the hissing noise of water in rapid ebullition, sometimes that of a harmonican, and sometimes that of distant chimes or an organ.—Brooklyn Eagle.

GOWNS AND GOWNING.

WOMEN GIVE MUCH ATTENTION TO WHAT THEY WEAR.

Brief Glances at Fancies Feminine, Frivolous, Mayhap, and Yet Offered in the Hope that the Reading May Prove Restful to Wearied Womankind.

Gossip from Gay Gotham.

New York correspondence:

MOST of the dresses for houseware presented in fashion plates are far too expensive for the ordinary purse. The trouble is that most women have other things to do at home than lounging gracefully, and have other cares than those attending upon their dress. For them a practicable house dress should not only be of attractive appearance, but be serviceable as well. Dresses of this sort can be made from unbleached muslin, crinkled crepe, summer prints, blue denim, turkey red or flannelettes. The skirt is made to stand out fashionably, for the most effective use of cheap stuffs is that which copies all such usages of the costly fabrics, and is fastened to a wide band. The belt should be wide, and the bodice very simple, with seams only under the arms, back and front being full over a tight lining. A high folded collar and sleeves of any one of the many correct shapes complete the dress, which is quite good enough for the morning meal, and still serviceable for after-breakfast duties. The same style can be carried out in pretty striped flannelettes, though they do not look as crisp as do cotton goods. Unbleached cotton makes up with blue denim charmingly for a practicable house dress. The skirt should be of denim, with a wide band of the white at the foot set just above the edge of the skirt, the bodice of the blouse order with the yoke, undersleeves, and a folded belt of cotton. Nothing could be prettier, easier to wash, or more practicable. Turkey red makes up prettily with unbleached cotton. The cheaper duck materials are especially suited to house skirts, and when they are made after the fashion suggested, can be worn with stiff collar-and-cuff shirt waists, and the little matron looks as fresh as a peach and as clean as can be. All such dresses are likely to be of some use when summer comes, and many of them really make valuable addition to the summer wardrobe.

Simple but a degree more dressy than these is the house gown in the first illustration. Its blue woolen crepe is of the cornflower blue that is now so much favored, striped finely with yellow. Yellow ribbon, black tulle and cream lace are used for trimmings. Around the hem the gored skirt is finished with a puff of the goods, put on with a small head on either side. The bodice is draped in front, but plain in back, where it fastens with hooks and eyes. An imitated jacket of coarse black net edged with cream lace ornaments its front. Yellow ribbon gives belt and collar, the former having bows in the center of front and back. The sleeves have fitted lining, over which a full breadth of the goods is draped and tacked here and there to keep the folds in place.

This sleeve is a rather novel one, a fact which is enough nowadays to make a complete success of a gown for the most exacting use possible. Recent sleeve models have, for the most part, had the sleeve puff—if not, indeed, the whole sleeve—end at the elbow. This shortening of the puff's extension below has been met by a like movement at the top and in some of the handsomest costumes the puff does not begin till a tightly fitted shoulder is exposed. Beginning high in the air about a woman's ears the puff has very slowly but surely slipped downward. Now that the elbow seems settled on as the very lowest place it can be permitted, the end of the sleeve puff can be foreseen, for with nipping off at top and bottom there will soon be little left but a tight sleeve. The tide of change may turn in another direction before this result is reached, but in the early stages of slipping off the elbow the puffs take on a very novel and attractive look. For example, take the second sketch: Suggesting strongly the styles of 183 , it will be promptly voted good enough for 1894 by most women. As sketched the bodice is made from rose-colored peau de soie trimmed on one side with three fancy jeweled buttons, and tucked on the shoulder.

The sleeves in the next sketch have not deserted the shoulder, and are tied in two puffs by mauve velvet ribbon, the blouse's material being fancy figured mauve flannel. It has fitted lining hooking in the center, and a yoke of tucked stripes of white gauze and lace insertion underlaid with lavender silk. Belt and fancy collar are also made of mauve velvet ribbon. The yoke is finished by a lace frill, the bodice being alike in back and front, and mauve velvet ribbon furnishes belt and collar.

It is nothing less than extravagant for a woman to buy all her neck fixings, collars, etc., in the shops. The fashion was not intended to be followed that way, but is meant to serve for the getting rid of all the odds and ends of ribbon, lace and "pretties." So followed it as an economy as well as an adorner. Coax the dressmaker to surrender a pattern, in buckram, of the high collar that fits you. Invest in a lot of buckram and cut patterns therefrom. Made over such a shaped foundation, the folded collar will set better than if made just straight around. For the best folded effect select a piece of satin nearly three times as wide as is the foundation collar, narrow it by loose pleats to the width of the foundation, leaving a little for turning over the edge at top and bottom. Start at one end of the goods and one end of the foundation and pin the pleats in place to the latter. Shape them loosely and softly along the curve of the collar, making another row of pins when the collar begins to turn for the round. It will need about four rows of pins at intervals to adjust the pleats to the curve of the collar. Sew where the pins are, remove the pins, face down the extra width top and bottom and turn over the ends. If it is desired to have it finished just right, the wrong side will have a facing, but the collar will set just as well without.

Now that the style of plain skirt and handsomely trimmed bodice prevails, a handsome bodice that can be worn with any kind of a skirt is especially desirable. Such a one is represented in the fourth picture. In it violet colored silk is combined with white satin. It is tight fitting, its lining fastens in the center and it has a seamless back made of bias material. In front there is a pleated vest of white China silk that is finished on either side with lace cascades. The revers and square sailor collar are cut in one from white satin and are veiled with white tulle lace. The wide belt is made of a corresponding shade of velvet and is drawn through a big, showy buckle in front.

Never before did buckles play so important a part in the general scheme of dress. The use of a buckle on the bodice just described is a common one, the only newness about it being the size and cost of the baubles now favored. But in other ways the buckle's scope of usefulness is much enlarged. Shoes and gloves fasten with them, hats and bonnets are almost incomplete without them, and for the dress it is decreed that it shall be admissible to have a buckle wherever there is a bow, a knot of ribbon or lace, or wherever drapery is massed for a fall in folds. Thus there are almost as many places as the dressmaker pleases where a buckle can be incorporated into the gown itself. One of the daintiest uses of them is in holding in place the puffs that are sometimes inclined to slump instead of droop. For this purpose comes a device made of a soft band of silk, to match the gown, of course, which is adjusted to the size of the arm by drawing through a buckle and then ties in a great soft bow. The bow does not hide the buckle, however, and so adds to the elaborateness of the sleeve. These sleeve buckles are sometimes elaborated into a long, curved affair, a good deal like a collar buckle, adding so much to sleeves elegant detail.

Reserved for the final illustration are two reception dresses. Of these the left hand one is made of old gold satin striped alternately with old blue and heliotrope. It is trimmed with old gold satin heavily embroidered with gold bullion, and narrow gold passementerie which comes down all the skirt seams. Besides this a wide band of embroidered satin is placed around the hem and is headed on both sides with the narrow galloon. The bodice is entirely of embroidered satin and fastens on the side. Its standing collar is covered with a stock of yellow mousseline. Rose-colored glace silk figured with small bouquets is trimmed with moss-green satin and with green and rose sequins in the companion costume. Two ends of the green satin, tied with green satin ribbon, trim the skirt, and the same material is used for the belt. The waist has fitted lining and a deep yoke of rose satin embroidered with spangles, which is bordered with a bertha of the same embroidered to match. The bertha is scalloped in back and front and is ornamented with four rosettes of green satin. The standing collar is of satin and the sleeves composed of two balloon puffs. The bodice lining fastens in the center, but the bodice itself hooks invisibly on the left side.

CAUSE OF THE DEFEAT

INEXCUSABLE DIVISIONS IN THE PARTY RANKS.

The Inability of the President to Work Harmoniously with Congress—Republicans, Though Triumphant, Triumph as a Minority Over a Divided Majority.

The Result.

Democratic defeat results immediately from deplorable and inexcusable divisions in the party ranks and more remotely from a series of blunders at Washington in which Grover Cleveland was the master spirit of evil.

If he had had a proper appreciation of the foe that was to be encountered when the Democratic party set out to destroy the protective tariff robbers of this country he would have summoned Congress in March, 1893. If that had been done, the mandate of the people, as even in the elections of 1890 and 1892, would have been far more potent than it was in 1894, when Congress tardily got to work on the Wilson bill; and many a man who, this year, sulked or held back or openly traded with the enemy, would have been in line doing loyal service in the cause of reform.

The almost inconceivable folly and stupidity of that delay was the fault of Grover Cleveland alone. Nearly all of the other blunders by the Democratic party grew out of this one fatal mistake. Started wrong, it went wrong, and at every turn it was given a further impetus in the wrong direction by some mischievous utterance from the White House.

The inability of the Democratic President to work harmoniously with a Democratic Congress, and all of the scandals and heart-burnings naturally growing out of such a condition of affairs, produced innumerable factions and gave renewed courage to a party that had been twice repudiated by overwhelming votes. Republicans win now, not because they deserve to win, nor because they constitute a majority of the people, but because their opponents are rent by feuds and jealousies, most of them foolish and all of them despicable.

Republicanism, rejuvenated for the moment by calamities of its own contrivance, has triumphed again, but it triumphs as a minority over a divided majority.

The doctrines that it is right and desirable for one man to tax many men for his own benefit is in the ascendant again, not because the millions who have scorned it have changed their minds as to its inherent scoundrelism, but because they have been disappointed in their leaders and have failed to act in concert.

The theory of the monarchists of Europe, ably supported by our Carnegies and Pullmans, that government should take care of the rich and the rich should take care of the poor, has received new life, perhaps, but it is still hateful to an overwhelming majority of the American people.

The Democratic party has not been convicted of the Republican party's crimes. It has been punished for its own shortcomings. It has fallen to pieces temporarily because it has lacked intelligent leadership and because the administration which it put into place has not justified the high hopes which were centered in it.

The party of monopolies and trusts, now triumphant, will enjoy a brief respite, but its doom is written in the very figures that record its victory. Taught in the school of experience, divested of many illusions, and, more valuable than all else, thoroughly awake to the nonsense of the hero worship which has been its curse for many a day, the Democratic party is now in a position to reorganize on rational lines and to resume its rightful place in the politics of the republic.—Chicago Herald.

The next Senator from New Jersey will be a straightout Republican, not an assistant Republican like McPherson or Smith.—Kansas City Star.

Veni, Vidi, Victim. We were whipped by our own people, but we will up and at 'em again.—Joliet Times.

Better times are sure to come under the tariff reform regime, and there is every reason to expect that at the next general election the Democratic stay at homes of 1894 will rally at the polls ready and eager to do their full duty.—Boston Globe.

The party was compelled to go before the country in a campaign of apology and excuses for a failure resulting from the most brazen and indiscreet asininity upon the part of men pretending to be Democrats and fighting the administration.—Springfield (Ill.) Monitor.

The Democratic party of course will reform its lines and prepare for the Presidential contest of 1896. New York domination of its policies has ended forever. It will go into the next national contest under Western leadership and upon a Western platform.—Evansville Courier.

No defeat can dismantle or disintegrate the Democratic party. Whatever the effect may be on party organizations, whatever the result may be to individuals, the principles of Democracy, which have existed since the foundation of this republic, will continue forever.—Albany Argus.

There is one thing certain, and that is that the Wilson tariff bill cannot be repealed in two years, and during that time the people will have a fair opportunity to judge whether a tariff for revenue is preferable to a tariff for the protection of monopolists, that makes millionaires at the expense of the masses.—Kalamazoo Gazette.

This defeat is not due to what Democracy has done, but to what it didn't do. It has lacked the courage of its convictions. It has dallied with the Delilah of protection. It has, in the Senate, been afraid of hurting the feelings of the minority and has dawdled and dickered and burned incense to tradition and courtesy. Had all the laws the Democracy demanded been passed promptly at the special session in 1893 we would not be standing today in the ashes of our hopes.—Terre Haute Gazette.

We assumed too much from the landslide of 1892. The people knew they were oppressed, they knew something was wrong, so they took the Democratic party at its word and swept Republicans from power. Democracy was dazed. It lacked decision. A start was made in the right direction by the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman law. It would have been better had that extra session been called earlier still. It would have been still better had it continued in session until the McKinley law was repealed and a new law formulated on Democratic lines enacted.—Toledo Bee.

Fixing the Responsibility.

While the United States Senate was dilly-dallying with the tariff last spring the Democratic party lost its opportunity of retrieving this year the disasters it sustained at the polls last year. There is not the slightest doubt about the hard times being the main cause of the political overthrow. Were the results different in the West from what they are in the East there would be some reason to suspect that different influences were at work, but the returns from the polls are the same in every State.

While the Senators were making long-winded speeches at Washington about the tariff, business continued paralyzed simply because men did not know what the ultimate outcome of Congressional disputation would be. Neither manufacturer nor importer dared to do anything, for he could not tell what customs duties he would have to compete with or would have in his favor. There was nothing to do but wait, and those out of work, and anxious to earn a living for themselves and their families, had to go hungry and wait with them. It was the Republican party which laid the foundations for the financial crash of last year, but it was the United States Senate that could not rise to the height of an emergency, and would not promptly repeal both the Sherman silver purchase law and the McKinley tariff act, which prolonged them, and which is therefore responsible for Democratic disaster.

Had Congress acted with that celerity which the country expected, business would have brightened up long ago, and the effects of the panic would have disappeared with last season's snow. The good results of Democratic rule would have been felt last spring, and the party could confidently have appealed to the people for their verdict on its work.

Now there is no hope of a reversal of the popular verdict, as rendered under misunderstood circumstances on Nov. 6th, so that it will have any effect, until 1896. Then the country will be once more prosperous, in consequence of Democratic rule, and the good work which has been interrupted will be resumed.

The Republicans, the defenders of monopolies and trusts, are jubilant just now, and perhaps they delude themselves into believing that they are in power once more for a generation to come. A Democratic Congress and a Democratic President will be elected, nevertheless, in 1896.

"Flooded" with Agricultural Implements.

During the debate in Congress on the Wilson bill, when it was proposed that agricultural machines and implements should be put on the free list, leading Republican journals made a great outcry, saying that the removal of the duties would cause the importation of agricultural machinery from Canada, "flood" the American market with the products of Canadian factories, and bring the domestic manufacturers to ruin. The new tariff does put on the free list plows, harrows, harvesters, reapers, drills, planters, mowers, horse-rakes, cultivators, thrashers and cotton gins, the duties to be exacted only when the implements come from a country which imposes duties on similar goods from the United States. But now the Canadian manufacturers want to move into this country. The Massey-Harris Company, a well-known concern manufacturing agricultural machinery at Toronto and Brantford, announces its determination to set up a factory in the United States, because it desires "to increase its export business" and is satisfied that the conditions affecting the manufacture of such machinery are much more favorable here than in Canada. The chief officer of the company in his published explanation asserted that the recent tariff legislation here had induced him and his associates to take this step. We commend this to the attention of the Republican journals which sadly predicted that the harrow trust and other American manufacturers of agricultural machinery would be ruined by imports from Canadian factories if the Democratic tariff should become a law.—New York Times.

Tariff Reform Hurts Only Trusts.

That the trusts in general have lost a considerable part of the protection they enjoyed under the McKinley tariff is shown by a computation lately made by the Bureau of Statistics of Washington, the specific duties being reduced to ad valorem. Thus the Borax Trust, which had a duty on boracic acid equal to 95 per cent. ad valorem, is cut down to 57 per cent. The Cartridge Trust is reduced from 40 per cent. to 30; cordage from 22 to 10; cotton thread from 56 to 44; flint glass from 60 to 40; window glass from 98 to 69; matches from 33 to 20; starch from 84 to 63; steel rails from 58 to 34; wall paper from 25 to 20. There is a small reduction also on the net protection to the Sugar Trust, but not nearly so much as there should have been.—New York Post.

Ideal Taxation.

The principle on which national taxation should be based ought to be precisely the same as that which underlies State, county and municipal taxation. The burden should be placed on property and not on consumption. That condition of things is met exactly by the principle of the income tax. That tax is an ideally Democratic measure. It is a tax for revenue only. It is a tax levied in proportion to men's ability to pay and in the ratio of the benefits they receive from the Government. It is a tax upon wealth, not want; upon accumulation, not industry; upon superfluity, not need. It is as near an approach to absolute justice as can be devised in connection with the need for taxation.—Grand Rapids Democrat.

The Democratic party stands for an income tax, a tax on wealth instead of want, on what men possess, not on what they eat and wear.

CURES SNAKE BITES.

The Poison of the Cobra, Asp and Other Reptiles No Longer Deadly.

One of the most notable advances in contemporary scientific research has just been made by a French physician, Dr. A. Calmette. For a year he has been experimenting upon poisonous snakes and through his efforts the deadliest serpents in the world have ceased to be deadly. He first began experimenting with the poison of the cobra, one of the most dangerous of snakes, and devised an antidote which renders this serpent's bite harmless. A rabbit inoculated against the cobra has showed itself proof not only against that serpent's poison but against the poison of the gyptian asp, the horned viper of Northern Africa and Australian snakes. Thus far Dr. Calmette has only tried his antidotes upon guinea pigs and rabbits, but as these creatures are especially sensitive to snake poison, what cures them will unquestionably cure man. As yet Dr. Calmette has not experimented with the American rattler, but believes he will find it as easy to deal with as the other species of poisonous reptiles.

Writing on this subject in McClure's Magazine Henry J. W. Dam says: It was found by experiment that the hypochlorides of sodium and lime were chemicals which neutralized the poison by chemical action. Chloride of gold is equally of value and ordinary chloride of lime gave perhaps the best results of all. And then Mr. Dam quotes Dr. Calmette on the remedies:

"I think that chloride of lime, in case of necessity, will very well meet all requirements in the cases of persons bitten. The chloride should be free from absorbed water, and when used should in all cases be freshly taken from a hermetically sealed bottle. One part of it should be dissolved in eleven parts of boiling water, and the solution should never be made until it is about to be used. This should be injected subcutaneously with a trophine all about the wound, and also under the skin of the abdomen, that it may enter the circulation as quickly as possible. No ligature about the part bitten is necessary.

DR. A. CALMETTE.

"I have not yet determined the amount necessary to be used upon a human being, because I have had no opportunity of making tests. In operating with rabbits I have found chloride of lime fully effective up to fifty minutes with animals that would have died in two hours, as shown by the fact that those that were not treated, all having received the same amount of venom, did die in that period. I estimate, from all the conditions, that from twenty to thirty centimetres of the solution will suffice to save the life of a man bitten, it being administered in doses of five cubic centimetres each.

Mr. Calmette believes that the venom of scorpions, tarantulas and centipedes will yield to the same treatment as that of snakes.

THE GREAT IRISH DEER.

Magnificent Creature Which Flourished in Prehistoric Times.

One of the extinct animals of prehistoric times is the great Irish elk, whose remains are found abundantly in Ireland. One of the skeletons which has been dug up from the clays underlying the peat of that country, measures ten feet four inches to the summit of the antlers, and the span of the antlers from tip to tip is eight feet. The weight of the skull and antlers is seventy-six pounds. In some cases the antlers have measured more than eleven feet from tip to tip. The body of the animal as

A German Custom.

A custom that has existed for several centuries is still maintained in some towns on the lower Rhine. On Easter Monday—auction day—the town crier or clerk calls all the young people together and to the highest bidder sells the privilege of dancing with the chosen girl, and her only, during the entire year. The fees flow into the public poor box.

Pains in the Back

"I had been afflicted for several years with what the doctors called Diabetes, and suffered terribly. The pain in my back was agonizing in the extreme. Hood's Sarsaparilla and Hood's Pills cured me. Now I can go to church and attend other meetings with pleasure. I always keep Hood's Pills by me. In my whole life I never met anything that did me so much good as Hood's Sarsaparilla. 'Experience teaches a dear school, but fools will learn by no other.' I was once foolish enough to listen to a druggist who claimed to have something superior to Hood's, and took another medicine. If I had thrown my dollar in the street I would have been a gainer." To Preserve the Eyes.

An oculist sounds a warning to those who would keep their eyes in good order. He says: It is injurious to rub the eyes while they are inflamed by the cutting winds and the dust raised thereby, and equally so to bathe them and go out immediately again in the air, as then there is danger of catching cold. Most of the eye troubles in cold weather are caused by imprudence in rubbing or bathing. In rubbing the eyes the tear line from the outside to the nose should be followed, though the majority pass the fingers from the inside outward, which, he asserts, affects the sight and causes "crows' feet."

Muffs.

Muffs first came into use in 1540. They were introduced by doctors, who wanted to keep their hands soft and warm while riding from the house of one patient to that of another. Women soon copied the doctors, and the latter at once abandoned the fashion and began to use great fur gloves instead.

CHAPTER VI—Continued.

Another two days, and he would get an answer. Be it so, perhaps. In the few words that he was determined at all hazards to say to his darling before he left—to herself only, regardless of ceremony or custom—the sanction of his mother's approbation would be a help and a consolation. He should be able to tell the orphan that it was not his arms alone that were open to receive her, but those of a new mother, ready to replace, if any could replace, in some small degree, her who was gone. Very unlike they were, and he had a secret fear that it was a different sort of a daughter-in-law that Mrs. Jardine would have preferred—one much grander, richer, handsomer. Silence had the loveliness of lovableness; but even in his wildest passion, her lover knew she was not handsome. Still, in spite of all, there were two things he never doubted to find in his mother—her strong sense and her warm heart.

To these he trusted, and felt that he might safely trust the girl he loved—the girl who would make him all he lacked, all that his mother wished him to be. He pleaded this in a letter, touchingly earnest and tender, which, on second thoughts, he determined on writing home. His heart was full—full to overflowing; and, almost for the first time in his life, he poured it out, where, under such circumstances, every good son is right to pour his heart out—into his mother's bosom.

Going to the post, letter in hand—for he had learned Silence's habit of doing things at once, and doing them herself, if possible—he met Sophie Reynier, in mourning dress, hastening to comfort and sustain her friend during the funeral day.

"Do you think you could take me into the house with you?" he pleaded. "Nobody would know or be harmed thereby. In my own country we even think it a tribute of respect to the dead to be allowed to look at them once more. And Mademoiselle Jardine——"

Sophie Reynier suddenly turned to him with a flash of womanly emotion in her kind blue eyes—penetrating as kind.

"Monsieur, you are an honest man—what in England you call a 'gentleman.' You could never act otherwise than kindly to such a defenseless creature as Mademoiselle Jardine?"

"God forbid, no!"

"Then I will take you."

But she did not admit him at once, and finding that Mme. Reynier had gone out she told him to come back in an hour, at eleven o'clock.

"By then I shall have persuaded Silence to repose herself for a little. She has not slept all night, and is very restless. She may hear you. Go away now."

He obeyed at once, and went to search through the little town for a few more winter flowers, to "shut them inside the sweet, cold hand," like Browning's "Evelyn Hope," saying to himself the lines—

So that's our secret. Go to sleep:
You will wake and remember and understand.

As he stood in the salon of his hotel arranging the little bouquet and tying it up with a bit of white ribbon which he had gone into a shop and bought his look was tender, rather than sad, and with a this reverence for the dead, he could not forbear thinking whether she—his living love—would notice the flowers or ask who put them there.

"Monsieur, a telegram for monsieur!"

It startled him for a moment. Not being a man of business, Roderick was unaccustomed to telegrams; besides, his mother had a strong old-fashioned aversion to them. Yet this one came from her. At least, the address and name were hers though the wording was in the third person.

"Your mother is not well. Come home immediately."

This was all; but it came with such a blow to Roderick, who inherited his father's nervous temperament, that he felt himself turning dizzy and obeyed the friendly garcon's suggestion that monsieur had better sit down

His mother ill? She, the healthiest person imaginable! and she had written to him only a few days before, saying nothing of herself except of her endless duties and engagements. It must be something sudden, something serious. He was wanted "immediately." She could not have got his letter, there was barely time, or surely she would have answered it. Perhaps she was too ill even to read it? His poor mother—his dear, good mother! All the son in him woke up; perhaps all the more for thinking of that other mother, whose dead face he was just going to see.

He might go there—there was time; no Paris train started till afternoon, and rereading the telegram it seemed a little less serious. Though "not well" might be only a tender way of breaking to him a far sadder truth.

"Oh, mother, mother!" he almost sobbed out, as he walked hastily along the lake-side, "if anything should happen to you If I should lose you, too, before I have learned to love you half enough."

And all the passionate remorse of a sensitive nature, a doubly sensitive conscience, rose up in the poor fellow's heart. He accused himself of a hundred imaginary short-comings, and suffered as those are prone to suffer who judge others by the standard of themselves. It was only by a great effort that he controlled himself so as to present the quiet outside necessary on reaching Mme. Jardine's door, from which she would soon go forever; nay, from which she had already gone. He knew not whom to ask for. He stood silent and bewildered: but the little bonne seemed to understand, and admitted him without a word.

Beyond the salon was a small bed chamber which mother and daughter used to share. In the center of it stood, raised a little, and covered with something white, that last sleeping-place where we must all one day rest.

How long he stood there, gazing on the still face so exceedingly beautiful—he had never thought before what a beautiful woman she must have been—Roderick could not tell. At last the door, which had been left ajar behind him slightly stirred. He thought it was the bonne, and would not turn he did not wish her to see his dimmed eyes. It was more than a minute before he looked up and saw, standing quietly on the other side of the coffin, the orphaned girl, the girl whom he adored like a lover, and yet seemed to cherish already with the protecting tenderness of a husband who has been married many years.

Perfectly pallid, dead-white almost, from the contrast between her black dress and fair hair, Silence stood and looked at him; merely looking, not holding out her hand—both her hands were resting on the coffin. She spoke in a whisper.

"You are come to see her once again? That is kind. She always liked you. Is she not beautiful? But she is gone, you see! She has gone away and left me all alone."

One sob, just one, no more. Nothing in his life had ever touched Roderick like the strong self-command by which this frail girl in her utmost agony controlled its expression, and, recollecting herself, summoned all her courage, dignity—the sacred dignity of sorrow, which asks no help, no consolation.

"You must forgive me; my grief is new. Are these your flowers? Thank you; they are very sweet"

And taking them from him, she began arranging them in the folds of the shroud, gently and carefully, as if she were dressing a baby, then drew the kerchief once more over the dead face.

"Now you must go away."

"I will," he answered—the first words he had uttered. "Only, just once."

Tenderly removing the face-cloth again, Roderick stooped and pressed his lips upon the marble brow of this dead mother, only making a solemn vow—would that all men made the same, and kept it, to other dead and living mothers! Something of its purport must have been betrayed in his look, for when his eyes met those of the girl opposite she slightly started, and a faint smile suffused her cheek. Fading, it left her deadly pale; she staggered rather than walked, though alone, refusing all help, into the next room.

There she sat down, Roderick standing beside her. The door was open between, he could see the foot of the coffin and its white drapery. Though now, for the first time, he was alone with his chosen love, knowing well, and having an instinct that she must know, too, that she was his love, and ever would be, there was so great an awe upon him that he could not speak one word, not even of the commonest consolation or sympathy. And, though he could have fallen on his knees before her and kissed her very feet, he dared not touch even the tips of her poor little pallid fingers, so strangely idle, their occupation gone.

"What am I to do without my mother?" Silence said at last, with a piteous appeal not to him or to anybody, except perhaps that One to whom alone the orphan can always ago.

Roderick could bear it no longer: his manhood wholly deserted him. He turned away his head and wept. The two sat there, ever so long, sobbing like children; and like children—how it came about he hardly knew—holding one another's hands. That was all! No more, indeed, was possible, but it seemed to comfort her. Very soon she rose from her chair, quite herself—her quiet, grave self, robed in all the dignity of sorrow."

"Thank you; you have been very kind in coming to-day and in wishing to come this afternoon, as I hope you will."

Roderick had forgotten all about the telegram and his mother—everything in the world except Silence Jardine.

He drew the paper out of his pocket and laid it before her. "Read this! I got it half an hour ago. Say, what must I do?"

Silence read, slowly, and putting her hand once or twice over her forehead, as if trying hard to understand things, then looked up at him with compassionate eyes.

"Your mother ill? I am so sorry for you." Then, after a minute's pause: "You will go—and at once?"

"Yes, at once."

Both spoke in whispers still, as if conscious of some sacred presence close beside them. He was, at least, feeling this; as if a soft dead hand were laid on his wildly beating heart, and sealing his passionate lips, else he could not possibly have controlled himself as he did.

"I feel I ought to go. But my mother may be better soon. She is very seldom ailing. As soon as ever I can, I shall come back again to Neuchatel—to you. You believe that?"

"Yes." One little word, uttered softly, with bent head, and, after an instant, repeated, "Yes."

Roderick felt his brain almost whirling with the strong constraint he put upon himself.

"One thing more you shall decide," he said. "The train starts this afternoon at the very hour I ought to be—you know where. Shall I delay my journey—just for one day?"

"Not for an hour." Silence answered, almost passionately. "Remember, you never can have but one mother. Go to her at once!"

And so he went, without another word, scarcely another look, he dared not trust himself to either.

The two or three minutes he stayed were occupied in explaining to Sophie Reynier about the telegram, his mother's illness, his compelled journey, and his certain return as soon as possible.

"You will say all this to Monsieur Reynier? And I shall find her with you when I come back?"

"Certainly. Yes."

"You will take care of her?"

"I will."

He looked at kind Sophie. There was the tender light of her love for her own good young pasteur shining in her eyes. "Thank you" Roderick took her hand and kissed it, and was gone.

He got to Richerden about 4 in the morning—a thorough Richerden morning, or rather night—of sleet and snow and blinding rain. Entirely worn out with fatigue, he came at last to his mother's door.

For the moment he hardly believed it was his mother's, but that he must have made some egregious mistake. For the house was all lighted up, carriages were going and coming, daintily muffled figures filled the entrance-hall—it was evidently the breaking-up of some festive entertainment.

He had pictured to himself the silent house—the night of anxious vigil over sickness—death; for even that last terror had, as he neared home, forced itself upon his weakened nerves. Instead, he came in at the end of a ball!

"My mother—how is my mother?" were the first words that passed his lips—they had been knelling themselves into his tired brain for the last hundred miles.

There she was, standing half way up the staircase, in her ruby velvet, point lace and all ablaze with diamonds—a little tired and old-looking, as was natural at 4 in the morning, but beaming with health, good-nature, and the exuberant enjoyment of life.

What a contrast to the dead mother whom he had left in her coffin so many hundred miles away!

Waiting for a pause in the stream of guests, Roderick hid himself in the shadow of the door till Mrs. Jardine's voice, loud and hearty, had repeated a series of hospitable adieus. Thence he emerged, a somewhat forlorn figure, into the brilliant glare of light.

"Goodness me, Rody! is that you, my dearest boy? Girls, your brother is here!"

She wrapped him in a voluminous embrace, and kissed him many times with true maternal warmth.

"Mother, you have not been ill? There is nothing wrong with you?"

"No, my darling, what should there be? Oh, I remember—the telegram."

A sudden cloud came over her face, which was repeated with added shadow on her son's.

"Yes, the telegram. I thought you were ill, and I came home as you bade me, immediately. Never mind. Good-night."

"Stop, my dear. Just stop."

But he would not; and went straight up stairs to his own room.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

CRUSOE'S ISLAND.

It Is Now Inhabited and Possesses a Little Town.

It is not generally known that Juan Fernandez—the island on which Alexander Selkirk, the Robinson Crusoe of romance, lived so many years—is at the present time inhabited. Two valleys, winding down from different directions, join a short distance back from the shore, and there now stands little village of small huts scattered round a long one-storied building with a veranda running its whole length. In this house lives the man who rents the island from the Chilian Government, and the village is made up of a few German and Chilian families

The tiny town is called San Juan Bautista, and the crater-like arm of the sea on which it is situated, and where Alexander Selkirk first landed, is now called Cumberland Bay. The island is rented for about £200 a year. The rent is paid partly in dried fish. Catching and drying the many varieties of fish and raising cattle and vegetables wholly occupy the contented settlers, and much of their little income is obtained from the cattle and vegetables sold to passing vessels.

At the back of the little town, in the first high cliff, is a row of caves of remarkable appearance hewn into the sandstone. An unused path leads to them, and a short climb brings one to their dark mouths. About forty years ago the Chilian Government thought that a good way to get rid of its worst criminals would be to transport them to the island of Juan Fernandez. Here, under the direction of Chilian soldiers, these poor wretches were made to dig caves to live in. In 1854 they were taken back again, however, and the caves have since been slowly crumbling away.

The narrow ridge where Selkirk watched is now called "The Saddle," because at either end of it a rocky hummock rises like a pommel. On one of these is now a large tablet with inscriptions commemorating Alexander Selkirk's long and lonely stay on the island. It was placed there in 1868 by the officers of the British ship Topaz. A small excursion steamer now runs from Valparaiso to Juan Fernandez island. The round trip is made in six days, and three of these may be spent on the island in fishing and visiting those lonely, but beautiful, spots which nearly 200 years ago were the haunts of Robinson Crusoe.

A Great Man Avenged.

"Do you love life?" asked the big man as he kicked up the sawdust and fell heavily into a chair at one of the pinochle tables.

"I suppose I do," said the quiet German who kept the place.

"Well, then, bring me a schooner of beer, and if there's a collar on it you don't get a cent, see?"

The big man drank the beer at one dripping gulp and then glared unsteadily around the room at the Bock beer sign, the announcement of the Schwaben picnic, the steel engraving of Germania and the picture of Bismarck.

"Who's that gazaboy?"

"He is te ghreat Pismarck."

"Great nothin'. He ain't in it. That's what he ain't."

The proprietor looked at the icepick, and then he changed his mind.

"Haf a peer," said he.

"I'll go you," said the big man. He accepted a third and fourth. On the eighth he fell asleep over the table.

The quiet German went to the door and called in a heavy policeman. "Here's a goot cigar," said he. "Take him in. He's peen disorderly. I appear myself at te station."

Five minutes later two policemen hauled out the big man, whose dragging toes left long, snaky lines along the sawdust. The quiet German dusting the picture, said: "Pismarck is affenged, I pet you."—Chicago Record.

It Was a Dangerous Toy.

The fascination which a snake exercised over Nellie, the 3-year-old daughter, of Mrs. Fogarty, of Camden, N. J., was almost paid for by her life the other day. The child was playing happily in the yard in the afternoon, while the mother was busied with her household duties. For a while the little one enjoyed her innocent adventures with fairies, with elf men and brownies, conjured up by her child-mind, but in the midst of these fancies there came wriggling across the yard a serpent, a sand viper. Nellie ran after the snake for a time, and then, desiring closer acquaintance, picked it up in her little hands and began to pet it. The serpent squirmed and wriggled, and the child tried by soothing words and caresses to soothe it into quietude. So well did she succeed that in a burst of admiration for her pupil's docility, she put the ugly monster to her mouth, intending to kiss it. Then the viper's cunning unmasked itself. Two little fangs shot out, they pierced the child's lips and the serpent held fast. Attracted by the child's screams the mother came and killed the snake and by hard work the physicians saved the little one's life.

He Snored While the Storm Raged.

During a voyage across the Atlantic several years ago, says a traveler, a terrific storm arose and it seemed as if our boat would be surely lost. The passengers crouched in their cabins in mortal terror, expecting every moment to go down to the bottom. The captain assured them that there was no danger, but all expected that their time had come—all save one. This fellow, who was an inveterate snorer, lay peacefully in his cabin soundly asleep in the midst of the uproar. His wife rushed in the cabin crying: "Lucien, O Lucien, the vessel is sinking!"

Lucien turned over, partially awoke, and murmured: "Sinking, are we? (Snore.) Well, let her (snore) sink. What are you (snore) going to do (snore) about it?"

His remarkable coolness partially served to allay our fears and the storm shortly after went down.

Western Phenomena.

In the Western deserts a spot of ground becomes excessively heated, causing the air above to descend. This produces an influx of the atmosphere from all sides, but unequally, the result being a gyratory motion and a sandstorm.

MANY folks flatter themselves they are fairly good because they are not entirely bad.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Afraid of Poverty, Poor Thing.

Miss Sylvia Green has a fad which is hers by inheritance. It is for money. But, unlike her mother, Mrs. Hetty Green, it is not for the making of money, but for saving it. She is constantly in fear of the poorhouse and is afraid to spend a cent. She has $3,000,000 in her own right from her grandfather, but spends nothing. She is agreeable to live with, being quiet, amiable, and accommodating, though not so cheerful as she might be. She is not stingy to the household, but will not spend anything on herself. She has devised almost every kind of bank for saving "her spare" change and is always looking ahead into the future, with her money hidden in her hand for safe-keeping. Her friends say that this is the result of early training, and will be eradicated if she ever comes into the fifty or so millions her mother will leave her.—New York Sun.

Doubtful Dainties.

In the dingy restaurants frequented by the lower orders of Rome, Florence, and Naples, a dish composed of a harmless wood serpent's flesh is regarded as something of a dainty. Parisians of the inferior classes are also great eaters of fried snakes, but unwittingly so, for the reptiles are palmed off on them as eels. The snakes are caught in the wilder part of the Vincennes Wood and brought up to a special market near the Place de la Republique. It is probable, however, that even if the members of the poorer classes there who occasionally indulge in eels were apprised of the fraud practiced at their expense they evince no loathing nor even lack of appetite, seeing that they are ready to devour not only horseflesh, but meat of mule, donkey, and dog, any day in the week.

You Deserve a Good Shaking.

And chills and fever will give it if you don't take defensive measures to escape the periodic scourge in a region where it is prevalent. The best safeguard and remedy is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which is free from any objections applicable to quinine, and is infinitely more effectual. Wherever on this continent and in the tropics malarial complaints are most virulent and general, the Bitters is the recognized specific and preventive. It does not mitigate, but eradicates chills and fever, bilious remittent, dumb ague and ague cake. For rheumatism, inactivity of the kidneys and bladder, for constipation, biliousness and nerve inquietude it is of the greatest efficacy, and the unsolicited testimony in its behalf of eminent medical men leaves no reasonable doubt that it is one of the most reliable family medicines in existence. Use it continually, and not by fits and starts.

The Knot Was Not Tied.

Rather an old couple applied at the "Little Church Around the Corner" a few days ago to be married. He was handsomely dressed and about 25 years of age, while she was younger and quite pretty.

As soon as they had announced what they wanted the woman paused and said: "John, hadn't we better wait?"

"Why?" he asked.

"Well, we've only got $60, and maybe the lawyer won't give you your decree if you don't pay him and—"

But before she got any further she was informed that Rev. Dr. Houghton didn't marry divorced persons. That settled it: there was no marriage.—New York Morning Journal.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury.

As mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is tenfold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, and acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co.

Imperial Granum,

of all cases of consumption can, if taken in the earlier stages of the disease, be cured. This may seem like a bold assertion to those familiar only with the means generally in use for its treatment; as, nasty cod-liver oil and its filthy emulsions, extract of malt, whiskey, different preparations of hypophosphites and such like palliatives.

Although by many believed to be incurable, there is the evidence of hundreds of living witnesses to the fact that, in all its earlier stages, consumption is a curable disease. Not every case, but a large percentage of cases, and we believe, fully 98 per cent. are cured by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, even after the disease has progressed so far as to induce repeated bleedings from the lungs, severe lingering cough with copious expectoration (including tubercular matter), great loss of flesh and extreme emaciation and weakness.

Do you doubt that hundreds of such cases reported to us as cured by "Golden Medical Discovery" were genuine cases of that dread and fatal disease? You need not take our word for it. They have, in nearly every instance, been so pronounced by the best and most experienced home physicians, who have no interest whatever in misrepresenting them, and who were often strongly prejudiced and advised against a trial of "Golden Medical Discovery," but who have been forced to confess that it surpasses, in curative power over this fatal malady, all other medicines with which they are acquainted. Nasty cod-liver oil and its filthy "emulsions" and mixtures, had been tried in nearly all these cases and had either utterly failed to benefit, or had only seemed to benefit a little for a short time. Extract of malt, whiskey, and various preparations of the hypophosphites had also been faithfully tried in vain.

The photographs of a large number of those cured of consumption, bronchitis, lingering coughs, asthma, chronic nasal catarrh and kindred maladies, have been skillfully reproduced in a book of 162 pages which will be mailed to you, on receipt of address and six cents in stamps. You can then write those cured and learn their experience.

ENCOURAGEMENT.

Extracts from a Sermon Delivered by Rev. Frank Colvin at the Presbyterian Church Sunday, Nov 18th.

Text—"Encourage thou him." II Sam. xi, 25.

The reading of the twenty-fifth verse, gives us the setting of our text. Joab was the leader of the king's forces. In the conflict here referred to, David was warring for an unlawful purpose. It seems that the battle had been won, at least David's object had been accomplished. Many of Joab's men had been slain. The messenger reports to the king what they had gained and what they had lost.

Joab was fearful lest the king should be displeased. But David spoke words of encouragement for Joab. He said to the messenger, "Encourage thou him."

Encouragement in wrong directions will assist men to accomplish wrong objects; just as encouragement in right directions will stimulate them to right victories. Those of you who stood in the deadly conflict of war, before the enemy's guns, know well how words of encouragement helped you win the battle.

I wish to speak this morning of a conflict in which we are all engaged—Life's conflict. Each one of you knows something of life's battles. When cast down and heartsick, you have felt that a word of cheer or encouragement would have been like a burst of sunlight upon your soul. But probably that word was never spoken.

We need to train ourselves more diligently and conscientiously to the habit of giving cheer and encouragement. This is true, because to many people, life is hard. Its duties, for all of us, are stern and severe. We should remember that often behind smiling faces are sore hearts. We cannot see the secret sorrows that weigh like mountains upon many a gentle spirit.

The little battles of life are often fierce. Cherished hopes fade often like flowers in the early autumn, when the first frost comes. Because there is so much that is disheartening in life—it becomes our duty to watch for every opportunity to put a little brightness or better cheer into the lives of those we meet.

It is surely a great mistake for pastors and teachers to be uttering messages of discouragent. We should refrain from uttering one sentence which would check the enthusiasm of hopeful hearts, or add to the fear or depression of one who is already downcast. The church is sometimes kept from aggressive work and earnest progress by the discouraging utterances of some of its members. Encouragement and cheer give men and women a larger hopefulness.

There is a class of people who are constantly looking on the dark side of things. Meet them when you may, speak to them on whatever theme you choose, they will leave a depressing influence upon you. It is difficult to estimate the chilling influence of such lives.

Then there is another class of people who live to give cheer and encouragement. Thank God for the influence of such lives. They are not around casting shadows. If you have only a greeting from them, as you pass hurriedly by, it is cordial, so inspiring, that you feel better for your day's labor because of that greeting. They inspire fresh courage, they make you stronger, and add to your determination to succeed in life. The ministry of such lives helps us fight the battles of life successfully. Somehow I feel that we should never lose an opportunity to say an inspiring word.

You sometimes speak words of kindness to me. Do you say to the child, "you please me." Do you say to the wife, "You have done well; you comfort and cheer me?" Do you say to the husband, "You are kind and thoughtful." The one who encourages and cheers justly and wisely, grows to be more like the sunshine and spreads joy wherever he goes.

Young people need encouragement in their training and education. In many homes the prevalent temper of parents is that of fault-finding and censure. The great artist, Benjamin West, said the affection of his mother made him a painter. Every improvement and mark of progress in the child will be, by wise teachers and parents, spoken of approvingly. Cheer and encouragement is like the summer—it calls out every lovely possibility of strength and beauty.

Encouragement! Encouragement is the sunshine most lives need. All conditions of manhood and womanhood are waiting for sympathy and cheer. Disheartening words anywhere are treasonable. Let us never add to life's burdens, but at every possible opportunity let us breathe cheer and encouragement and new courage to those about us.

One deserter reported.

November, 1894.

Three of Geo. Tappin's children are down with sore throat.

One of Mrs. Boher's children, who lives near the old flour mill site, died suddenly last Saturday.

The election passed off very quietly here, but the news received during the night made nearly everybody run and yell.

BUTLER.

J. A. Campbell visited Angola on business last week.

The sick children are getting better and school continues in session.

J. P. Jadwin, wife and daughter Mamie of Orland, Sundayed with Butler friends. They were called on account of the death of Mrs. Helwig, whose husband is Mr. Jadwin's nephew.

Our people were pained and shocked last Thursday by the sudden death of Mrs. Josie Helwig, wife of Jacob R. Helwig, who lives on his father's farm one mile north of town. She did her washing on Monday, ironed on Tuesday, on Wednesday was confined to her bed, and about five o'clock on Thursday, died, caused by jaundice. Mrs. Helwig was a daughter of Henry Whetsel, an old and well known citizen of this township, and was about thirty-three years of age. She leaves her husband, a little daughter six years of age, and a son about four years old. Her aged father and mother, four sisters and two brothers mourn her untimely death. Her funeral took place from the Lutheran church last Saturday, Rev. Dustesin of the Lutheran church officiating. The bereaved husband and motherless children have the hearty sympathy of all our people.

Mr. Hutton has four very sick horses. Dr. Adams, of Auburn, is the veterinary surgeon in charge.

Mrs. H. Baker and two children are visiting in the family of her father, Joseph Koch, at Fairview.

D W. Morr has just completed the addition to his house. Shriver's house is almost ready for the plasterers.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Layman have erected a most beautiful monument, furnished by Madden Bros., of Auburn.

S. T. Lutz is having trouble with one of his eyes. If not better shortly, he will leave for Ann Arbor for treatment.

Rosa Lily, Frank Jones and Charlie Camp, of Edgerton, O., were guests of the Layman children last Sunday.

Thirty-five friends of Mrs. Bone gave her a birthday surprise Tuesday evening. Her sister Mary decoyed her to the home of Mrs. Sheldon, returning about 8 o'clock to find all their plans perfected. A splendid supper was enjoyed by all. Her hubby thinks she has not yet fully recovered.

SUMMIT.

Jay Kettering started to Pleasant Lake to school this week.

Mr. A. Franks went to Auburn on business last Saturday.

John Salander and wife, of Illinois, have moved back here again.

Ulysses Zimmerman moved in Mrs. P. H. Gramling's building last week.

ST. JOE.

J K. Stafford and W. B. Brown, of the Hub, were on our streets Saturday.

Dr. Bowman is still on the mend and his friends expect to see him out on the street in the near future.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Smith and son were over to Hicksville Saturday, partly on business and partly for pleasure.

Nic Goldsmith the democrat who was so rash as to aspire to township trustee was in town on Saturday, no worse for wear and tear.

Uncle Andy Horn, as he was familiarly called by all who knew him, dropped dead while on his wood yard last Friday. The funeral was at Spencerville Sunday.

O, H., Mahlon, Sol., Frank, Wash. Bill, S W., and a number of others who have been quite sick, are all convalecent and able to attend to their usual business.

A little misunderstanding came near leading to blows between two of our most prominent citizens one day last week. Happily the matter has been settled without any great trouble.

C. M. Merica visited our schools last week. We feel assured that he can have nothing but good words for all our teachers, as they are undoubtedly doing the best of work. Teachers and pupils all seem to vie with each other to see who shall be first.

One of our prominent young men living northeast of town came from Auburn Junction Saturday night overloaded with bad whisky. No one in this vicinity is more respected and it is with sorrow that we are compelled to notice it. Our advice is "Touch not, taste not, handle not."

Last Saturday was a big day for our usually quiet town. Several car loads of stock were being shipped and, of course, farmers were here enmasse. All owing to the restoration of confidence since it has become certain that valuable democratic laws of state and nation cannot be disturbed.

A Famous Show of Beauty.

The show of distinguished beauty, transfixed by famous artists, which is now taking place at the Academy of Fine Arts in New York, has been anticipated by The Cosmopolitan Magazine in its November issue, in an article by Wm. A Coffin, with illustrations of some of the more beautiful faces. The "Great Passions of History" series has for this month's subject the romantic career of Agnes Sorel, who influenced the destinies of France under Charles VII. "The Art Schools of America," "The Great British Northwest Territory," "The Chiefs of the American Press" and "Public Library Movement," are amongst The Cosmopolitan's table of contents. Survivors of the war and their children will find intense interest in "The Story of a thousand," a personal narrative begun in this number by Albion W. Tourgee, who tells in a graphic way, of a regiment which saw fierce service—of its organization, its marches, its sports, and its death roll.

Populists Not Gaining.

Populists just now are having a great deal to say about the great gain in their vote, and the great gain in the number of members in congress. We do not know of a single member in either house of the present congress that they would have sent there by their own votes alone.

In some states the democrats united with them and beat the republicans, and in some states the republicans united with them and beat the democrats. And so they have done to elect members to the new House. In the southern states they get the help of the republicans. In the western states they have generally united with the democrats. Two years ago with the help of democrats, they elected governors in Colorado and Kansas. This year they failed to carry those states, even with the democratic help. In general, where they have had a trial they have failed to get in a second time. If they have elected a man anywhere we would like to hear it. Look at their vote in Jackson township, where they elected their township officers. The state vote, which shows the real political status of the township, shows: democrats, 114; republicans, 104; populists, 104. In other words, on party vote, the democrats there had 10 the most.

HEART DISEASE!

Fluttering, No Appetite, Could Not Sleep, Wind on Stomach.

"For a long time I had a terrible pain at my heart, which fluttered almost incessantly. I had no appetite and could not sleep. I would be compelled to sit up in bed and belch gas from my stomach until I thought that every minute would be my last. There was a feelling of oppression about my heart, and I was afraid to draw a full breath. I could not sweep a room without resting. My husband induced me to try and am happy to say it has cured me. I now have a splendid appetite and sleep well. Its effect was truly marvelous."

MRS. HARRY E. STARR, Pottsville, Pa.

Dr. Miles Heart Cure is sold on a positive guarantee that the first bottle will benefit. All druggists sell it at $1, 6 bottles for $5, or it will be sent, prepaid, on receipt of price by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

Take a dose of DeWitt's Little Early Risers just for the good they will do you. These little pills are good for indigestion, good for headache, good for liver complaint, good for constipation. They are good.

Try them and you will never regret it. Always neat, and easily cleaned. When soiled simply wipe off with a wet cloth or sponge. Every piece of the genuine is stamped as follows:

THANKSGIVING CAKE.

PERHAPS WE OUGHT TO SAY "TURKEY."

And the Courier Gives a Few Reasons Why We Should be Thankful.

SOMEONE has sung the praises of the thanksgiving season, and lauded, especially the holiday turkey, which he insisted should be the national bird instead of the eagle. Someone has sung the praises of the thanksgiving cake, while yet another praises the pudding, which the good wife brings on, both at this feast and at the holidays. The Christmas pie also comes in for a share of the good words, and one of the most popular of our poets, Whittier, sings praises to the "Rich Yankee pie made of pumpkin." We take it for granted that our readers understand all of these nice points as well as we do, and trust that all will not only have a thanksgiving feast, and a day of real thanksgiving, but that all may have something to be thankful for. No doubt all have. At all events, this day would be a good occasion for each to commune with himself and ascertain just how this matter stands with him. Suppose we start in something like this:

We have again been called upon by the chief executives of nation and state to render thanks. No people on the globe have better reasons to be thankful than ours. Our domain is all that could be desired. Although we are young, we stand here to-day as the elder brother of the nations of the earth. Our progress has been so rapid as to astonish all nations, even ourselves. Our intelligence is not confined to the literary few, but is the property of the many. How have we become the wonder and admiration of the nations of the world? A great many causes have contributed to that end. Perhaps none more than the invention of printing, to which may be attributed our rapid intellectual advancement. Moreover we as a nation are made up of a grand aggregation and commingling of different nationalities of the Old World upon common ground and for a common purpose, and by the "crossing of the nationalities" if you please, as well as of ideas, new mental and moral forces were awakened and great good resulted. Next came that spirit of religious freedom which planted its banner on the broad ground that "every man has the right—the sacred and inalienable right—to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience;" and the individual who interfered with that right, whether he be Mohammedan or Jew, Catholic or Greek, Christian or Dissenter, European or American, was a tyrant on whom should rest the marked and unqualified condemnation of every thinking and intelligent American citizen, native or adopted.

Republicans are thankful, of course, for the loaves and fishes. Democrats are thankful that they are still on earth, and that there is no lane so long but what it has a turn. Prohibitionists are thankful because prohibition and religion are somewhat similar, viz: all that a person can get of either one is the amount he will practice, and he can get that very cheap. Populists ought to be thankful that they have not been "swiped" clear out of existence, and will therefore have time to repent. So here goes—for the gobbler—and seven bands 'round.

We should not omit to state that the COURIER feels thankful for a number of new subscribers just added to the list, and for a number of cash payments from several of those who had got behind. The turkeys have cause to be thankful that a few are spared for Christmas. Clerks in the stores will be thankful for the prospect of an early closing rule to which is likely to be enforced after January 1. Their employers will be thankful to get a little rest at home evenings for themselves. DeKalb farmers will be thankful that they have had as good crops as they got the past dry season, and that they did not lose both corn and wheat, like their less fortunate friends in the newer states. The A. P. A. will have cause to feel thankful that bigots and religious persecutors are allowed to run at large in a free country. And again, the populists should be glad they did not win, so as to be obliged to try on their impossible schemes and be confounded by the practical workings of their own folly. Republicans should be thankful that all but a few of their newly elected members of congress and the legislature are too weak to do much harm. Free Kelley should be thankful that the democratic party left him, for now he is at liberty to offer his services to any party, without being criticised for it, as he was when the republicans said he wanted to work for them a few years ago. Bliss should be thankful that no more of the members of the corrupt old parties voted for him, for now he will not be so much contaminated by their company. Dave Hill should be thankful that he got out of the New York "landscape" with his life. Leighty ought to be thankful for having so weak an opponent to run against. And Auburn ought to be thankful that the Journal's Waterloo correspondent did not report 8,500 sick with diptheria at Auburn, instead of 30. And so we will all observe thanksgiving, because we all have something to be thankful for.

MONDAY'S MUSICAL.

Auburn's Popular Club Gives One of Its Best Entertainments.

MUSIC, whether of the harp or psaltery, the piano, or the violin, the bagpipe, or the tom-tom, has a pleasing and inspirting effect on the people with whom that particular instrument is a favorite. But with us, we have a variety of these, and what we consider a cultivated ear or an educated taste, can have a wide range of choice. And over and above all we have the human voice, the cultivated vocal organs, that make melody of the highest kind. And so we might discourse on this agreeable subject. But we started to say something about the public musical or "visitor's evening," given at the Baptist church Monday evening by the Auburn Musical Club. There was quite an attendance, but the house would have been packed to the walls had the people fully understood the fine treat in store for them. The program was chiefly as given in last week's COURIER, only such changes being made as were caused by the absence of Mr. Widney, whose place was taken by Mr. Butler, and Lin Kuhlman, whose place was taken by Miss VanDorn. The meeting opened with chorus singing by the club, the music of so great a number of trained voices being very effective. An excellent piano solo was given by Jim Eldridge. The piano duet by Mrs Jennie Garwood and Mrs. Jessie Hanna was one of the choicest treats of the evening. Their music is always of the highest style. Mrs Engelman sang a solo in Italian, which though the words were in a tongue strange to her hearers, the music appealed to all, for she is a sweet singer. She was enthusiastically cheered and called back, when she sang "Bonnie Dundee," which always strikes a sympathetic chord. Miss NanDorn gave a recitation from J. Whitcomb Riley, which fairly set the audience in a roar, and she too was called back, when she gave a very sweet little recitation, which was also highly applauded. There was a fine quartet by T. P. Scott, C. A. Rafter, Barney Wisemantel and John Lochner. And they, later on, gave the oddest and funniest thing of the evening, a quartet on the "voco-phone." The voco-phones were four band instruments, but were made of pasteboard and the music furnished by a reed at the mouth, after the fashion of a dinner horn or fish horn. They played to an accompaniment by Mrs. Rafter, and the house was fairly convulsed. They were called back and without any accompaniment, gave the audience an idea of the possibilities of the voco-phone. Another quartet called out a tumult of applause. It was "Dad's a Millionaire," by Clara Otto, Blanche Shilling, C. A. Rafter, and Barney Wisemantel. It was highly comic, and they were called back, and gave an original verse, in which it came out that Dad was no longer a millionaire, as he had bet all his money on the democratic side in the recent "landscape." Miss Flora Hoffman presided with grace and ability, and Mrs. Zent, as secretary, was master of her duties. The "Visitor's Evening" will continue to grow in popularity.

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."
H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

General Gibson Laid to Rest with Appropriate Honors—The $50,000,000 Bonds Sold to the Stewart Syndicate—Three Thousand Chinese Killed at Port Arthur.

STEWART SYNDICATE.

It Secures the Fifty Millions United States Bonds.

Secretary Carlisle has decided to accept the Stewart syndicate of bids for the entire new issue of $50,000,000 five per cent. bonds. The figure offered by the syndicate was $117,077.

The following official statement concerning the acceptance of the syndicate's proposal was made at the treasury: "The Secretary of the Treasury has accepted the proposal of Mr. John A. Stewart, President of the United States Trust Company, and his associates, to purchase the entire issue of 5 per cent. bonds, amounting to $50,000,000 at 117,077, and accured interest from November 1. The proceeds of the bonds under this bid will be $49,517 62 greater than they would be if the other highest bids were accepted. A very important advantage to the Government in accepting this bid is the fact that all the gold will be furnished outside, and none drawn from the treasury. It is also more convenient and less expensive to the department to deal with one party rather than with many."

The Last Rites.

The funeral services over the body of the late Gen. W. H. Gibson, soldier and statesman, took place at Tiffin, Ohio. The obsequies attracted to the city one of the largest crowds in its history. Among those in attendance at the funeral were Gov. McKinley and staff and numerous State officials. After brief services at the house the body was taken to St. Paul's M. E. Church, where it lay in state for two hours surrounded by hundreds of floral tributes. Many thousand people viewed the remains. After impressive services Gov. McKinley made a brief address of eulogy. The General's old war horse, with military accoutrements, and boots and spurs reversed, followed the hearse from the church to the cemetery where the interment took place according to the G. A. R. ritual.

Big Loss.

The newspaper correspondent reported killed during the advance on Port Arthur was a Japanese. It is now stated that the Chinese loss at the battle of Port Arthur was 3,000. It is reported that a large number of Chinese troops fled on the night of November 21, a way of escape being specially opened for them by the Japanese. Another account says that during the hottest fighting a portion of the Chinese forces fled to the war ships in readiness for the embarking of troops in the event of their position becoming untenable. The Japanese fired upon and sank two of the war ships. The advance guard of Marshal Oyama's army is marching on Newschwang.

Will Reapportion Indiana.

The suit brought by the Republican State Committee to test the constitutionality of the legislative apportionment act passed by the Democratic Legislature two years ago has been dismissed in the Supreme Court by the plaintiff. The Republicans announces that the new legislature, which is Republican in both houses, will repeal the apportionment law in question and will enact a new one. It is announced that the Republicans will reapportion the State for congressional purposes.

Peculiar Accident.

At Grand Rapids, Mich., a team of horses ran away and crashed through the front window of Herman Idema's pawn shop, scattering $5,000 worth of diamonds that were on display in the window, over the sidewalk and in the streets. The precious stones became mixed with the broken glass, and the large crowd that quickly gathered made it difficult to find them. It is thought that at least $2,000 worth of the gems have been stolen by people who picked them up from the sidewalk.

Made It Perpetual.

Los Angeles (Cal.) Special: The omnibus injunction against E. V. Debs, President of the American Railway Union, and 600 others, issued by Judge Ross early in the strike, forbidding the defendants in any way interfering with moving trains, was brought in the Circuit Court on a plea of pro confessa to complaint. Judge Ross issued a decree on the plea making the injunction perpetual.

Fifteen Hundred Dollars Reward.

The citizens of Muscogee, I. T., have offered a reward of $1,500 for the arrest of Bill Cook and his gang of outlaws. While troops are not needed and could not be used, the people of the Creek nation feel that the Government should hunt the robbers down, and as an inducement to the United States Marshals and the Indian police, have offered the reward.

Daring Robbery at Charm, Ohio.

The general store and postoffice of Hershberger & Miller, at Charm, Ohio, was broken into, and robbed. The postoffice safe was blown open and everything of value taken. The thieves then set the building on fire, and the entire contents were destroyed. The loss will reach, $8,000; insured for $3,500. The Government will lose about $1,000.

Strikers Accept a Reduction

The striking nut and bolt workers of the Indiana ironworks at Muncie have resumed work at a reduction of 15 per cent., but with the promise that the old wages would be restored as soon as the market became normal.

Seven Stores and One Residence.

Seven stores and one residence at Swayzee, Ind., burned, and one woman was dangerously injured. There is no telegraph or telephone communication. The loss will reach $10,000.

Surprised Moonshiners.

The largest illicit still ever captured was destroyed recently in the Cossayga Mountains, in Polk County, eighteen miles from the Southern Railway, at Cleveland, Tenn. A posse of five United States officers, led by Internal Revenue Collector Thaxtone came upon the wildcatters, five in number, who were working about a camp fire, all armed with rifles and long navy revolvers. The still is situated on the summit of a high mountain, approached by an almost impenetrable gulch and reached by climbing a steep cliff. Removing their shoes, the officers picked their way to within fifty yards of the place before the mountaineers were given the alarm. A fierce battle of bullets was waged for several minutes, the moonshiners retreating meanwhile. The still contained 300 gallons of beer and a small quantity of whisky.

HART TELLS THE STORY.

Details of the Butchery of the Good Children.

Whatever mystery remained in connection with the murder of little Elsie and Ashby Good near Paulding three weeks ago, and for which crime Charles Hart and Clarence Brindle are now in custody, was cleared up the other day when Hart made a complete confession to the Sheriff and Prosecuting Attorney of Paulding County.

Hart, it is said, has given every detail of the atrocious crime and he alone will probably have to answer for the killing of the unfortunate children. In his confession he tells how he murdered Elsie and Ashby Good in the woods near the spot where he attempted to cremate their mutilated bodies. The confession in detail has, of course, not been made public and perhaps never will be until the case comes to trial. To what extent Clarence Brindle, the other prisoner, is implicated, is uncertain. He, it is said, burned the clothing worn by Hart and secreted for him the instrument that did the cutting. Hart made his confession in the presence of Detectives Brown and Klein, of Cleveland, and Sheriff Staley, and it was sworn to with his hand on the bible.

Sheriff Staley, after the confession was made, went to the scene of the tragedy and dug up from the ground what is supposed to be the knife with which the children were butchered. After that Hart persistently talked of the affair.

BUSINESS GAINS.

The Showing Is Not Much but It Is Distinct.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says:

There are some changes for the better. The gain is slow, and in some directions not very distinct, but the signs of it are a little more definite than last week. The most important of them is larger employment of labor, answering a better demand on the whole for manufactured products. Much of this is due to the unnatural delay of orders for the winter which resulted from long prolonged uncertainty, but it means actual increase in earnings and purchasing power of the millions, and so gives promise of a larger demand in the future. Prices of farm products in the aggregate do not improve, but the prevailing hopefulness is felt in somewhat larger transactions.

The failures for two weeks of November have been moderately large in amount, reported liabilities being $6,502,303, of which $1,713,466 were of manufacturing and $3,831,289 of trading concerns. For the same weeks last year liabilities were over $7,200,000. The failures this week have been 322 in the United States, against 385 last year, and 31 in Canada against 34 last year.

HORRIBLE.

A Babe Almost Devoured by a Wild Hog.

At Sacred Heart, a hamlet a few miles from Guthrie, O. T., Mrs. Galobie's 14-months-old babe was almost eaten up by a wild hog. The woman had laid the child on a blanket near where she was washing. While her back was turned, she heard piteous cries. An immense wild hog was ravenously eating the flesh of the babe, having already terribly lacerated the face. Made ferocious by the taste of blood, the hog refused to give up its prey and gave battle, when Mrs. Galobie endeavored to rescue the child. The hog finally becoming master of the situation, grabbed the bleeding babe in his mouth and started for the woods. He gained several yards before he resented the attacks of the distracted mother. In her wild endeavors to secure her babe, Mrs. Galobie was herself terribly injured, the flesh being torn from the body in several places. Finally, however, she succeeded in grabbing the child and escaping. The baby is dead and Mrs. Galobie is severely injured.

After John R. Fellows.

Upon complaint of the committee of seventy, Gov. Flower has notified John R. Fellows to show cause why he should not be removed from the office of District Attorney of New York County for neglect of duty. The complaint was made by Prebel Tucker, Fulton McMahon, Charles Tabor, R. W. G. Welling, and Clarence Goadby of New York. The committee was closeted with Governor Flower in the executive chamber at Albany for a long time. The doors were closed, and it was thought that the question of a Deputy Attorney General to assist the New York District Attorney was being discussed. The members brought with them Mr. Fellows' consent to have such action taken. Fellows is given eight days within which to answer the charges of the committee of seventy.

The Scaffold Broke.

A terrible accident occurred at Nindeville, a small hamlet near Antwerp, Ohio. The following persons received injuries:

George H. Brooks, injured internally, may die.

Edward H. Deahl, right hip lacerated and head cut.

W. S. Bidwell, injury to head.

Charles Hawkins, bones of wrist dislocated.

Forty feet above the ground Messrs. Brooks, Deahl, Hawkins, and another man, whose name could not be learned, were engaged in putting top rafters on a mammoth barn, when the scaffold, which they had erected a few minutes before, broke and the three persons named were precipitated to the ground within the barn, the fourth being fortunate enough to stay above.

Trolley Cars Collide.

Pittsburgh special: An electric car of the Center avenue branch of the Central Traction Company, became unmanageable on a heavy Wilie avenue grade, and dashed into a Wilie avenue cable car just ahead, with terrific force. Three lady passengers were injured, one seriously. The motorman of the electric car, who stood at his post, was also seriously injured. The injured were: Mrs. H. C. Jones, resided at No. 203 Webster avenue, jaws broken and face burned by falling heavily against the stove; removed to hospital unconscious. Miss Rosa Brown, lives on Roberts street, arm gashed and bruised. Young lady, no name given, cut on head. Harvey Ray, gripman on cable car, injured arms and back. The electric car was a complete wreck.

After Big Bugs.

Austin (Tex.) special: The McKennon County grand jury has created a sensation by returning indictments against all the officials of the Standard Oil Company from John D. Rockafeller down. The charge is violation of the anti-trust law of Texas. The allegations on which indictments were asked were originally made by the Populist campaign committee of the State. Gov. Hogg has agreed to issue the requisitions for the arrest of the indicted persons. The chief witness before the grand jury in relation to the operations of the trust were brought here from Marietta, Ohio.

The People's Strong Box.

The Treasurer of the United States, Hon. H. D. Morgan, has submitted to Secretary Carlisle his annual report on the operations and conditions of the Treasury. The net ordinary revenues for the fiscal year ending June 30, cents omitted, were $297,722,019, a decrease of $88,097,603 as compared with the year before. The net ordinary expenditures were $367,525,279, a decrease of $15,952,674. Including the public debt, the total receipts on all accounts were $724,006,538 and the expenditures $698,908,552.

Bid for Bonds.

The opening of the bids for subscriptions to the new 5 per cent. bonds was finished Saturday, and the allotment will be made soon. It will be observed that the New York syndicate of banks, through the United States Trust Company, made a flat bid of 117.077 for the entire $50,000,000, and the chances are this syndicate will, according to a prearranged program, absorb the entire lot. They will then be forced up for sale to the less favored.

Big Fire.

A conflagration wiped out a large part of the business center of Savannah, Mo., fourteen miles northeast of St. Joseph. The fire started in a restaurant. Every building in the north side of the square, all save one constructed of wood, went up in smoke, together with the contents of a number of them. Several persons narrowly escaped from their sleeping apartments. The loss will be $60,000, with little insurance.

The Deadly Chiravari.

As a result of chiravari at Wellington, Kas., John McCook is dead and Claude Walton is seriously, if not fatally wounded. Richard Webster was married, and a crowd of boys and young men went to his residence to chiravari him and his bride, when Webster fired into the crowd with a revolver with the above result. Webster is a member of the Salvation Army and is half wild.

A Big Theft.

Samuel C. Seeley, bookkeeper in the National Shoe and Leather Bank, New York, disappeared a few days ago. A National Bank Examiner has just finished an investigation, which discloses a defalcation of $354,000. The bank has a capital of $1,000,000 and a surplus of about $200,000 leaving an impairment of capital of about $150,000, which will at once be made good by the stockholders.

Hideous Discovery.

A hideous discovery has just been made near Churintzio, State of Michoacan, Mexico. The find consists of thirty human bodies in advanced decomposition, pitted upon one another in a cave. Cleofo Gomez was robbed and murdered for his money recently. Pascul, a brother, while searching for him, made the discovery which explains many mysterious disappearances.

Will Organize a Town.

Dundee, a small village four miles east of Elwood, Ind., and noted for its tough citizens and for being the home of the notorious Dick Goodman gang, will at once incorporate as a town. Its leading citizens will endeavor to officer the new town and bring about a higher state of civilization than now exists, by compelling subservience on the part of its citizens to law and order.

Gen. Gibson Dead.

Gen. W. H. Gibson died at his residence in Tiffin, Ohio. His illness, which has been of about three months' duration, was a complication of diseases, the foundation of which was chronic diarrhœa. The General was 73 years old, and was conscious up to the hour of his death. Only the immediate members of the family and the physician were present at the death.

Elkins Will be Senator.

A special from Wheeling, W. Va., says: The canvass of the Republicans elected to the Legislature removes all doubt of the election of S. B. Elkins to the United States Senate. Every member from the Second and Fourth districts has declared for him, with over one-half of those in the Third and First.

Mangled by Dynamite.

Klause Severine and Antone Gustavson were terribly torn and mangled by a dynamite explosion at Ashland, Wis., while digging a well. They struck a rock and attempted to use dynamite to remove it.

Fired Into a Caboose.

On the Big Four as a south-bound freight train was passing Dunlap, Ind., two pistol shots were fired at the caboose, shattering the windows and just grazing the head of Luther Crouch, a trakeman.

Deer Hunter Shot.

While hunting deer in Michigan Uriah Garringer of Farmland, Ind., saw bushes shaking and fired at what he thought was a deer. It proved to be his companion. The wound was fatal.

A Runaway Street Car.

A runaway motor car, jumping the track at a crooked street intersection, Omaha, fatally injured the motorman and two of the passengers, and seriously injured four others.

NINE MILLION SHORT.

LARGE DEFICIENCY IN THE POSTAL REVENUES.

Report of Mr. Bissell—How He Would Decrease Expense and Increase Receipts—Readjustment of Regulations and Other Reforms Urged.

Shows a Big Shortage.

Postmaster General Bissell has submitted to the President his annual report for the year ended June 3, 1894. He briefly outlines the policy of the department.

In general I would recommend that the first and most important thing to be done is to revise the law as to the second-class matter so as to place the Postoffice Department immediately upon a self-sustaining basis.

2. Avoid expensive experiments like the postal telegraph, rural free delivery, etc.

3. Develop the postal service on existing lines of administration, viz.:

Extend free delivery in cities that now enjoy it.

Accord it to towns already entitled to it under the law.

Quicken railroad transportation.

4 Revise and reclassify organization of the railway mail service, and reclassify clerks in postoffices.

5. Provide for district supervision of all postal affairs by appointment of expert postal officials from classified service, as recommended in my last annual report.

The revenue for the year was $75,080,479; expenditures, $84,324,414, leaving a deficiency of $9,243,935. The estimates for the current year ending June 30, 1895, are: Revenue, $84,427,748; expenditures, $90,399,485; deficiency, $5,971,737. The estimates submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury for the next fiscal year are: Revenue, $88,907,407; expenditures, $91,059,283; deficiency, $4,151,876.

This annual deficiency, the Postmaster General says, could be overcome by the increase in postal rates, but he does not believe this is advisable. Economy has been practiced, but nevertheless great care has been taken that it should not affect the efficiency of the service. Mr. Bissell recommends that the experimental free-delivery projects should be discontinued, and thinks that free delivery in rural districts is not needed or desired by the people.

Too Much Second-Class Matter.

One of the most important and interesting features of Mr. Bissell's report is its discussion of class matter. In his last report he referred to the great disproportion of growth of second-class mail matter. He gives figures for the last six years, showing that in 1888 the weight of second-class mail matter carried was 143,000,000 pounds, and in 1893 it was 256,000,000. During the year 1894 there was carried 451,000,000 pounds of all mail matter, of which 299,000,000 pounds was second-class matter, the total cost being $36,207,572, an average of 8 cents a pound. Returns from postmasters show that the amount upon which postage at the rate of 1 cent per pound was paid was 254,000,000 pounds, the remaining 45,000,000 pounds being matter carried free in the county of publication. The cost of carrying the second-class matter was $20,320,000, while, at the rate of 1 cent a pound, the collections were $2,547,000, and $800,000 special local rates in carrier cities, leaving a net loss to the Government of $16,973,000. The Postmaster General continues:

I do not advocate a change of rates now upon legitimate newspapers and periodical magazines. My purpose is to urge the withdrawal of low postage rates from the large cities and the pretended periodicals that are now improperly enjoying them.

Books and Bogus Trade Papers.

The most conspicuous class of these pretended periodicals is what is now generally known as serial paper-covered books. They are in no sense serial, however, except in name, being usually given some general designation, as the "Fireside Series," "The Detective Library," or some other title of like character. Another class is what has got to be known as the "house organ," being simply a pamphlet devoted mainly to the advertising of some mercantile establishment, but purporting to be devoted to trade. The bogus trade devoted mainly to the advertising of some any particular house, is another illustration.

After commenting on the great increase in the mailing of fraternal insurance publications as second-class matter, Mr. Bissell suggests the remedy in the following:

If it be the policy of Congress to continue the privileges of second-class rates to benevolent or fraternal societies, then the remedy I would suggest would be an amendment of the law limiting this rate to them and to legitimate newspapers and legitimate periodical magazines.

The Postmaster General does not favor the postal telegraph, a system advocated by his predecessor. The conditions in this country, he says, are such as would enormously increase the large deficit. He takes as example the system in Great Britain, which is a comparatively small territory, and shows that the postal telegraph entails a total annual loss of about $2,000,000. He points out that in a country where the territory is so large the cost of a postal telegraph would far exceed any possible receipts or benefits.

Mr. Bissell gives the following daily average busines of the department, which shows the vastness of the postal service:

Number of miles of post route run	1,100,000
Number of stamps manufactured	8,300,000
Number of envelopes manufactured	1,800,000
Number of postal cards manufactured	1,500,000
Number of pieces mailed	15,700,000
Number of letters mailed	7,400,000
Number of pieces of mail matter distributed and redistributed by railway postal clerks	27,500,000
Number of pieces handled in dead letter office	24,000
Daily transactions in money order business	$1,100,000
Daily expenses	$231,100

The Postmaster General believes in civil service in the Postoffice Department. He says:

If the system has produced such good results in the clerical force of the department it is reasonable to inquire whether something like could not be applied with advantage to the lower grades of postmasters. For more than one generation the American people have been trained to regard the postoffice as inseparable from the varying fortunes of the two great political parties, and in some instances, even, as legitimately following the vicissitudes of mere factions within a party. This fallacy is to be deplored. The intelligence of our people has long outgrown the notion that any one political party enjoys a monopoly of administrative talent.

The local postoffice is closely connected with the every-day life of the people who patronize it, and nothing is further from the principles of home rule and majority rule than to force any change whatever. Yet this is what happens and is bound to happen as long as the postoffices remain in the public mind, and hence in the practice of the government associated with politics.

The postal service must either be taken out of the political field altogether and surrounded with the same conditions which conduce to the health of a private business or be divided, for administrative purposes, into two sections—the one political and the other non-political, each under a separate head, so that the executive authority of the non-political side shall not be required to give any of his thought to the improvement of the postal system.

Where Tin Is Mined.

More than half the world's supply of tin is mined in the Straits Settlement at the tip of the Malay Peninsula. The output in 1891 was 31,031 tons out of a total of 57,551 tons; 12,105 tons came from the Dutch East Indies, chiefly from the island of Banka, leaving only 9,381 tons for the rest of the world.

MATTER OF PENSION APPEALS.

Work of the Board Reviewed in a Report Made to Secretary Smith.

The work of the Board of Pension appeals during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, is fully reviewed in a report made by the assistant secretary of the interior, John M. Reynolds, to Secretary Smith. In summarizing the administration of the office, Reynolds says: "Upon taking charge of the office of assistant secretary in April, 1893, I found 4,965 appeals pending on the docket with the work of the board of appeals more than two years behind. In eighteen and one-half months, with 5,847 additional appeals entered during that time, current appeals are being decided, and tardy justice no longer follows the appeal to the department by any deserving soldier, widow or orphan. Thus 10,000 cases were considered on appeal and finally ruled upon, a greater number of them was never before disposed of in the same length of time, and more than double the number considered in any period under my predecessor." The small balance of arrears is said to consist almost entirely of claims undergoing further investigation in the pension bureau and others which, for final decision, await the determination of legal questions that will be decisive of all.

The sub-committee of the House on pensions met Saturday, and after listening for an hour to Commissioner Lochren's explanation of the requirements of his office, virtually decided to report a bill providing for the appropriations recommended by the commissioner in his estimate, except in one item of fees for examining surgeons. The original estimate was that $1,000,000 would be required to pay these fees, but Lochren told the committee he thought $800,000 would be sufficient, and that figure was decided upon. Pension appropriations as decided upon by the sub-committee will, therefore, be: For pensions, $140,000,000; for surgeons' fees, $800,000; for clerk hire at pension agencies, $450,000; miscellaneous, $131,570.

BOUND TO HAVE THE BOUNTY.

Sugar Growers of the Country File Suits Against the United States.

The controversy between the sugar growers of the country and the United States Government growing out of the repeal of the sugar bounty clause in the McKinley bill by the new tariff act and the subsequent refusal of the Treasury Department to pay bounties upon sugar grown in the present year, reached the first stage in its progress to a definite legal settlement Saturday. J. Fairchild Murray, an attorney of New York, has filed in the court of claims three suits, identical in character, and all seeking to recover from the Government sums of money alleged to be legally due complainants as a bounty upon sugar raised by them in the year 1894. The Chino Valley Beet Sugar Company of New Jersey, sues for $48,121, the Norfolk Beet Sugar Company, of New Jersey, for $3,093, and the Oxford Beet Sugar Company, for $11,782. The complaints are based upon the allegation that the United States by an act of Congress granting a bounty of one-half cent per pound upon all sugar grown in the United States and the Territories, entered into a legal contract with complainants, as well as other sugar growers, and led them by its terms to undertake the cultivation of beets and other plants from which sugar is obtained, but which could not have been profitably pursued without the benefits of such contract. The claim is further made that the crops of complainants were growing and the sugar resulting from them in process of manufacture long before the passage by Congress of the measure repealing the provisions of the act granting a bounty, and the Government has no right to withhold the payment of bounties alleged to be due. The cases will probably be pushed to an early hearing in the court of claims and will then be taken to the United States Court for final settlement. It is understood the suits are brought as test cases, and will be vigorously contested, as an amount reaching some $11,000,000 is at stake in the controversy.

Sparks from the Wires.

Almost the entire business portion of Marion, N. C., was burned. The loss is estimated at $125,000.

Three citizens of Brookside, Ala., were probably fatally shot by moonshiners, who took them for officers.

Officers tried to arrest Claude Moss at a church near Carrollton, Miss., and killed him when he resisted arrest.

The Tongue in Health and Sickness.

The perfectly healthy tongue is clean, moist, lies loosely in the mouth, is round at the edge, and has no prominent papillae. The tongue may be furred from local causes, or from sympathy with the stomach, intestines, or liver.

The dry tongue occurs most frequently in fever, and indicates a nervous prostration or depression. A white tongue is diagnostic simply of the feverish condition, with perhaps a disordered stomach. When it is moist and yellowish-brown, it shows disordered digestion. Dry and brown indicates a low state of the system.

When the tongue is dry and red and smooth, look out for inflammation, gastric or intestinal. When the papillae on the end of the tongue are raised and very red we call it a strawberry tongue, and that may mean scarlet fever. A sharp, pointed red tongue will point to brain irritation or inflammation, and a yellow coating indicates liver derangement.

TREASURER MORGAN SUBMITS HIS ANNUAL REPORT.

Total Fiscal Receipts on All Accounts Were $724,006,538 and the Total Expenditures $698,908,552—Insufficient Revenues Impair Gold Reserve.

Bond Issue a Necessity.

The Treasurer of the United States, Hon. H. D. Morgan, has submitted to Secretary Carlisle the annual report of the operations and condition of the treasury. The net ordinary revenues for the fiscal year ending June 30, cents omitted, were, $297,722,019, a decrease of $88,097,609 as compared with the year before. The net ordinary expenditures were $367,525,279, a decrease of $15,952,674. The total receipts on all accounts were $724,006,538, and the expenditures $698,908,552.

At the close of business on June 30, 1893, there stood on the books of the department charged to the treasurer a balance of $738,467,555. Adding to this receipts on all accounts gives $1,462,474,093 as total to be accounted for, and deducting the expenditures leaves a balance of $763,565,540 on June 30, 1894. In addition to these balances, however, there were other liabilities, arising from the postal revenues, from disbursing officers and from other sources, which brought the total to $776,041,808 at the former date, and to $804,854,753 at the latter. After setting aside the amounts treated as unavailable, the principal of which are the deposits made with the States under the law of 1866, there remained the sum of $746,538,655 in 1893 and the sum of $775,310,559 in 1894 represented by live assets in the several offices of the treasury and mint, together with deposits in national banks. Of these balances the sums of $584,593,920 and $616,155,820, respectively, were on deposit for the redemption of outstanding certificates and treasury notes, leaving $161,904,735 and $159,154,739 as the balances on account of the general fund.

Impairment of the Gold Reserve.

The treasurer remarks that the impairment of the gold reserve rendering necessary the issue of bonds in February, was caused chiefly by the depletion of the treasury resulting from insufficient revenues. Even when the supply of paper had become so reduced that the treasury was obliged to pay out large sums of gold in the ordinary disbursements the coin was freely returned in the revenues. The proceeds of this loan were $58,660,000 in gold coin and certificates, but during the month of February there were redeemed $19,200,000 of notes in gold, presumably to meet subscriptions to the loan, so that the net gold proceeds were about $39,500,000. This, with a gain of $1,500,000 in gold from ordinary sources, brought up the reserve during the month from $65,000,000 to $106,500,000, while the net assets of the treasury, with an excess of $7,000,000 of expenditures over receipts for the month, increased from $125,000,000 to $177,000,000. During the succeeding months till the end of the first week in August the reserve was affected by deficient revenues and withdrawals of gold for export, the movement abroad having been stimulated by the necessity which the treasury was under of furnishing to exporters new full weight after the supply of old pieces had become exhausted. The lowest point touched by the reserve was $52,189,500 on Aug. 7, 1894.

Prior to July, 1892, the gold reserve was but little affected by the withdrawals of coin, there never having been any considerable demand for the redemption of notes. Even when gold exports were heavy the metal was furnished by bankers from their vaults, or was obtained from the treasury for gold certificates, of course without impairment of the reserve. During the last two years, however, the treasury has been called upon to furnish nearly the whole of the requirements for exportation, and there have recently been considerable withdrawals for other uses. To the end of September last the total redemptions of United States notes in gold since the resumption of specie payments were $181,300,000, and the total redemptions of the treasury notes in gold from their first issue were $68,500,000. The two important events of the year affecting the condition of the public debt were the issue of $50,000,000 of 5 per cent. bonds to replenish the gold reserve and the stoppage of the purchase of silver bullion by the issue of treasury notes.

Retirement of Treasury Notes.

With reference to the retirement of treasury notes the Treasurer says that prior to August, 1893, the treasury had been able to provide for the redemption of treasury notes in silver dollars out of the holdings of free silver, so that there had not been, up to that time, any impairment of the total amount of the silver fund accumulated under the act. On the 3d of that month, however, the silver dollars and bullion in the treasury had become reduced to the amount required by law to be retained for the payment of outstanding treasury notes and certificates, and the demand for the redemption of notes continuing in consequence of the scarcity of the small denominations of currency, it became necessary to draw upon the dollars coined especially for that purpose. The silver fund being thus impaired, the notes so redeemed were canceled in order to preserve the required equality between the silver in the treasury and the notes outstanding. The total amount of the notes retired in this way, up to Oct. 31, was $4,790,434. The amount of the new issues of United States paper currency put into circulation during the year was $350,959,100, having been exceeded but once, in 1892. The amount of worn and mutilated notes redeemed was $319,002,290. This also has been exceeded but once, in 1893. The total paper circulation reached its highest point in May last, when it stood at $1,175,000,000. Since then there has been a slight contraction, caused chiefly by the gradual redemption and retirement of gold certificates, the issue of which was suspended, as the law requires, when the gold reserve of the treasury fell below $100,000,000.

The management of the Columbian Exposition having finally declined to defray the expenses of recoining the Columbian half-dollars, which have found their way into the treasury, they have been offered to the public at par in exchange for gold or gold certificates, and a considerable sum of them has been distributed in that manner.

The Isabella quarters in the treasury are retained for the requisition of the board of lady managers of the Exposition.

The amount of counterfeit silver coin and fractional currency detected at the offices of the treasury during the year was $10,500, an increase of $900 over the year before.

There was an increase during the year of $1,552,250 in the face value of the bonds held on account of the sinking funds of the Pacific railroads, which amounted, on June 30, to $18,960,000.

Notwithstanding a change in the regulations, whereby senders of national bank notes for redemption were required to bear the charges for transportation, the redemptions were the heaviest since 1886, amounting to $105,000,000, or more than half of the average circulation.

ST. LOUIS' NEW STATION.

The Most Beautiful Railway Building in the Country.

Probably the most costly railway station in the country is that which has been lately built at St. Louis. It is the largest station in the world. The train shed covers 424,000 square feet of ground: there are 30 tracks capable of holding 300 cars under shelter and the whole place is illuminated by 126 arc lights. The station building proper covers an area of 8,806 square feet

The ceilings are usually ornamented by some graceful design or other, a wreath of roses or a group of cherubs. In fact, the ornamentation, under the direction of J. D. Millet, whose work at the fair was so highly praised, has but served to emphasize more strongly the talents of this artist.

NUMBER OF ARRESTS MADE, 687

Work Done by the Secret Service Department of the Treasury.

William P. Hazen, the Chief of the Secret Service of the Treasury Department, in his annual report shows that during the year the total number of arrests made was 687, nearly all of which were for violations of the statutes relating to counterfeiting United States money. Of those arrested about 300 were either convicted or pleaded guilty, and 120 are now awaiting the action of grand juries. The fines collected amounted to $5,947. The amount of altered or counterfeit notes captured during the year was $21,300; coins, $10,755. There were also captured 134 plates from which counterfeit notes had been printed, 33 dies, 156 molds, and a large quantity of miscellaneous matter, consisting of tools, melting pots, etc.

WHOLE CITY WAS IN DANGER.

Shelbyville, Ind., Has a Narrow Escape from Burning Down.

At Shelbyville, Ind., by mistake the natural gas was given high pressure in the low pressure mains, and at midnight it was discovered that over 500 stoves and heaters in all parts of the city were melting under the intense heat, and buildings were igniting in every direction. The fire alarm was turned in, bells were rung, whistles sounded and the citizens were aroused from their slumbers to discover themselves in the midst of a general conflagration. The flow of gas was arrested and only three houses were burned. The destruction of these buildings amounted to considerable loss to the owners. If the alarm had been twenty minutes later nothing could have saved the city from destruction.

The Mean Thing.

"Women play smart tricks on one another sometimes," said a smart American woman; "but the queerest I ever heard of was perpetrated by one social leader in a Western city upon another. They were rivals, and hated each other accordingly, though outwardly they preserved the semblance of pleasant relations. Every chance that either got to give a dig at the other was eagerly seized. But the final and most effective stroke, after which no calls were exchanged, was delivered by Mrs. L. She sent out cards for a grand entertainment, and then took pains to find out what Mrs. F., her competitor, was going to wear. A gorgeous brocaded satin was the material of Mrs. F.'s gown, it was ascertained. Accordingly Mrs. L., whose husband was in the dry goods business, obtained several hundred yards of the same identical stuff and draped the walls of all the rooms on the lower floor of her house with it. You may imagine the feelings of Mrs. F., on arriving in her superb new frock, which she expected to make a sensation. Naturally, she ordered her carriage and drove away in tears."

CHAPTER VII.

Roderick did not appear among his family until the next day, or rather the same day, for it was four in the morning before the last guest departed and the household sunk into quietness. Then, Bella Jardine knocking at his door, had been greeted with a fraternal growl; and the trayful of food which, according to the family faith that the way to the heart is through the stomach, she brought up to him, was left untasted on the door-mat.

"Let me alone; I will see you all at breakfast," were the only words that could be got out of him. Angry, sorrowful, and utterly worn out in body as well as mind, he threw himself on the bed in the cold fireless room—evidently he had not been expected so soon—rolled himself up in a bearskin rug, which he had bought at Neuchatel, in planning that never-to-be-forgotten day at Lausanne, and slept for many hours. Slept so heavily that when he awoke, long after midday, he was surprised to find the fire lighted and a dainty little breakfast standing beside it, also his feet, stretching outside the rug, were carefully wrapped up in one of his mother's shawls.

She had been in his room, then makhim "comfortable," as was her habit to do, as much as she could—perhaps giving him, unfelt, the kiss that he might not have cared for, the tear which would only have vexed him. Poor mother! And he was her own, her only son.

Roderick was touched. When he came down stairs the first thing he did was to look for her all over the house, and when they met he kissed her affectionately.

"Forgive my being so rude as to go to bed at once; but I was very tired. And you? You have been up, spite of your fatigues, and looking after me as usual? I did so enjoy my nice breakfast. Thank you, mother."

He kissed her again, and then sat down, not knowing what else to say. Would she speak first, or must he, on the subject which never left his mind for a moment?

"Yes, you were quite wearied out with your long journey, my dear boy," said Mrs. Jardine. "You must have traveled night and day, to have got back so soon."

"Could I do otherwise, thinking you were ill, mother? and naturally I was somewhat astonished——"

"To find us in the middle of a ball?" broke in Bella, who sat surrounded by a heap of wedding finery. "It must have been a little perplexing. But we thought that frightening telegram was the best way to bring you home."

Roderick drew back, flushing angrily.

"Hold your tongue, Bella," said the mother. "But, my dear Rody, I never said I was ill; I only said I was 'not well,' which was quite true. How could it be otherwise, after your letter?"

"You did get my letter, then—my two letters?"

"Yes both." And there ensued an awkward silence.

The critical moment passed, seized, unhappily, by neither side for Roderick, excessively irritated, waked instantly out of the room and out of the house.

It is astonishing how long clever people—and she was a decidedly clever woman in her way, was Mrs. Jardine—can shirk a difficulty, or avoid an unpleasant thing. He hardly knew how it came about, but Roderick had actually been two whole days at home, taking his place at the foot of his mother's sumptuous table, and entertaining, with gentle courtesy and well-disguised weariness, her endless guests, falling back into old ways so completely that he sometimes asked himself if the last two months were not merely a morning dream; yet not a syllable had been breathed of his intended marriage or of Mlle. Jardine.

It was not till the third day after his return, which, being the day before the wedding, was of necessity kept free from visitors, that Roderick succeeded in finding his mother alone.

Coming into her "boudoir," as she called it, the little room off the drawing-room, which she made her place of refuge when she was not in sufficiently grand toilet for visitors, he saw her sitting there, for "five quiet minutes."

"Mother, you ought to rest; you will be ill if you don't," said her son, going up to her with honest anxiety.

"I'll rest by and by," she answered, "when tomorrow is over. Oh, these weddings! It's all very well for the young folks; but—the parents! However, this is the last one. I have no more girls to marry."

"No, mother," said Roderick, sitting down by her, both out of real tenderness and because he felt that now was the golden moment which must not be let pass by—for there was a kind look in her eye and a tremor in her voice, such as had not greeted him ever since he came home; "no, mother, your daughters are all safely disposed of. And when your son marries he will faithfully promise that his wedding shall give you no trouble."

Mrs. Jardine drew back, then looked at the door, as if feeling herself caught in the toils and anxious to escape; but Roderick held her hand fast; say, he put his arm round her waist in a tender, filial way; he was determined to "have it out," as people say, with her; but he wished all to be done in the gentlest and most kindly fashion.

"Yes, mother, as I told you, there will, I trust, be another marriage in the family but——"

"But not yet. Not for a very long time. I couldn't stand it—indeed I could not. Don't let us talk about that. I am very busy, you see."

"Nay, mother, we must talk about it. I have been waiting to speak to you ever since I came home. You are the first and only person I can speak to on this subject. You must feel that."

"Feel what? Speak about what? Let me go. I declare I don't know what you are driving at, and I can't put up with any nonsense—not just now."

Roderick turned pale with anger, but he controlled himself.

"It is not nonsense; I explained all in my letter—in my two letters—which you say you received."

"What, all about the little Swiss girl who you fancy is your cousin?"

"She is my cousin, there is no doubt of that; at least, remotely so, not near enough to warrant the slightest objection, which I know you have, to cousins marrying."

"Marrying! tut, tut laddie; who spoke of marrying? Put such folly out of your head at once. Never let me hear of it again, or of her!"

"Never hear of her again" said Roderick, slowly, though his heart was burning with indignation, and the nervous trembling which he always felt in moments of excitement seemed to run through his whole frame. "Mother, you misunderstand the matter. You must hear of her. She is the lady whom I have chosen for my wife—if I can get her—my wife and your daughter-in law."

"Never," cried Mrs. Jardine. "You had better give the thing up, Roderick, for I will have nothing whatever to do with it, or with her."

"Very well," answered Roderick, and his voice was a deadly quietness. "Now we know exactly where we stand. Mother, you are busy, you say, and I have also an engagement. Good morning."

"But you will be back to dinner?"

He paused a moment and then answered, "Certainly."

"And you are not forgetting that tomorrow is the wedding-day?"

"I trust I am not in the habit of forgetting any of my duties."

She looked after him as he quitted the room, passing Bella, who just then entered, without a word or look—indeed, he seemed to walk blindly, like a person half stunned, and her mind misgave her a little.

* * * * *

The wedding-day came and passed. It was not a day of sentimental emotion; the principal consciousness which it brought to Roderick was that there were certain inevitable things to do and say, which he did and said to the best of his ability; thinking the while that his wedding day, did it ever come, should be as unlike this day as possible.

So Bella Jardine and her new "gudeman," if such a vulgar word could be used for Mr. Alexander Thomson without scandalizing himself and his family, which floated away into felicity, while the hundred or more particular friends who had been invited to see them "turned off," as the young lady with whom Roderick had to open the ball expressed it, danced till far into the "sma' hours" with spirit and enthusiasm. In fact, no marriage could have gone off with greater "eclaw," as Mrs. Jardine declared, and she was right; her own indomitable energy, good temper, and good spirits contributing in no small degree to that desirable result.

But with all these excellent qualities, one dags sometimes at nearly sixty; and during the following day, anxiously as Roderick sought a chance of speaking to his mother, she was, either intentionally or unintentionally, wholly invisible. Not till after dinner—nay, nearly bed-time—did the mother and son come really face to face, sitting alone together in the large, silent drawing-room, which looked especially dreary so much so that Mrs. Jardine, saying something about "going to bed early," rang for the servants, and conducted, it seemed with more lengthiness than usual, the never omitted family prayers. These over, mother and son were again alone.

"Well, my dear," said Mrs. Jardine, with a rather impressive yawn, "I suppose we had better go to bed."

"Not just this minute, mother," entreated Roderick. "Let me have half a dozen words with you, if you are not too tired. Remember, I start to-morrow for Neuchatel."

"Neuchatel—to-morrow! What in the world do you mean?"

"I told you that immediately after the wedding I meant to go back to Switzerland."

"Why? What for?"

Roderick paused a moment. "To see Mademoiselle Jardine, and ask her to become my wife. She is alone and unprotected, and if she does me the honor to accept me, I think it will be best to arrange our marriage with as little delay as possible."

He said this in as quiet and matter-of-fact way as he could; perhaps this very quietness only excited his mother the more.

"What! would you forsake me entirely? I couldn't have believed it of you! Oh, Rody, my boy, my only son."

She may have been exaggerating her feelings a little, in order to work upon his; still there was a ring of natural pathos in her voice which took the poor fellow by storm.

"Mother, dearest" he sat down by her and affectionately clasped her hand, "who talks of forsaking? Not I, certainly. You are not going to lose your son, but only to gain another daughter—and such a daughter. If you only saw her. Will you see her? Will you come back with me to Switzerland and let us fetch her home together."

He was not wise, not tactful; certainly this poor Roderick. Alas! a large nature, judging a smaller one, often makes egregrious mistakes.

Mrs. Jardine drew herself up with indignant pride and outraged decorum.

"Well, I do think that is the coolest and most impudent proposal——"

"Impudent" (She had pronounced it "impident," poor woman! which made it a still more obnoxious word.) Roderick looked at his mother full in the face. Though she was his mother, he was a Jardine and she was not wrath set better on him than on her; because if hereditary blood teaches nothing more it usually teaches that self-restraint which we accoust med to call good breeding. "Impudence, I think, has never been a vice of our family; and the lady I have chosen being of that family, deserves entire respect—which I shall exact for her from everybody, including my own mother. Also excuse me, I shall resent any insult offered to her, even if offered by my own relations, exactly as if it had been an insult to myself."

He spoke so quietly and with such stately courtesy, the steel armor of perfect politeness, that Mrs. Jardine was frightened. The boy was his father's own son, only with stronger health, a firmer will, a spirit unbroken, and, above all, the talisman of hope in his bosom—hope and love. As he stood there he looked so handsome in his fearless youth—fearless, yet offering no obnoxious front to any one—gifted with that best of courage, the power of self-control—that his mother's heart misgave her a little.

"Wait till next day; we will talk it all over to-morrow. I am so tired tonight." And she nervously took up her bedroom candle, which was waiting beside her.

Roderick lighted it for her, and then kissed the hand into which he gave it.

"Dear mother, I am grieved to vex you, believe that; and I will wait a day—two or three days—rather than go against your will. Think better of what you have said think better of me. Do you not believe I love you?"

"It doesn't look like it," said she, sharply. To natures like hers gentleness sometimes seems like a confession of weakness, and only rouses them to greater tyranny. "However, as you say, wait a few days, and I'll think over it."

After his mother quitted him Roderick pondered sadly over himself and his fortunes for a long time. Passionately in love as he was, he was not selfishly in love. He could not throw himself out of himself so as to see a little on the other side. It was hard for his mother, who loved authority and was jealous to affection, to be dethroned in this way. And he wished—was it disloyalty to his betrothed?—that things had happened differently—that she had been some one whom his mother knew and liked, rather than a complete stranger. But all that was past now. His choice was made—this or none; for, with the impulsive conviction of youth, he was quite certain that if he did not marry Silence Jardine he would never marry anybody. His mother must make up her mind to accept the inevitable.

Still he would wait; a few days did not matter so very much, with a whole life-time of happiness before him. Surely, surely it was before him, and not a mere phantom of his own brain? Surely she, so deeply beloved, must have felt that it was so. Her sweet, firm, yet tremulous "yes" must have implied her belief in him, which a little delay would never shake, but only confirm.

Then with an easier mind, and a heart almost happy—so strong is hope at his age—he walked back a street's length in the pelting rain, humming to himself his favorite ditty——

Whenever she comes, she shall find me ready
To do her homage—my queen, my queen.

GETTING NERVE.

A View of the Bridal Chamber to Give Him Courage.

"Got any bridal chambers here?" asked a tall, awkward young man with an ancient carpetsack in one hand, a frightened look on his face, a black slouch hat on his head, and wearing a hand-me-down suit of faded brown. He was from some interior town of Missouri.

"Yes, sir; we have some very fine bridal chambers here," replied Chief Clerk Cunningham.

"Waal, I want ter look at 'em, fer I've got to engage one of 'em," said the stranger.

"All right, just step this way, please," said Mr. Cunningham, who called an assistant and gave the order: "Show this gentleman the bridal chambers."

The stranger investigated the bridal chambers for half an hour and then returned to the counter downstairs and said to Mr. Cunningham: "Golly; these rooms air ez lovely ez a pastur' lot in par dise. Now they air the finest you have, air they?"

"Yes, sir, they are the finest in the city, and are good enough for a millionaire and his bride."

"Waal, I'm much obliged fer all the trouble you've gone to. I'll be in next week, I s'pose, an' take one uv 'em," the stranger said, moving off.

"Oh, you did not wish to engage a bridal chamber to day," said Mr. Cunningham in surprise.

The young stranger almost jumped out of his brogans, says the St. Louis Republic.

"Goshamighty, mister!" he exclaimed. "I hain't ast the gal yit. I'm jist a-doin' this to get my nerve up so's I can go back home an' pop th' question to 'er."

The Emperors of Morocco.

The Emperors of Morocco do not succeed to the crown by right of inheritance. Theoretically they are chosen by the people from among the descendants of the Mohamm dan Prophet practically they are placed upon the throne by some palace intrigue, or by the influence of some man or body of men powerful and energetic enough on the death of a Sultan to seize the reins of power, to bribe the soldiery in the vicinity of the palace, to destroy, banish, or outwit the other claimants to power, and to effect the proclamation in due form of the Sultan of his or their choice.

The late Emperor became sovereign in no different manner from that of his predecessors. It need hardly be said that the man who interferes in the election of the monarch of Morocco risks all upon the cast of the die. If he fails and the rival claimant be successful, the would-be king-maker, and all of his kith and kin may consider themselves fortunate if, by a precipitate flight, leaving all their worldly goods behind them, they are able to escape from death and possibly from torture. The man, therefore, who succeeds in placing a sovereign on the throne of Morocco has the strongest possible claim on the gratitude of the autocrat whom he has successfully installed in power.

How did the late Sultan reward the subject who risked for him his life and possessions? Some time after his accession, when he began to feel himself secure upon his throne, and without even the pretense of a quarrel or of an accusation, the late Emperor cast this man into one of his dungeons, and there he remained until a few months ago, when he was at length released after an imprisonment of fourteen years. The motive for this crime was probably fear lest the chief who had been powerful enough to raise him to the throne might some day use his influence in favor of another.—Earl of Meath, in the Nineteenth Century.

A Miner's Experience with a Mule.

Patrick Murray, of Perth Amboy, N. J., had an exciting experience a few days ago with a mine mule at Summit Hill, Pa., which he says he will never forget. When he reached the bottom of the slope and proceeded to explore the gangway, he attracted the attention of one of the mules. He is at a loss to know what angered the animal, but the beast came for him at full speed, and Murray started for a "heading" with nothing but a miner's lamp to guide him. It was a race for life. The mule was rapidly closing the gap, when the Jerseyman reached two mine cars. He plunged between them. The mule countermarched, and began using his hind feet with terrible effect. He kicked the stout oak planks of the car into kindling wood, and while he was occupied in this manner Murray made his escape, and returned to the surface.

Killed the Father of Rattlers.

The largest rattlesnake ever killed possibly in the entire state of Georgia was killed Saturday afternoon in the East Macon district. It had twenty-two rattles and a button, making it 23 years old. It measured a fraction over five feet in length. Nobody can be found to have heard of a rattler 23 years old. A snake that carries fourteen or sixteen rattles and a button is considered a monster in these parts, and is looked upon with most respectful bearing. The men had quite an exciting time killing the snake. None of the adared go within several lengths of him, and when he shook his mighty bunch of rattles the noise was awful, and struck terror to the hearts of the negroes, causing them each time to retreat farther. They finally dispatched him with a long pole.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

SLEEVES GET LARGER

YARDS AND YARDS OF MATERIAL USED.

Even in Simple Dresses the Sleeves Are as Assertive of Their Size as if They Were a Part of the Most Elaborate Gown.

Gotham Fashion Gossip.

New York correspondence:

GOWNS and jackets now display remarkably rich garniture and trimmings of the utmost elaboration are sold by the yard. Of these are the vandyke points of jet set with a narrow edge of sable. Trimming for the finish of bodices or the draping of skirts comes with great jewels of jet set two inches apart, from which hang in graduated curves strings of cut jet, the whole being set on a narrow band of fur. Point de Venise is shown in ribbon strips by the yard, the ribbon being set at intervals with a rosette of lace, from which hang mink tails. The lace itself is liberally spangled with jet and gold. Disks of point de Venise are a-sparkle with jewels and attached to each other at intervals by ropes of ribbon. Mink heads are set close together on a foundation of jet, the whole being mounted on gray guipure. A fringe of otters' tails is set on a wide heading of guipure, along which at intervals otters' heads show, each surrounded with a little frill or rosette of the lace. All these trimmings come at high prices, but give unmistakable elegance to a gown.

Following the lead of these highly wrought trimmings, galloon and passementeries have deserted their more simple forms and are offered in an abundance of most showy sorts. Three inch bands of galloon are used to trim the fronts and bottom of jackets, and when the garment is closed no less than a six-inch section of the garniture shows. This effect is made apparent in the initial sketch, though in this case the strips are a trifle wider. This cut of jacket is suitable for many materials, but is sketched in black melton and black galloon. It is fitted, but has a slashed basque laid in box pleats in back, and a slashed cape edged with galloon and ball fringe. It is one of several somewhat unusual jackets which are put forward to displace the golf cape, which just now is at the top notch of favor. It seems likely that some of them will succeed the unhandsome cape, too, before long, great as is its present vogue.

Though it seems almost impossible sleeves are growing larger, and they are not big from stiffening, but because of the yards and yards of material used in their construction and the disposal of the stuff. Stiff-as-a-board satin and brocade are much in demand, and such satin used for sleeves is gored and shaped so that lots of it can be gathered into the round of the armhole, while the entire width makes great folds further along the arm. Reception sleeves are puffs to the elbow, long gloves meeting them. For women with ugly arms, and few women have any other kind below the elbow, a detachable lower sleeve comes with these elbow puffs. This lower sleeve can be worn when gloves are omitted or are to be removed.

Even in those simple dresses whose nearest approach to elegance can be expressed by the word natty, the sleeves are as assertive in their size as if they were part of the most elaborate gown. In the costume of this second picture, whereof the material is old green woolen suiting, the puffs are very wide and made of square pieces of the goods. For the rest, the dress is simplicity itself, the wide gored skirt being trimmed only with braid, as shown. Above, the bodice is fitted, hooks in front and has a seamless bias back. Its turned down collar is plain, but the front and sleeve cuffs are garnished with braid in military style. The tailor dresses, too, do not escape the call for big sleeves, which are a distinctive feature of them, only second to the lap seams which are apparently a necessity. Tailor-made gowns of oyster-colored broadcloth are made with strap seams, outlined with piping of gray satin, but they don't look well. A tailor-made cloth gown with its seams piped is as badly out as a sugared oyster would be.

When it comes to putting on braid the current fashions have great surprises, some of the braided cloths showing most elaborate patterns, employing yards upon yards of braid. Of such fabric is the dress presented in the next picture, in dark-brown for both cloth and soutache. As is indicated, the skirt is entirely of this material, entirely plain and lined with heavy brown faille. Front and back of the bodice are brown mirror velvet, but the sides are of the braided stuff and the yoke and sleeves are garnished with light brown braid. The fancy pointed collar and the belt, which is ornamented with rosettes, are of plain cloth. Collars are planned to protect the throat now, and the fashionable woman of to-day has her throat shrouded close to her ears in all street rigs. Even inside of the high close collar of her fur she wears a scarf, with a great bow crushed close in front.

Skirts of brocade are made plain except for points of jetting set in fob fashion at the waist on either side of the front. These points extend to the knee and corresponding ones are set irregularly about the bottom of the skirt. In mirror or changeable materials the effect is very good, making gleams of light unexpectedly. Banding skirt seams with jet is a favored trick, one indulged in by very elegant dressers, and in many cases the bodice is brocaded with jet, as in the dress of picture number four. Here the material is dull black silk, and the dress is made up of a gored skirt with corselet belt attached and a pleated silk blouse with very deep yoke scalloped on the bottom. The yoke fastens in front and is embroidered with jet. The dress is alike back and front, standing collar and sleeves being embroidered to match the yoke, and the bodice hooking over fitted silk lining. The yoke need not be sewed to the blouse, but can be made separate and worn as a short jacket.

So many skirts are entirely without trimming that gowns are often made with fancy silken or satin bodices suited for wear with other skirts beside the one with which they really belong. Such bodices are made over fitted lining, are drawn loosely in at the belt, have rows of gray or yellow lace insertion going up or down, and sleeves unornamented save by their own great folds that reach the elbow. Below comes a long close-fitting cuff, and a stock collar and folded belt complete the bodice. Both collar and belt have loops spreading at the sides, and all the mentioned portions may be gaily bedecked if desired.

When sleeves end at the elbow, the long gloves worn to meet them come lined from the wrist up with chamois. This is a wise provision, for mere kid is an insufficient covering for the arm, especially when evening cloaks are made cape-like and loose. When the long glove is buttonless it must fit the plumparm skin tight, wrinkling only at the wrist a little. Of course, if the arm within is not plump, then the glove may be allowed to wrinkle a great deal to conceal the fault.

JETTED SEAMS AND JACKET.

How He Felt.

W. S. Gilbert was lunching, not long ago, at a country hotel, when he found himself in company with three cycling clergymen, by whom he was drawn into conversation. When they discovered who he was, one of the party asked Mr. Gilbert "how he felt in such a grave and reverend company." "I feel," said Mr. Gilbert, "like a lion in a den of Daniels."

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

THURSDAY.....NOVEMBER 29, 1894

OKLAHOMA wants to be a state.

TALK of making a new state out of Indian Territory and a chunk off of Arkansas.

CONGRESS meets Monday for its closing session till next March. Leighty and his congress meet exactly a year later.

COLORADO has three lady members in its new legislature. Their state superintendent of public instructions is also a lady.

CLARA DIEBOLD, the young lady who was burned in the explosion of sewer gas at Westminster Seminary, Ft. Wayne, died of her injuries last Wednesday.

"DEMOCRACY will never control this country again "keeps coming up in republican papers. What nonsense! We have heard this same old story since 1860

GREAT BRITAIN talks of making a law to pay their members of parliment. They have no salary and a poor man is generally supported by the voters that send him.

OUR flag will again be seen on the ocean. Under our more liberal tariff policy, the building of merchant vessels has taken a big boom. We hope soon to get back all we have lost.

CANADIANS are sending gold into the United States to purchase the new bonds. Here is another chance for republican papers to object to foreigners sending their goods into this country.

A DRYGOODS firm in Huntington has 1000 Columbian souvenir half dollars to use in making change. It is quite an attraction to trade with them so as to get one of the coins for fifty cents.

THE BUTLER REVIEW has changed its name to "Herald" as the two papers there have had names so nearly alike that people made mistakes as between the "Review" and the "Record."

THE new loan, made necessary by the failure of the McKinley law to produce revenue enough, is eagerly taken. Fifty millions were asked, and 154 millions were bid for, at an average of over $1.17.

A REPUBLICAN editor insists we should do away with the county superintendency, and asks "Does it pay?" We will first ask him another. Does the office of county auditor, or treasurer, or sheriff, pay the people? If so, how?

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND never indicated a desire to place Queen Lil on the throne of Hawaii again, and all such assertions by republican editors only go to show their ignorance. They can't show a word to prove their repeated assertions.

ROBY is getting us into trouble again. This time it is the winter horse races, the betting and gambling It is now under the management of James O'Leary, a son of the Mrs. O'Leary whose cow kicked the lamp that set Chicago on fire.

STEVE ELKINS, of the old star route corruptions fame is to be senator from West Virginia. This is one of the first fruits of the republican victory. The old leaders of corruption seem to consider this the proper time to get into the saddle again.

EDITOR WILLIS talks about reducing the pay and the number of doorkeepers of the Assembly. We like the idea. And while we are in this compound reduction, we are willing to reduce the pay and the number of the members themselves. Bro. Willis seems, to have overlooked that point.

MAX DEMBUFSKY, a former Goshen man, was the democratic candidate for congress in the first district, Chicago, at the late election. He was defeated, of course. Our people will remember him as a young man with spectacles, who used to attend every political meeting in northern Indiana.

IN MARION county, Wayne township near Indianapolis, Franklin Babbitt was voted for as "John" Babbitt, the tickets being printed that way. "John" was elected justice of the peace, but "Franklin" cannot get the certificate. Franklin being a republican, wants an office pretty bad. But he will have to get the commissioners to appoint him if he gets it.

THE Detroit Free Press shows that in Michigan, where seemingly there are no Democrats left, the result is due to their failure to vote. In Grand Rapids for instance, the republicans lost 464 votes and the democrats 4,016, the results of these two net losses being an apparent net gain for the republicans. Undoubtedly the omnipotent fisherman did it.

REPUBLICAN papers are complaining because Secretary Carlisle issues more bonds. But let them tell what they would do in his place. A republican law cut down revenues not far from 100 millions, and the secretary finds he is short of money till the new democratic tariff law brings in more. Let these editors tell what Carlisle ought to do, or what they would do if in Carlisle's place Don't all speaks at once.

THIRTEEN is the magic number of republican candidates for speaker of the House in the state assembly. It will probably reach fifty by the time that body meets in January. Some of the leaders are already at the state capital laying plans. They expect to change a number of laws, and also change the congressional district of the state so as to make sure of more republican members. But there is no law for them to change the legislative districts for two years. It can be done in '97.

LEIGHTY'S correct plurality over McNagny was 2,513.

KANSAS gave a republican plurality over the populists of over 30,000.

INDIANA supreme court decides that the new falary law did not add as to auditors, recorders and treasurers, as it did not at first include Shelby county. The part of the law that fixed the fees is all right.

EDITOR WILLIS is mourning over what he claims to be a wrong done farmers, in having the duty on hay reduced from $4 to $2. He says that makes DeKalb farmers take $1 less for hay. But republican papers have always told their readers that "the foreigner pays the tax." Now, as election is over, we find them claiming that the foreigner pays only half the tax. They ought to make their tales before election and after, agree in some way. It would be very easy to do this, as, both being false, either could be changed.

THE Battle Creek, Mich., Moon, states that about 700 democrats in that town refused to vote on Nov. 6. They were dissatisfied with the administration. Some were sore about not getting office and wanted to punish the party, while others were pinched by the hard times and lost all interest in the party. The republicans gained largely by the country's misfortunes, and that is why they were so successful everywhere. The best democrats went down under the cry of hard times. In Chicago a republican was elected to congress that the Evening Journal declared was notoriously bad, but he was supported by churchman and bummer alike without a protest. This was not a democratic year and the verdict of the people must be respected by all. We accept it with christian resignation.

THE people are not always grateful as one would expect. See how hard they kicked the democrats in the late election, and gave the republicans everything. Yet the democratic party, in the eight months it has been fully at work in Washington, has done more for the common people than the republicans did in their thirty-two years of power. And more than this: The democrats in this short time did less to strengthen the wealthy classes, did more to save the public money from needless waste, and did all they could to undo the bad legislation by which foreign labor has been brought here to drive out our own workingmen. Yet the people including some of these very workingmen, seemed to get mad about our efforts to benefit them. And the same is true to a great extent as to democratic legislation in Indiana.

That Diphtheria Scare.

The wildest rumors have been afloat for a week or two, over this second run of diphtheria in Auburn. We can only find three deaths in three weeks, and about a dozen cases in all that time, many of which were not diphtheria, but other forms of sore throat. One physician claims there have been no cases of real diphtheria, but we presume he is partly mistaken. But in spite of all that could be said the scare got started and people took their children out of the primary rooms at school, so that on account of the few remaining, and also to satisfy the clamor, the school board closed those rooms. Then came the pressure on the board of health, to add to this measure of precaution, by compelling these children to stay at home. This was all right, too, for if there was danger at school, there was also danger in having these same children getting together in crowds over town and even in Sunday schools. We do not see how, under the circumstances, the school board or the town board could do differently. But the fact remains that it was largely a "scare." Reports were exaggerated every day and every way. Even letters were written to parties outside, and when the veracious Waterloo correspondent of the Ft. Wayne Journal got hold of it he made Rome howl with his terrible tales. Yet we must not forget that the starting of these wild tales was right here in Auburn. People are just that thoughtless. They could find out the truth or falsity of these stories if they tried. But they don't try, except to make them worse. They do not seem to realize that these wild exaggerations would make the disease worse if it were as bad as they state. Nor do they realize that they are getting people outside, excited and scared, so that they will keep away from Auburn. And in a week or so some of these very people who have thoughtlessly got up this scare, will be complaining that business is dull, because people do not come here to trade. Now, let us ask our people to stop this imprudent course There are other diseases as dangerous as diphtheria from which as many of our people suffer, but no one gets up a scare about them Let us stop this nervousness. If your child gets the disease, begin at once, without an hour's delay, and get a physician. Our physicians are skillful and careful, and will save most of the cases. A scare will only make matters worse, and can do no possible good.

Miller's Note Book.

It would seem like a piece of foolishness to attack the integrity of L. J. Miller, of this place, yet foolish people do foolish things. We speak now of the finding of L. J. Miller's note book, or memorandum book, about which certain republican fine workers have made such an ado They have been sending a statement over the county, that they have proof that Mr. Miller bought votes, and they say it is found in his memorandum book. This book, contains his figures and notes on wheat buying, and now and then an item as to calling on such and such a man to see him on political matters but no one who knows Mr. Miller would think for a moment, that he would set down any item as to money paid for votes, even if he did such a thing. And anyone who knows him, knows that his influence over voters does not lie in bribery, but in friendship, for in his long business course, he has made more warm, personal friends than any man we ever met. But coming back to the story of the little book. A few days after the election, the editor of this paper went up the Lake Shore station to meet his daughter, coming in from the north and happened to walk there with Mr. Miner, of the Garrett Republican. While we sat talking in the station, Mr. Miller came up, and after a few words, we asked as to the amount of wheat he had bought in October. He took out a little memorandum book and drew from it some slips of paper, and showed us the figures, laying the book down on the seat where he had been sitting. We asked, then, as to clover seed, and as he did not have the figures, he stepped to the ticket window to ask Mr DeLapp. Just then the train rolled in, and we all hurried out. Mr. Miller forgetting his note book. Thomas Hallam, of this place, saw the book picked it up, and spoke of it to Miner. Miner suggested that the best thing to do would be for him, Miner, to take it, and advertise it. So he took it, and got on the train and went to the Junction. In the meantime Mr. Miller had discovered his loss, and meeting the writer at the freight office just up the track asked the name of the man we had been talking with at the station. We told him it was Miner, when he remarked that Miner had got his memorandum book, and he was going to telegraph for it. We told him to telegraph to the Junction as Miner would likely still be there, which he did. However, whether Miner got the dispatch or not, we cannot say. But he took it to Garrett, and showed it to Bicknell, the defeated candidate for auditor, and they at once started the story that the book showed the names and amounts of money in cases where Miller had purchased votes. Of course, there is nothing in this. We have told the entire story just as it occurred, and as we were a party to the occurrence, we have it right. We have not tried to color it in the least, nor have we tried to hold up Miner and Bicknell in the true light their offenses deserve. We simply want to give our readers the facts as we know they happened. What excuse Miner and Bicknell can give, we cannot see, for the keeping of a piece of property belonging to another, no matter how small, is larcency, and cannot be dodged. We are surprised that either should have committed such an offense, especially where nothing could be gained. Mr. Miller could make it a bad case for them, but his proverbial good nature, will probably let them off. Miller has downed the republicans so often, that if there was any bribery that could be fastened on him, they would bring him to punishment. They were at last frightened into giving up the book, and Mr. Miller now has it. We have seen it; is nothing but a memorandum book as we have already said, and Mr. Miller will let anyone inspect it who cares to do so. But we cannot too severely condemn this weak effort to blacken the character of a man who has spent his life in the public view since early manhood. Mr. Miller was for many years a teacher, then was eighteen years in the employ of the Lake Shore road at Corunna, then county treasurer two terms, being re-elected by an enormous majority. Since retiring from the office, he has been a grain dealer and come in contact with men from all over the county. We have no fears as to what the verdict of the public will be as to this latest campaign sensation. Miller will not be hurt The others have gained nothing but censure by this shady transaction.

Another Handsome Residence.

Although our citizens have not put up as great a number of buildings within the last two years as they did a few years ago, yet what has been done in this line is unusually fine, We have recently alluded to the later ones of B. C. Robbins, Charles McClellan and D. A. Garwood, the last named having been completed this summer. We find there is still another, and one of the very finest that has just reached completion. We refer to the lovely residence of Will Schaab on North Main street. It stands on the lot next south of B. C. Robbins' and being on a line with it, the same distance from the street, the two together will make a lovely frontage. A COURIER reporter was around the other day, and coming into this part of town, went in to take a look at it. The interior of the building is as complete in all its appointments as the outside is in its appearance. Everything is finished in the best style and of the most popular and durable wood work A part of the rooms are in real oak, of the loveliest grain and highly finished and varnished. This includes doors and all. A part of the rooms, notably the parlor, has woodwork of choice, lovely hard maple. This takes a beautiful finish, and as in the other rooms, displays the skill and taste of the workmen as well as Mr. Schaab's good taste and liberality. A few rooms have a finishing of cherry, which is also very neat There are a number of quite large rooms on both floors, including bedrooms, etc, and one of the finest furnished bath rooms we have seen. The metal fittings in this are nickel-plated and all of the most modern makes. The bathroom is supplied with warm water from a heater connected with a range in the kitchen, while cold water, hard and soft, are had from the cisterns, etc., on the third floor. The stairways, railings, newel posts, etc., are of fine oak. the posts beautifully carved. And in looking through this lovely new home, one cannot think of anything that could be added to make the inmates comfortable and life enjoyable. We have not learned the name of the fortunate young lady who will some day occupy it, but we venture to say that few young couples go to housekeeping in such an elegant home. There is one feature of the building we ought not to forget, It is the tasteful appearance of all the outside faces. This is especially true of the three faces, west, south and north, the points from which the building will be most seen. The builder, S. R. Rickel, of Waterloo, took this matter into his hands and so changed the plans as so make one face as attractive as another. This strikes us as a very desirable feature in house-building carpentry. And now that we speak of Mr. Rickel, it reminds us that he has been "the man at the head" from the start to the finish. He remodeled and improved the plans, making the exterior very much more beautiful and pleasing, and adding to the convenience and taste of the interior arrangements. He began this building soon after he had completed Mr. Coffinberry's fine residence at Garrett, of which he also had the contract. Charles McClellan's residence mentioned above is also one of his contracts. Mr. Rickel has reason to be proud of his record as a contractor and builder, when one sees the numerous fine buildings he has erected in Auburn We came near forgetting to add that the fine painting, varnishing, etc. are the work of Steele & Son. They will maintain their high standing as workmen here, as elsewhere.

WATERLOO.

W. H. Leas is busy this week in court at Angola.

Schools will be closed Thursday and Friday of this week,

Archie Beidler has moved his family into Mr Daniel's building over Dr. Frank Bevier's drugstore.

Try to count your blessings, and you will find them numberless. Give thanks from a grateful heart.

The south meat market has again changed hands. This time the firm is Becher & Scattergood.

A wagonload of turkeys was in town Saturday, and found purchasers, either for Sunday's dinner or to be sure of turkey for Thanksgiving.

Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Holly and their daughter Mrs Haines left on Saturday to visit some time in Michigan, where they have a number of relatives.

Mrs. Sarah Edge was in Waterloo much of last week attending the removal of the body of her late husband, on the larger lot, where the monumental statue was placed last summer.

Mrs Mattie E. Beidler, of Auburn, was present at the meeting of the L. M. C. Tuesday evening last at Mrs. Rena Smith's. Mrs B is a member of the club and her presence is ever welcome.

Last Friday quite a number of Waterloo people were on their homeward way, and met at Ft. Wayne on the train due here at 6 p. m. W. C. Francis, Bert Butler, Lewis Henning and Mrs. J U. Winslow boarded the train at that place, and J. F. Shuman and James N. McBride at Auburn. There was quite a greeting.

The flowers received by Mr. and Mrs Gruhlke from a relative living in Illinois were very lovely, although not seen by the writer in their full beauty. They had been on exhibition for a week or more at the Chrysanthemum Show at Chicago before being sent here. It is wonderful what cultivation may do to make a lovely blossom out of a very ordinary one, and to increase to an immense size what were at first quite small.

Union revival services are being held, in which the most of the churches take part. They have been in progress about two weeks and will probably continue somewhat longer. The meetings have generally been held in the M E church. Such efforts ought to result in much good, and when churches put away sectarian feeling and work shoulder to shoulder for the upbuilding of Christ's kingdom on earth, surely a blessing will attend.

The Press contained an item last week where a cow was saved from being choked to death by an apple, by an ingenious contrivance. And a few weeks since an item appeared in the COURIER, in which an unsuccessful attemt to push something down, that was lodged in a cows throat, when the stick broke off, the poor animal suffering terrible torture, and was finally killed. In any similiar case, if a hen's egg is broken into the animal's mouth, the yolk of the egg will ordinarily couse whatever is lodged in the throat, to slip down.

Miss Harriet Smith has gone to Valparaiso to attend the Normal.

Mrs. Winnie Askew, of Auburn, was a guest at Phil Pium's last week.

Miss Orpha Kiplinger is confined to the house with a severe sore throat

Mrs. Cora Stanley is visiting this week with Mrs. Louise Wheaton at Corunna.

John Graham and Joe Zwilling came home from Ann Arbor, Mich., to spend Thanksgiving with mother.

Miss Ada McEnterfer, who has been trimming for a millinery house in Kendallville, has returned home after a successful season.

A little three year old child of George Chapman, of Franklin township, died of diphtheria and was buried here Monday, and another child is quite low with the same dread disease.

Charles Campbell, of Brooklyn, N. D., surprised his parents, Mr. and Mrs John Campbell, by coming home last Saturday to spend the winter. We think Charlie is tired of living alone

CONCORD.

Mr. and Mrs. B. Phillips drove over to Auburn Wednesday.

Notwithstanding the low price of stock, the buyers are quite plenty.

Mrs. Martha Draggoo and daughter Gertrude, of Lagrange, is visiting relatives here and at St. Joe.

Last Sunday Frank Sebert and Jessie Coleman were united in marriage. We extend our congratulations.

J. B. Draggoo and daughter Cora, Mrs Hull, Mrs. J B. Ricketts and daughter Hattie, Mrs. Bone, Mrs Sheldon, G W. Draggoo and daughter Alice attended the funeral of Josie Henderson, in Spencerville, Friday.

Everyone should acknowledge that Nute Wasson is a generous hearted man. A short time ago he notified the church members that he would saw their wood free, and on last Wednesday morning his engine pulled up at the church and began work.

Josie Letitia Henderson died at her home Nov. 21, aged 22 years and 4 days She had been an invalid nearly all her life, but notwithstanding all her sufferings, she was one of our most amiable young ladies. Previous to her death she made all arrangements for her funeral, choosing her text, songs, etc. Rev. J. J Fred, of Leo, officiated, assisted by Rev. J. W. Thomas. The remains were interred in the Spencerville cemetery. The ladies had the church tastefully decorated with cut flowers and potted plants. Josie leaves her father and mother, two sisters, a brother and numerous relatives and friends to mourn her untimely death.

The Place Where Farmers' Make Money.

There is one part of the country in which farmers have made money during the past year, and that is northern Wisconsin. There has been a demand for every product they can raise as well as for the timber and cordwood which they cut, at good cash prices. Any man who is industrious can get and pay for a farm in northern Wisconsin in a few years and can get employment at good wages while he is doing it. If you like to know something about the country drop a postal to Frederick Abbot, Land Commissioner, Wisconsin Central Railroad at Milwaukee, Wisconsin. ‡2

The Jackson Contest.

The contest over the trusteeship in Jackson township began Tuesday forenoon in the commissioners' room, The belief of Mr. Provines was that there had been enough ballots improperly thrown out to elect him. His attorney was Mr. Hartman, while J. E. & J. H. Rose appeared for Mr. Dancer. The two sealed envelops supposed to contain the rejected ballots of the two Jackson precints were brought in by Clerk Moody, when it was found that only one was labeled, and as the Board did not know but the unmarked package belonged to some other township, they did not care to open it. So they adjorned till 2 p. m to give time to get the trustee of Jackson, and the inspectors, Silas Nugen of the south precinct, and M. C. Sheets of the north These two got there about three o'clock together with trustee Walter, when work began again. It was then discovered that the unmarked package was not a Jackson package, for trustee Walter, had with him a key he said would unlock an old ballot box, he had left with the clerk, and which contained the lacking south precinct. Mr. Moody got the box, and it was opened. The package was found all right, and was opened and the six township ballots carefully inspected. Then the two township ballots of the north precinct package, were examined. The three candidates for trustee. Mr Dancer, Mr. Provines and Mr. McNamara, as well as the Board, and attorneys, examined the votes. Frank Dills as deputy auditor, acted as clerk of the Board, and Mr. Blum as deputy sheriff was on hand to "call court." It was decided that some of the votes had been improperly thrown out, and some had been properly rejected. All agreed that Mr. Dancer should have had one more vote; Mr. McNamara five more votes, and Mr. Provines should have only his orignal number. This decision by the Board would have made Provines' vote 111. McNamara's 112, and Dancer's 115. The chief irregularity was in stamping the eagle or plow, where it seemed as if the voter thought the mark did not show well enough and he stamped again very nearly on the same spot. No doubt these were honest votes, but the board did not feel justified in counting them Some ballots, however, were decided all correct, and the result was as stated.

The very fact of seeing a predominant evil lays a special obligation on the one who deserves it to see to it that he himself is wholly blameless in the matter. This self-purification is the primary element in the purification of society.

It must be with wondrous thankfulness that fond mothers read of the grand work science is doing for the lives of the little ones. Diphtheria and croup are words of awful significance in the maternal mind. And now science brings the grateful news that successful treatment has been discovered for both the dreadful ailments. What does the fame of generals and potentates amount to compared with the researches of scientists who find the means of saving precious lives?

Nature never gives to a living thing capacities not particularly meant for its benefit and use. If nature gives to us capacities to believe that we have a Creator whom we never saw, of whom we have no direct poof, who is kind and good and tender beyond all we know of kindness and goodness and tenderness on earth, it is because the endowment of capacities to conceive such a Being must be for our benefit and use; it would not be for our benefit and use if it were a lie.

There used to be one marriage law for whites and another for colored folk in Delaware, and perhaps there is still, for Delaware changes slowly, and her constitution still contains the words "free white male," or their equivalent. Marriage licenses were required of whites, and a curious bond for the maintenance of the children that might come of the union, but nothing of the kind was required of slaves, and for years after the abolition of slavery colored folk married without a license.

The petrified forests of Arizona are at least 2,000 acres in extent. They are described as resembling "an immense logging camp, with huge trunks thrown about." The largest of these trunks are ten feet in diameter, and, where they have been broken by the action of the weather or by human agency, they form "a mosaic of carnelian, agate, jasper, topas, onyx and amethyst." Much of the petrified wood is shipped away, to be powdered as a substitute for emery, and the preservation of these unique forests by the Government is called for.

Every function has its own proper sphere and natural limit, and can do its best work only within that sphere and those limits. Nothing is gained, but much lost, by encroachment. Whether we have but a minute, a day, a week, or a month given us for decision, the mind will act more vigorously, more successfully if it be compelled to finish its own work in its own time. Even though no light seems to be shed upon the subject, and when the time for action has arrived, it is better to act than to delay. The mistakes thus made will be the best lessons for the future, and the mind will thus be trained to greater swiftness and vigilance.

"Why did he die?" as howled dolefully in one of Boucicault's plays, has become a comic type of the wail of bereavement; but in the case of the Czar, it is only a legitimate inquiry. Did he die because he had a cancer, or because of the ordinary results of Bright's disease? As the cause was evidently sufficient, whatever it was, curiosity may be regarded as superfluous. And yet it is of great interest with regard to remaining members of the same family. If cancer is to be added to the other ills of life that a Czar has to face, a Czar maybe would like to know it, and as they have had a post mortem, Dr. Leyden can tell. But it is announced that the results of the post mortem will not be made public. It might not be pleasant all around to make it certain that cancer is an heirloom in the royal family; but if they have certain evidence that there is no cancer, that ought to be pleasant. Perhaps, therefore, the decision against publicity means that they have found cancer.

D. D. Miller, a retired Ashland (Ohio) merchant and railroad projector, died on his farm recently and left $500 in order to secure Ingersoll to preach his funeral sermon. This is money thrown away. All that Mr. Ingersoll has to say on this subject he has said already. He has already declared that after death he is not certain whether he shall find "a closed wall or an open door." So far as is known he has had no additional information since he made that declaration. His views were clearly set forth on the occasion of his brother's death. He has not gone any deeper into the subject since that time. He has no more authoritative information about the other world now than he had then, and he never will have any more. As a matter of economy, therefore, it would have been much more sensible if the late Mr. Miller had spent 5 cents for the little pamphlet which contains Mr. Ingersoll's views and had nailed it up on his barn where all passers-by could read it, or had it posted up in the room where his corpse was resting so that his friends could see it, and given the $500 to his heirs, who would have made as good a use of it as Mr. Ingersoll. The late Mr. Miller was not a thrifty or a sensible farmer.

The failure of one man is the opportunity of another. Desperation is sometimes as powerful and inspired as genius. What appears to be calamities are often the sources of fortune. Dress does not make a man, but it often makes a successful one.

Begin the day well by rising early. The universal experience of the wisest men of all ages is in favor of the habit of getting up early in the morning. The practice is closely connected with length of life. It is also closely connected with happiness and activity of life.

In the long run a great body of men and women is improved less by general outcry against its collective characteristics than by the inculcation of broader views, higher motives and sounder habits of judgment, in such a form as touches each man and woman individually.

The every-day cares and duties which men call drudgery are the weights and counterpoises of the clock of time, giving its pendulum a true vibration, and its hands a regular motion; and when they cease to hang upon the wheels, the pendulum no longer swings, the hands no longer move, the clock stands still.

The man who, commencing with little or nothing, has resolved to rise must also resolve to sacrifice nothing to appearance. He cannot gain one true friend or obtain any popularity that will be really useful to him in his efforts to achieve independence by endeavoring to seem to have that which he has not.

Miss Agnes Jones, of Oklahoma, is "the fittest," and that's how it happens that she survives. She was a better shot than Sam Bartell, though he, being fourteen years older, must have had more experience. She was not only a better shot in the sense of accuracy, but also in that of readiness. Seeing that the case had to be settled in that way, Agnes fired without loss of time, and when Sam at last fired the case had gone against him. Agnes, it appears, had a homestead in the Cherokee Strip and a house on it, and she locked up and went away, just as the Dusants did, and Sam came along while she was away and occupied her house. Upon her return he brutally refused to leave. Ordinarily this would have been a case of the woman victim and the arrogant, brutal, domineering man. But Agnes knew the law, and fired promptly. In presence of this new kind of woman man will be improved by having his attention called to the wisdom of being fair to women as well as to other men.

The Carnot, a Unique Work of Military Naval Construction.

was to have been called the Lazare Carnot, after his great-grandfather.

The hull of the Carnot is composed of two parallel walls, dovetailed into each other without a break as far up as the armored plate. The double hull is divided lengthwise by seven partitions; it has five longitudinal bulkheads and eighteen transverse bulkheads. There are three decks, the armored deck, the gun deck, and the main deck. The armored hurricane deck is constructed of a double thickness of sheet iron four-tenths of an inch thick, and covered with armor three inches thick. The length of the vessel between perpendiculars is 364 feet; its breadth 66 feet. The armament of the Carnot will consist of two 12-inch guns in the forward and central turrets of the vessel, two turrets for the 10½-inch guns, eight turrets, four on either side, for the 5½-inch long-range guns, and six rapid-fire guns on the upper decks. The turrets are protected by armor 16 inches thick. The exterior armor will rest on a backing of teak 11 inches thick and will be 17 inches thick. She is expected to make 17 knots an hour. She will have two vertical triple-expansion engines, with a maximum of 15,000 horse power. Steam will be generated by 24 cylindrical boilers, with double grates, on the Lagrafel and d'Allest system, registering 33 pounds. The total cost of the vessel will be a little over 21,000,000 francs.

MISS WILLARD CHOSEN.

Woman's Christian Temperance Union Again Elects Her President.

There was a slightly decreased attendance at the convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, in session at Cleveland, Tuesday. Immediately after the devotional exercises Mrs. Campbell, of Wisconsin, gave notice that at the next annual convention she would move to amend article 4 of the constitution by the substitution of the words "Vice President at large" after the word "President."

After this notice was given Mrs. E. Sturtevant Peel, of California, arose and announced that Miss Jessie Acherman, around-the-world missionary of the union, was seated with the California delegation, and Mrs. Peel desired that she be given a seat on the platform. Miss Acherman was by vote made a member of the convention and was escorted to the platform. After this reports from the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association were called for. The first given was that of Miss Margaret Sudduth, managing editor of the Union Signal, the official organ of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and after she had finished Mrs. Katherine Lent Stevenson reported for "books and leaflets." Mrs. Caroline F. Crow next reported, also for the Union Signal.

Samuel Dickey, of the Prohibition party, then spoke briefly and humorously. After Mr. Dickey had concluded the election preliminaries were begun by the appointment of tellers by the chair. Each teller represented different sections of the country. Just before the tellers began to pass about the audience Miss Alice Harris took a seat at the piano and began to sing, "Blest Be the Tie." Instantly the convention arose and joined in the singing of the hymn.

The first ballot taken was for President, and resulted in the unanimous choice of Miss Frances Willard. The President was then presented with two gavels sent by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Churchhill, N. Y., the wood being taken from the house where Miss Willard was born. Miss Willard then nominated Mrs. L. H. N. Stevens for Vice President-at-Large, and she was also unanimously elected to that position. Then came the election of a Corresponding Secretary to fill the place of Mrs. Stevens, who had just been elected Vice President-at-Large. Of the 390 votes cast, Mrs. Katherine Lent Stevenson received 280, and was declared elected. Afterward her election was made unanimous. Mrs. Clara Hoffman was unanimously elected Recording Secretary, and she followed with a brief address of thanks for the honor. Next came the election of Treasurer, and Mrs. Helen H. Barker was promptly re-elected by a rising vote. After a short address by Mrs. Barker the convention took a recess.

The feature of the afternoon session was the exercises in memory of Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, late Recording Secretary of the national organization, who died about a month ago.

MEET DEATH IN A MINE.

Seven Men Killed and Many Injured by an Explosion at Colliers, W. Va.

A most appalling mine disaster occurred Tuesday shortly after noon at the Blanch coal mines on the Panhandle Railroad at Collier's Station, W. Va. A new miner, an Italian, put off an overcharge blast, which ignited the coal dust in the mine and a fearful explosion followed, carrying death and destruction in its path. There were forty-eight men in the mine at the time and seven are known to be dead.

After the explosion there was a terrific whirlwind in the mine, carrying everything before it. Miners Donnelly and Roony were in the mine some distance from and going toward the mouth. The force of the explosion drove them nearly 100 yards out of the mouth of the mine and landed Roony on the railroad track, killing him instantly. Donnelly landed in a gully, striking his head against a post. His brains were dashed out and scattered for yards around. His wife was the first to find him, and she swooned away. There is little hope that she will recover.

The news of the disaster quickly spread, and in a few moments hundreds of people were crowded about the mouth of the mine. Many heart-rendering scenes were enacted. The wives and children of the miners were frantic and strong men were overcome. In a short time a rescuing party was organized and went into the mines after the bodies. Prosecuting Attorney Colton and Coroner Walkinskaw of Wellsburg were soon on the ground and took charge of the bodies. They will conduct a rigid investigation. This is the second accident of the kind which has occurred at this mine. Just two years ago a similar explosion occurred, in which three were killed and several injured. The miners charge that the accident was due to the inexperience of the Italian miners and declare they will not work with them any more.

JAPAN STATES TERMS.

Cannot Accept the Offer of Mediation by the United States Government.

It is learned that the Japanese Government has sent its reply to the note of United States Minister Dun asking whether a tender by the President of the United States of his good offices in the interest of restoring peace in the East would be agreeable to Japan. Before reaching a conclusion the ministry gave the matter consideration for several days and finally stated to Mr. Dun that, although the friendly sentiments which prompted the Government and people of the United States were deeply appreciated, the success of the Japanese arms had been such that China should approach Japan directly on the subject. In view of the absence of Japanese and Chinese diplomatic representatives at Pekin and Tokio respectively, this would imply that any communication between the two governments would be made through the American ministers to China and Japan, who, since the outbreak of the war, have had in charge the interests of the two countries.

CORN YIELD VERY LIGHT.

Present Indications Are that It Will Average but 19.7 Bushels Per Acre.

The November returns to the Department of Agriculture of the rate of yield per acre make the average of corn 19.7, which is about 1½ bushels above the yield indicated by the condition figured in October. This is the lowest rate yield that has occurred since 1881, when it stood at 18.6 bushels per acre. Last year the yield was 22.5 bushels upon a much larger harvested acreage. The rates for the years 1886, 1887 and 1890, which were years of comparatively low yield, were respectively 22, 20.1 and 20.7 bushels.

The yield for the present year, which must be regarded as a preliminary and not final estimate, is less than the average for the ten years, 1870 to 1879, by 7.4 bushels, less than the average for the succeeding decade, 1880 to 1889, by 4.4 bushels, and less than the average for the four years 1890 to 1893 by 3.7 bushels, quality 79.4. The result is in harmony with reported indications during the growing season. The rates of yield of the principal corn States are as follows: New York, 28.2; Pennsylvania, 32; Ohio, 26.3; Michigan, 23.2; Indiana, 28.9; Illinois, 28.8; Iowa, 15; Mississippi, 22; Kansas, 11.2; Nebraska, 6.

The average yield of buckwheat is 16.1 bushels per acre. The average yield in 1893 was 14.7 and in 1892 14.1 bushels. The average quality 90.3, 100 being the standard. The average yield per acre of potatoes is returned as 62. In 1892 the yield was 1.32 and 1892 1.17 tons. The quality is high, as shown by the percentage of 94.5. The crop of apples is reported at 41.7 per cent. of an average product. The returns relative to the feeding of wheat to stock are not sufficient to justify a report at that date. The department hopes to be able to make a special report on this subject in the near future.

DIE UNDER A CHURCH.

Forty-seven Meet Death While Seeking Safety from an Earthquake.

The earthquakes in Sicily and Southern Italy caused considerable damage to the telegraph lines and details of the phenomena are coming to hand slowly. It is known, however, that the Province of Reggio di Calabria suffered the severest damage by the seismic disturbances. Little damage was done in Reggio, the capital of the province, but there was great loss of life and much damage to property elsewhere in the province. Seventeen communes were involved in the disturbance, the centers of which were in the vicinity of Palmi, twenty-one miles northwest of Reggio and Bagnara, on the Gulf of Gioja, almost directly opposite Punta del Faro, Sicily.

The village of San Procopio, near Palmi, was almost entirely destroyed. Here sixty persons were killed. Forty-seven of these met their death in a church to which they had fled for refuge. At Bagnara seven persons were killed. Eight lost their lives at Mamerlino and San Eufemia, being crushed to death, while many others were injured. The inhabitants of these places are obliged to camp in the open air.

Prime Minister Crispi has sent a large sum of money for the relief of the sufferers and has placed two vessels at the disposal of the prefect of Bagnara. In the Calabrian towns of Triparni and Mileto many houses were destroyed and a number of persons injured. Much damage was also done in the adjacent province of Cantanzaro. King Humbert has donated a large sum of money for the relief of the earthquake sufferers. Sixty lives were lost by the falling of the church at San Procopio.

FIVE CRUSHED UNDER A TRAIN.

Miners Meet Death While Riding Home on Cars Loaded with Coal.

Pittsburg dispatch: Five men lie at the bottom of Brush Creek, Westmoreland County, with sixteen cars and their loads of coal piled on top of them. The killed are: Wilson Brown, 40 years old, married; Thomas Jenkins, 60 years old, married; William Jenkins, son of the above, 25 years old, single; Owen Owens, 35 years old, married; Martin Polakesy, 30 years old, single. A train of twenty-five cars of coal pulled out of the Westmoreland Coal Company's works, three miles from Larimer, Pa. Just before reaching the main line, the trucks of one car broke down. The impetus of the train carried it onto the bridge across Brush Creek, and broke down the structure. The disabled car went through and was followed by fifteen more cars, all loaded. A number of miners employed by the Westmoreland Coal Company were riding on the train to their homes at Larimer. The men on the other cars jumped and escaped with a few bruises.

IS DUE TO FREE WOOL

MANY WAGE ADVANCES IN TEXTILE MILLS.

Cheaper and Better Clothing and More Mills Running—McKinley Is Challenged to Match This Showing—Election Result Not a Verdict for McKinleyism.

Prosperity at Hand.

Election or no election the beneficial effects of free wool are bound to show themselves. Cheaper and better clothing, more mills running and many new ones being built, greater demand for spinners and weavers—these are some of the results of free wool. During the first seven weeks under free wool the Wool and Cotton Reporter, in its "Bulletin of New Enterprises," mentioned 87 new mills, 144 enlargements and improvements, 158 mills starting up, and only seven mills shutting down because of lack of orders. Many mills were reported as working double time, and the scarcity of labor was so great in some textile districts that wages had to be advanced in many mills, and in many others strikes were on for higher wages.

There is no abatement of this prosperity since the election. The Dry Goods Economist of Nov. 17 contains mentions of thirty woolen, hosiery and knit goods mills. All but one of these mentions denote prosperity, while wage advances are mentioned in two cases—one, the Berkshire Knitting Mill, at Pittsfield, Mass., which increased the wages of its 300 girls 10 per cent., and the other the Broad Brook (Conn.) Woolen Company, which "has decided to pay its help weekly hereafter and to advance wages 7½ per cent.." Here are some of the wage advances which have been reported in textile mills since Aug. 28, the only wage advances, with one or two exceptions, which have been reported during the past four years:

Name of mill.	Date of report.	pct advance.	No. employes.
Rawitzer Bros.	Sept. 6	25	many
Riverside Knitting	Sept. 27	7	many
Alex. Crow, Woolen	Oct. 4	10	400
Woodstock	Oct. 4	?	?
Blackinton Woolen	Oct. 15	10	hundreds
Cohoes	Oct. 15	7	thousands
N. Adams Mfg. Co.	Oct. 12	5	many
Montoosuc Wool Co.	Oct. 19	5	many
Briggsville Woolen	Oct. 23	10	hundreds
Broad B'k Woolen	Nov 17	7½	?
Berkshire Knitting	Nov. 17	10	300

Probably not one of these wage advances—affecting thousands of employes—would have occurred if the duty on wool had not been abolished. Can McKinley match this showing, in any way, except by showing hundreds of reductions due to increased duties on wools—duties which increased the cost of materials to manufacturers, but which seem to have accelerated the decline in the prices of domestic wools? McKinley, where are you? We challenge you to construct a similar table for 1890 to 1893.—Byron W. Holt.

Tariff Reform's Great Loss.

Many good tariff reformers have suffered defeat along with the few sham reformers who were largely responsible for the sacrifice. The good went down with the bad. The Democratic party must see that only the good come up.

Among the fallen are Congressmen William L. Wilson, Tom L. Johnson, W. D. Bynum, Wm. J. Bryan, Chas. Tracey, Champ Clarke, and Jerry Simpson. John DeWitt Warner, Michael D. Harter, Clifton R. Breckinridge, and Bourke Cockran were among those who were not candidates. The cause of tariff reform, and therefore of the people, will suffer because of the loss of these earnest and capable leaders. It is impossible to fill their places during the next Congress. Fortunately, or unfortunately, it is unlikely that the Fifty-fourth Congress will make any important changes in the tariff duties, and it is not improbable that the Fifty-fifth Congress will contain more capable tariff reformers and free traders than does the Fifty-third.

At least one of the newly elected Democratic Congressmen is a very able exponent of radical tariff reform. Indeed, some of the friends of John K. Cowen, of Baltimore, think him capable of filling Wm. L. Wilson's shoes. Certainly he is a strong debater. Judge James G. McGuire and Benton McMillin are two able tariff reformers who will be returned to Congress.

Perhaps those not returned can do more effective work outside than inside of Congress. It is certain that the cause of tariff reform will not go backwards. If the Republicans had full power next year they would not dare to raise duties except in a few instances. Free wool and lower duties have come to stay.

Afraid of Responsibility.

It is not at all certain that Reed, Dingley, Sherman, Allison and other Republicans who will return to Washington in 1895 are sorry that they will have no opportunity to propose a tariff bill for more than one year, and probably will not have to assume responsibility for a new tariff law before 1898.

The fact is they would not know what kind of a bill to make if they had power to make one now. They prefer to suspend both judgment and action until they are more certain what the people meant at the last election. They couldn't have meant "Yes, we want McKinleyism," for they have twice said "No, we won't have McKinley duties." About the only Republican authorities which are so foolish as to expect a return to McKinleyism, dutiable wool and all, are McKinley, the New York Press, and the Protective Tariff League. And none of these will be at Washington in 1895.

Those who will be in power will be glad that they will have to rest on the Wilson bill until 1897. Then, if the Republicans should still have the floor they will be compelled not only to accept Wilson bill rates, but to lower them. It will be a "come-down" for the high tariff Republicans to follow the lead of the Democrats, but public opinion must be respected, and it will be plainly declared before 1897. Republican legislators who care for their jobs will never again make duties at the behest of protected manufacturers.

McKinleyism Is Dead.

In a carefully written opinion upon the recent election that great independent newspaper, the New York Herald, says "the result cannot be considered as in any sense a verdict for McKinleyism or against tariff reform, and the Republicans will make a grave mistake if they assume that the vote was a vindication of protection and a mandate for restoration. McKinleyism was stamped with a sweeping condemnation by the people two years ago, and they have not changed their opinion since. What they condemn was the inexcusable delay of the Democrats to revise the tariff, and their failure to pass a satisfactory law in the end."

Democratic Principles Will Endure.

Thanks to a few incompetent and dishonest leaders, the Democratic party must take a back seat for the next two years. But Democratic principles are as sound as ever and must, in the not distant future, become the foundation for all legislation. "Equal rights for all, special privileges for none," is one of the fundamental doctrines that have held the pieces together since Jefferson first gave it birth. This apparently simple statement means everything in the science of government. If it were made the text for all legislation we would cease to make millionaires of some and paupers of others, all of whom are equally deserving. Protection would be no more, for it is made up of nothing but special privileges. It confers upon a few favored industries the special privilege of taxing all other industries. Every industry should be compelled to stand or fall entirely upon its own merits. To aid some at the expense of others is to depart from the safe lines of action to the dangers of legislation in favor of selfish interests.

Some day we will fully realize the necessity of denying special privileges to any individual or industry. It is the way, and the only way, by which all can obtain their equal and exact rights. It means the greatest good to the greatest number, and therefore, if for no other than enlightened self-interest, it must finally receive the full approval of the people.

Senate Delay Responsible.

The official copies of the Wilson bill as it was reported to the Senate bear these words: "Passed the House of Representatives Feb. 1, 1894; Feb. 2, 1894, read twice and referred to the Committee on Finance." Not until July 2 was the Senate's version of the bill passed by that body; not until Aug. 28 did the bill become a law. Nearly seven dragging months had then elapsed since the reception of the bill from the House. In considering the effect of that delay one cannot avoid considering also the causes of delay, the effect of the changes which were made in the Senate at the dictation of a little group of men, and the popular disgust excited by the course and motives of this group. A measurement of the delay brings these things to mind, and it suggests an interesting question. What would have been the effect upon business and politics if the Senate had acted with reasonable expedition and if the new tariff had become a law on or before May 1? The passage on that date of a fair bill, after proceedings as free from scandal in the Senate as the proceedings in the House had been, would, in our opinion, have permitted the inevitable revival of business and industry to be seen clearly before the campaign. It would also have excluded from the field of politics the influence of deplorable incidents which are fresh in every one's mind.—New York Times.

Good Men Gone.

Some of the best and some of the worst of the conspicuous men in the House of Representatives will disappear, at least for the present, from that body after this session. Of the former, the chief, of course, is Mr. William L. Wilson, the faithful and noble leader in the cause of tariff reform. Another is Mr. Charles Tracey, of Albany, a most accomplished, able and devoted member, whose services to his party have been of the highest value, because they have tended to save it from its own weak or bad members. Mr. Tom L. Johnson, of Ohio, will be sadly missed. With some extreme notions, he was an open and aggressive fighter on the right side of the questions as to which his party was too much divided. —New York Times.

A Statesman's "No."

No speech that Senator Sherman made in the canvass just closed was half as effective as the simple "no" which he uttered in response to the New York World's query as to whether the Republican triumph was an indorsement of the McKinley tariff law; and Gov. McKinley himself, although he spoke twenty-two times a day, said nothing so full of political significance. McKinleyism is dead, and neither Reed nor Sherman will wear black to its memory.—Bangor Commercial.

Not Dead.

The Democratic party is not dead; there will be no obsequies, no inquest, no funeral. It is only sick from having indulged in too much Hill-Gorman-Brice-Murphyism. With good physicians and careful watching it will be in prime condition by 1896. But it must rid its system of all poison and permit no traitors to mix its food. An ounce of prevention in this matter of diet might have prevented the present sickness and have saved the pound of cure.

If.

If the Chicago platform had been the guide for the legislators at Washington,

If its tariff plank had been made law in 1893,

If there had been no sugar trust scandal,

If Democratic Senators had all been honest,

If—but what is the use of crying over spilled milk?

Freedom Still Lives.

Now Republicans are predicting the death of the Democratic party. Short-sighted and false prophets! Have they not yet learned that defeat strengthens and solidifies the hosts of Democracy? The Democratic party can never die so long as freedom has a meaning cherished by freemen—Pomeroy (Ohio) Democrat.

—The New Haven Register (Dem.) says: "No general overhauling of the tariff schedules can be tolerated for the present, but a great deal of good can be done by a few simple measures, and the sooner they are passed, the greater credit will the people give to the Democratic party for the revival of business already so well begun."

His body was cold, and it is thought he was killed early in the morning. The team was standing near by unable to move the wagon, as the wheels were blocked by the log that mashed Mr. Johns.

THE special convocation of the Accepted Scottish Rite Masons of the Valley of Fort Wayne was made memorable by the presentation to Thrice Potent Grand Master William Geake of a gold watch, a chain and a charm and thirty-third-degree coat jewel. A TELEGRAM from R. T. This is good news to hundreds of employes of the establishment at Fort Wayne as well as to the people generally, for it means the end of litigation and the beginning of a new era of prosperity in an institution that has been hampered in its progress by manipulation of the managers of the Eastern Company, whose interests have never been in the line of advancing the local company.

Morris, R. M. Watkins and Hon. C. S. Hernly, County Clerk. The emainder of the stock is taken by practical tin-plate manufacturers from Wales. The drilling of two immense gas wells within three miles of this city has added a decided impetus to the enterprise.

CLAUDE MCDONALD, aged 18, was run down by some freight cars which had been thrown on a side track on the P., C., C. & St. L. Railroad at Seymour. He was taken to the office of Dr. M. F. The Sun's Three Motions.

The sun has three known motions: 1. An axial rotation, which is plainly shown by the appearance and disappearance of well-known spots upon his surface. The mean period of this axial motion is 23 of our days. 2. A motion around the center of gravity of the whole solar system—a motion which can only be ascertained by the use of very delicate instruments on account of his great mass, which is greater than the total of all other bodies of the system combined. 3. A progressive motion through space in the direction of the constellation of Hercules. The rate of speed of this last named motion is not known, but is estimated to be 150,000,000 miles per year, and some investigators even think it possible that the rate will exceed the above estimate by at least half.—St. Louis Republic.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

1—Justice George Shiras. 2—Justice David J. Brewer. 3—Justice Henry B. Brown. 4—Justice John M. Harlan. 5—Justice Edward White. 6—Justice Howell E. Jackson. 7—Chief Justice Fuller. 8—Justice Horace Gray. 9—Justice Stephen J. Field.

The most dignified of all our Government institutions is the Supreme Court, which holds its sessions in Washington. It is composed of elderly men who are very solemn and never in a hurry, and who are as slow in their various proceedings as they can very well be. The court's business, indeed, is several years behind, and there seems no likelihood that it will ever manage to catch up to the present. Each justice receives a salary of $10,000 a year, but still their job can't be exactly called an easy one. They are in court six days in the week for four hours, and the outside preparation of their opinions requires an immense expenditure of time.

The court assembles each day at noon, and after putting on its black silk robes marches in procession into the court room. There is a theatrical touch to the entrance. The black-robed figures glide mysteriously behind the pillars, and then, as though at a prompter's signal, appear at the spaces between the pillars and move to their places. These places are fixed, and if you know the order which is invariably followed in assigning them you can answer without hesitation any question as to the chronological order of the associate justices. The chief justice, of course, sits in the middle.

When the justices enter the court crier raps three times and says in a sing-song tone: "Oyez, oyez, oyez! All persons having business before the honorable the Supreme Court of the United States are admonished to draw near and give attention, as the court is about to asemble. God bless the United States and this honorable court!"

When the gavel first falls all those within the bar of justice rise and remain standing until the justices, at a signal from the chief justice, take their seats. As they sit down they bow to the attorney general and the members of the bar.

The black robes which it has become the custom for the judges to wear—though why no one knows, for there is no law on the subject—have been made by one woman for the last fifty years. They cost the enormous price of $100. The justice wears his robe only when the Supreme Court, as a body, is participating in some official ceremony. He may go gowned to a funeral, if it is an official funeral. He wears it at the inauguration of a President; but ordinarily he puts it on in the robing-room in the morning and takes it off in the robing-room at dusk. He does not wear it even in the consulting room; so there is very little wear and tear on it, and one robe will outwear several suits of clothing.

Serving in the Supreme Court seems conducive to longevity. Several justices have had terms of over thirty years. The oldest now on the bench is Mr. Field, who has already served 31 years, and hopes to make it 34, which will equal Chief Justice Marshall's term, the longest on record.

LIVE LIKE BEASTS.

FRIGHTFUL STATE OF AFFAIRS IN PENNSYLVANIA.

European Brigands and Cut-throats Filthier than the Digger Indians and More Murderous than the Awful Mollie Maguires—Two Murders Every Week.

Barbarians in America.

The people of the anthracite coal counties of Pennsylvania—Luzerne, Carbon, Lackawanna and Schuylkill—make up such an ethnological crazy quilt as hardly can be matched in any district of corresponding size in the world, says a Wilkesbarre correspondent. Arabs, Turks, Greeks, Slavs, Poles, Italians, negroes, Germans, French, English, Irish, Scotch, Yankees—a bewildering composite of race, color and creed—are all crowded together in a little territory as small as many of the continental principalities. The confusion of tongues heard on a Saturday night on the streets of any mining town of the counties mentioned is like what a conversation might have been at the base of the Tower of Babel.

In the actual work of mining the Slavs, Poles and Italians are principally engaged. With the downfall of that organization of murderous scoundrels, known as the Mollie Maguires, came a series of changes which eventually resulted in the supplanting of Irish, Welsh and Scotch labor in the mines. Naturally it was from the very lowest strata of society in these European countries that the ranks of the new stock of miners were recruited. When a wretch had committed such deeds of villainy that even the recesses of the Sicilian and Calabrian mountains ceased to be a refuge for him, he made his way over the seas and found a safe haven in the anthracite region of Pennsylvania, screened and guarded by his fellow-countrymen. It was not all done in a day, but the era of cutthroat terrorism and high wages opened by men of English-speaking races has at last absolutely given way to an era which might almost be called one of human vermin and low wages.

Live on Filth and Vermin.

Human vermin hardly seems too strong a term to one who takes even a cursory view of the manner in which they exist. An Italian boarding shanty along the lines of railroads or that of the Croton viaduct in New York while it was in course of construction was bad enough; but an Italian boarding-house of that variety is luxurious compared with one in the mountains, here, such as the miners live in. The stories told of the filth, the vice, the brutality in these stews by those who have been familiar with them for years are almost beyond belief. A dozen men and women are packed promiscuously into one room barely large enough for two to live in with decency. The meals are served in an ordinary washbowl or dishpan, into which the boarders plunge their hands or their spoons, conveying their food to their mouths without the intervention of plates or knives and forks. Babies and dishes are all washed in the same water. When sickness falls on one of the poor wretches and he seems likely to die he is lifted from his bed and carried out of doors to breathe his last, in order that the living may not have the bother of a dead man around, or incur the expense of a funeral.

GETTING RID OF A SICK BROTHER.

SLAVS AT A MEAL IN THE PENNSYLVANIA MINING DISTRICT.

It is but fair to say that in this respect of treatment of the dead and dying there is a distinct difference between the Italians and the Slavs, greatly to the advantage of the former. The Italians will spend the last cent to pay for a doctor's attendance on a sick relative or to secure a decent burial for a dead friend. The Slavs will resort to any device to get a dead or dying man off their hands without expense.

But it is not so much their aboriginal ideas touching the decencies of life, their filth and their bestial habits which have made these wretched people more and more abominable in the eyes of communities on which they have been implanted like social ulcers. In these respects, it is true, the Digger Indians would figure to advantage by comparison. But it is their criminal propensities, their murderous savagery, which have been steadily growing, until they have seriously raised a question as to the possibility of forever enduring their presence in the region.

Two Murders Every Week.

During the past eighteen months there has been an average of a murder a week, while of murderous assaults with deadly weapons, many of which terminated fatally, the average has been two or three a week. And yet, during all that time, there have been only two convictions of murder in the first degree, and neither of these was a Pole, a Slav or an Italian. There is no longer any hope in police protection. The officers of the law, in fact, have been literally paralyzed by the rising tide of murder which has swept over the region. Tens of thousands of dollars and weeks and months of time have been spent in efforts to bring just a very few of these red-handed butchers to justice, and yet not in two years has one of them been hanged. It is true that a few have been lodged in the penitentiary, the notorious Mutz gang of Italian assassins being a conspicuous instance of last year's work. But where ten are caught and punished, ninety are never even apprehended. While probably there is no regular organization of murderers, like the Mollie Maguires, the Mollies themselves never worked more zealously or more cunningly to conceal their murderers and suppress all evidences of their crimes.

"Tote" Not a Negro Word.

In nothing is the student of American folk-speech so liable to error as in assigning geographical limits to a word or phrase. The English local dialects were pretty thoroughly mixed. One gained a little more dominance in one place, another in another, but a stray provincial term is prone to turn up in places the most unexpected. "Tote" has long been regarded as a word of African origin, confined to certain regions where negroes abound. A few years ago Mr. C. A. Stephens, in a story, mentioned an "old tote road" in Maine. I wrote to inquire, and he told me that certain old portage roads, now abandoned, bore that name.

I find the word used in a "Remonstrance" from the people of Gloucester County, Va., preserved in the Public Record Office in London. This paper bears date 1677, when there were four times as many white bond servants as negroes in Virginia. "Tote" appears to have been a well-understood English word in the seventeenth century. It meant then, as now, to bear. Burlesque writers who represent a negro as "toting a horse to water" betray their ignorance. In Virginia English the negro "carries" the horse to water by making the horse "tote" him.—The Century.

Single Eyeglasses Prohibited.

Single eyeglasses are prohibited in the German army. Even if a soldier has one good eye, yet needs glasses, he must perforce cover both eyes with them.

A Horse Has Little Brains.

The mental peculiarities of the horse are much less characteristic than its physical. It is, indeed, the common opinion among those who do not know the animal well that it is endowed with much sagacity, but no experienced and careful observer is likely to maintain this opinion. All such students find the intelligence of the horse to be very limited.

Although some part of this mental defect in the horse, causing its actions to be widely contrasted with those of the dog, may be due to a lack of deliberate training and to breeding with reference to intellectual accomplishment, we see, by comparing the creature with the elephant, which practically has never been bred in captivity, that the equine mind is, from the point of view of rationality, very feeble.—Prof. N. S. Shaler, in Scribner's Magazine.

Photographing Meteors.

An interesting device for photographing meteors has recently been placed in the Yale University observatory. It consists of an inclined shaft carrying a number of cameras so inclined as to include in their combined field a large area of sky. The shaft is turned by blockwork so as to follow the motion of the stars and make their images appear as points instead of lines, as would be the case if the cameras were fixed. With this arrangement the paths of the meteors are shown in their true relation to the heavenly bodies and their direction at once determined. The instrument is exceedingly useful in discovering the "radiant points" of meteors—the spots in the sky from which they start.

Raising Heat.

A new method of raising heat by an automatic and smokeless coal-dust apparatus has been devised. A torpedo-boat belonging to the German navy has been placed at the disposal of the inventors, with permission to adapt it to their new method, so that it may be put to a practical test. It will depend upon the result of this experiment whether the system shall be adopted in the navy. The process is said to effect the consumption of about 90 per cent. of the calorific power of coal, or about 25 per cent. more than any other apparatus. It greatly reduces the radiant heat, while the temperature of the escaping air is not so high as to melt the fire bricks used in the furnace.

To Improve Kentucky Stock.

President Scott, when he first took hold of the Cincinnati Southern, was greatly annoyed by the claims for horses and cattle killed by trains of the road on their way through Kentucky. It seemed as though it were not possible for a train to run north or south through Kentucky without killing either a horse or a cow. And every animal killed, however scrawny, scrubby, or miserable it may have been before the accident, always figured in the claims subsequently presented as of the best blood in Kentucky. "Well," said Scott, finally, one day, "I don't know anything that improves stock in Kentucky like crossing it with a locomotive."

Found a Watch Two Years Lost.

A man up in Oxford County stooped over to pick up a stone to throw at a cow the other day. Did he get hold of a bumble bee instead? No; this isn't a story with a moral. He picked up a watch that he lost two years ago, and hadn't been able to find by ever so persistent a search. And, although a mowing machine had been over that field two seasons, to say nothing of the rains of summer and the snows of winter, that watch is now ticking off the hours as good as new.—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

The Place of Torment

Of bilious people is chiefly in the region of the liver, but with the extreme discomfort located there are associated sour stomach, yellowness of the skin and eyeballs, morning nausea, an unpleasant breath, furred tongue, sick headache, and irregularity of the bowels. For each and all of these unpleasantnesses, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is a swift and agreeable remedy. It is greatly preferable to any vegetable purgative or drastic mineral cathartic. Such pseudo-specifics usually do more harm than good. In malarial complaints the liver is always involved. For such disorder, as well as for rheumatic and kidney trouble, nervousness and debility, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is a benign remedy. Physicians strongly commend it for its promptitude and thoroughness, and professional approval is fully justified by public experience during more than a third of a century.

A Commonplace Type.

A much-tried editor who is tired of perusing stories in which nothing happens, gives vent to a little mild sarcasm: We suggest to any novelist who is looking for a plot, this wholly novel and original love story: Chapter one. Sophronia loved Charles madly. Also, Charles loved Sophronia. Chapter two. He proposed and was instantly accepted. Chapter three. Sophronia's parents approved the match, and so did the parents of Charles. Chapter four. No relative or enemy interfered and no one felt displeased with anything. Chapter five. After a pleasant engagement they were happily married.

The Czar Played the Trombone.

Heroic impressions of the late Czar receive something of a shock when we read the story that a few nights before he died he got up about midnight, and, feeling better, began to play on the trombone. The autocrat of all the Russias, and a man sick unto death, arising in the still hours of the night, to perform a tune on the trombone is a somewhat grotesque picture.

The account further relates that the Czar's doctor, Zacharin, was so put out by the noise that he sent a note to his Majesty asking that it be stopped, and that his Majesty was so incensed by this reflection on his musical accomplishments that he returned a message to the effect that if the doctor did not like the music he might leave the palace. Of the barbarian Peter the Great this anecdote might have been related and it would not have seemed out of character, but it is a strange one to tell of a Czar at the end of the nineteenth century.—Baltimore News.

Designations of Groups of Animals.

The ingenuity of the sportsman is perhaps no better illustrated than by the use to which he puts the English language to designate particular groups of animals. The following is a list of the terms which have been applied to the various classes: A covey of partridges, a nide of pheasants, a wisp of snipe, a flight of doves or swallows, a muster of peacocks, a siege of herons, a building of rooks, a brood of grouse, a plump of wild fowl, a stand of plovers, a watch of nightingales, a clattering of doughs, a flock of geese, a herd or bunch of cattle, a bevy of quails, a cast of hawks, a trip of dotterel, a swarm of bees, a school of whales, a school of herrings, a herd of swine, a skulk of foxes, a pack of wolves, a drove of oxen, a sounder of hogs, a troop of monkeys, a pride of lions, a sleuth of bears, a gang of elk.—Edison's Encyclopedia.

Benevolence in the Factory.

A prince among advertisers, William L. Douglas, President of the W. L. Douglas Shoe Co., Montello, Mass., is not less eminent for practical kindness to the host of people employed by him in the production of the celebrated $3 shoe. We look naturally to a man of his enterprise for comprehensive and noble benevolence, and we are not disappointed. Adding still another expression of his manly good feeling toward people who depend on him for a livelihood, he has appointed a well-equipped physician as custodian of the health of the work people. Every person employed at the factory commands the doctor's services, either within its walls, or, if need be, at his or her own home; and it is within the physician's province, of course, to prescribe absolute rest when this shall appear necessary or desirable. The Douglas doctor exacts no fees from his patients, his engagement being by arrangement with Mr. Douglas, whose claims on the loyal good-feeling of his employes are emphasized by this expression of his bounty.

It ought to be generally known that since December, 1888, the principle of arbitration has been recognized by formal agreement of the W. L. Douglas Shoe Co. with its employes, every man in the employment of the firm signing an agreement to submit any disagreement that may arise and not otherwise be settled to the State Board of Arbitration for a decision to bind both parties.

IN Society women often feel the effect of too much gayety—balls, theatres, and teas in rapid succession find them worn out, or "run-down" by the end of the season. They suffer from nervousness, sleeplessness and irregularities. The smile and good spirits take flight. It is time to accept the help offered in Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It's a medicine which was discovered and used by a prominent physician for many years in all cases of "female complaint" and the nervous disorders which arise from it. The "Prescription" is a powerful uterine tonic and nervine, especially adapted to woman's delicate wants for it regulates and promotes all the natural functions, builds up, invigorates and cures.

Many women suffer from nervous prostration, or exhaustion, owing to congestion or to disorder of the special functions. The waste products should be quickly got rid of, the local source of irritation relieved and the system invigorated with the "Prescription." Do not take the so-called celery compounds, and nervines which only put the nerves to sleep, but get a lasting cure with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

"FEMALE WEAKNESS."

MRS. WILLIAM HOOVER, of Bellville, Richland Co., Ohio, writes: "I had been a great sufferer from 'female weakness;' I tried three doctors; they did me no good; I thought I was an invalid forever. But I heard of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, and then I wrote to him and he told me just how to take it. I took eight bottles. I now feel entirely well. I could stand on my feet only a short time, and now I do all my work for my family of five."

Ignorance Abroad.

Chicago Record.

A New York journal has taken the trouble to bring to notice the observations of some prominent French papers on the recent campaign in this country. It is surprised to see so famous a paper as the Journal des Debats talking learnedly of the "execution of Boss McKane" and speaking of Messrs. Sherman and Murphy as "Hill's associates on the ticket." It also draws attention to a former comment of the Soleil, a Parisian publication, which gravely told its readers that in the United States senators were so little conspicuous that when one of them dropped dead in the senate "no one present knew who he was." To add to the illustration of singular misinformation another French paper now speaks of the Lexow committee as a body "of 1,000 ladies who are led by Mrs. Josephine Shaw Lowell and aided by the Rev. Pakhurst" and those eminent Americans, "Gould and Russellsage."

The queer exhibition of ignorance leads again to the consideration of the reason why Europeans, otherwise intelligent, are so hopelessly ignorant of American affairs. It is a mistake to suppose that the French are alone in this failing. It was after the election of 1888 that an English paper of repute and eminence spoke very feelingly of "the defeat of Gen. Cleveland." The inevitable inference is that where the press is thus misinformed the people are so also. It is a strange revelation of popular ignorance concerning this country.

Whatever be the reason, it is the singular fact that whereas Americans, as a rule, are pretty accurately informed as to the general trend and significance of events in Europe, the Europeans are grossly ignorant on affairs over here.

Death of an Old Settler.

The St. Joe News of Nov. 23, has the following account of the departure of one of our old settlers:

Sebastian Tustison died at his home southeast of here, last Saturday, Nov 17, 1894 Mr. Tustison was aged 70 years and leaves a family of four children, three sons and one daughter, his wife having died last April. His funeral occurred Sunday, at North Scipio church, Rev C. M. Eberly, of Hicksville, officiating. Buried in Scipio cemetery. He was an uncle of Charley Tustison of this place.

And the following we clip from the Hicksville News:

Sebastian Tustison is dead. He was the Davy Crockett of Ohio, and one of Nature's noblemen. He passed quietly away Saturday morning and was buried at Scipio Sunday. "Bass" as he was commonly called, was widely known as a hunter.

The Chicago Times published an account of him in their issue of Jan. 13, 1886, and we republish a part of it relating a story of a "Turkey Convention."

The article was dated Hicksville, O., Jan. 10.

"In the years 1846 and 1847 there was no mast in this section of the country—no nuts of any kind. There seemed to be a general movement among the wild turkeys from the north. During the short period in the latter part of September while this movement was going on they were very abundant. The country was a wilderness then compared to what it is now. One morning about the break of day I went out into the woods with my rifle to look for deer. I went to the junction of Jackson and Allen creeks and sat down on a log. Between daylight and sunrise the turkeys on their roosts began calling and gobbling. They made so great a noise that it finally confounded me. I left the log and went to where the noise seemed to be the greatest. By the time I got across the creek and into the bottom most of them were down on the ground, but many still remained on the trees. There must have been at least a thousand of them. The ground was alive with them as far as I could see. After looking on at this unusual spectacle a while, I left and came eastward and took another position to watch for deer. In twenty or twenty-five minutes the turkeys came trooping along in plain sight, a solid column of them making a great noise all the while. The drove or procession must have been at least a half a mile long, and they were certainly not marching in single file. About an hour after sunrise they stopped their noise and began scratching for food. While the procession was moving I changed my position and came farther east to Lick run. By the time I reached there the noise had in a great measure subsided. I was following the course of the run on Judge Patton's land when the noise began again, and I went toward it to see what was going on. I saw a sight that astonished me. A large portion of them had come together on the ridge. At least a quarter of an acre was covered with them. The gobblers were in the inside wrangling, gobbling and fighting with each other, while the females formed the outer circle apparently in a state of great excitement, and with the males making a great noise. I stood and looked on in amazement. I had gone out to watch for deer and had no wish to waste my ammunition on turkeys, especially as my brother and I had recently shot as many as we wanted. I therefore did not shoot at them, but finding it would be useless to hunt for deer in the midst of the noise and confusion I started for home and left the turkeys to themselves It looked to me like a general convention of wild turkeys assembled to act on the question of the food supply in their present locality, and to decide upon a necessity of a migration. In a week or two afterwards there was scarcely a wild turkey to be seen in this section of the country. The turkeys all left for some other place in search of food. It was not known in what direction they went, but they did not return north again that winter."

Bass was born in Crawford county, O., Feb 2, 1824, and came to this neighborhood in 1847. He married Anna Allen who died the 13th of April last. He leaves three sons, Washington, Henry and Willard, and one daughter, Mrs. Joseph Langham. Bass' skill as a hunter and genial good nature attracted many visiting sportsmen to him. Numbers used to visit this county and no trip was ever deemed complete unless they could have him for a companion. His dignified and graceful manner never failed to make an impression and was often the first thing spoken of by his guests upon their return to their city homes. We have not had a death among us in many years that will cause such widespread sorrow and regret.

A Household Treasure.

D. W. Fuller, of Canajoharie, N. Y, says that he always keeps Dr. King's New Discovery in the house and his family has always found the very best results follow its use; that he would not be without it, if procurable. G. A. Dykeman, druggist, Catskill, N. Y, says that Dr. King's New Discovery is undoubtedly the best cough remedy; that he has used it in his family for eight years, and it has never failed to do all that is claimed for it. Why not try a remedy so long tried and tested. Trial bottles free at Robbins & McCord's drug store. Regular size 50c and $1. 3

Most people cannot afford to experiment. They want immediate relief. That's why they use One Minute Cough Cure.

OUR JOURNEY AROUND THE WORLD.

REV. FRANCIS E. CLARK'S NEW BOOK.

This highly instrutive and entertaining volume is a record of a recent journey around the world, such as, owing to the peculiar circumstances attending it, does not often fall to the lot of man to make. It was undertaken under especially favorable conditions by Rev. Francis E. Clark, D. D., President of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, and his wife, and throughout the long journey, which occupied more than a year, and covered nearly fifty thousand miles by sea and land, they enjoyed rare opportunities for observation and study. The entire volume is marked by fresh, original, and striking material, and is one of the most valuable books ever issued by the American press.

The reader is personally conducted through Australia, India, China, Japan, Egypt, Palestine, Turkey, and many other lands. We see these countries through American eyes, and obtain a perfectly clear view of them and their people, supplemented by two hundred and twenty splendid illustrations from photographs, most of which were taken by Dr. Clark himself; for he carried a complete photographic outfit with him.

The daily life of a Chinaman in his own country; his favorite food and odd dishes; the singular rites witnessed in the temples; Chinese farms and farming; the seamy side of Chinese life; Japanese acrobats and their wonderful performances; the burning ghats of India, where the bodies of the dead are consumed on huge piles of wood (a ceremony Dr. Clark witnessed); the Towers of Silence where the dead are exposed to be devoured by thousands of waiting vultures that constantly sit on the walls; native jugglers, snake-charmers, and fakirs—these are but a few of hundreds of interesting topics presented.

Their route led across the land that Joseph gave to his father and brethren; past the very fields where the Israelites made bricks without straw, and along the highways where once rolled the chariots of the Pharaohs. Much time was spent in the museum of Bulak (Egypt)—the most wonderful museum in all the world,—where may now be seen the mummy of the Pharaoh who oppressed the Children of Israel. The story of the discovery of Pharaoh's mummy among those of forty other mummies of kings, queens, and princes found in the royal mortuary chamber in the Theban Hills, and the identification of Pharaoh; is well told. Illustrations from photograph show where the mummy was found, and others give full-length, profile, and front views of this ancient king who was contemporary with Moses and reigned in Bible times, thus enabling all to see "just how Pharaoh looked." It is one of the most wonderful things of this age that the mummy of this infamous king, whose burial place was hidden for centuries, should at last be found, and the withered body be exposed to the gaze of the curious.

The description of modern life and scenes in Palestine is written with an earnestness and fervor that make this portion of the book wonderfully real and precious to Bible readers.

A journey was made of hundreds of miles in an old spring wagon across Turkey in Asia, through an unknown country infested by robbers and hostile natives. The story of this perilous trip is full of thrilling interest and exciting adventures.

Mrs. Clark accompanied her husband everywhere. She draws a vivid picture of life in far-off lands, "As seen through a Woman's Eyes." Her narrative is packed with anecdotes, incidents, and personal experiences. Her story of the long journey in the wagon is highly entertaining, its privations and perils, especially to a woman, being many. She was the only woman in the party, which consisted of her herself and seven men

The name of Rev. Francis E. Clark is a familiar household word, and his fame has extended to every corner of the world. Many distinguished persons urged him to write this book. They knew that he had acquired in this remarkable journey a wealth of material which, with his unique collection of photographs, would make one of the most valuable books of the day. All will find in it delightful entertainment, rare amusement, and solid information. To possess it is to prize it; to read it is to obtain a liberal education.

It contains steel-plate portraits of Dr Clark and of his wife, from recent photographs; a large map, exhibiting the whole world at a single glance, showing the author's journey from the beginning to the end, and 220 fine illustrations, from photographs from life. These must be seen to be appreciated.

We do not know when 640 pages have given us more genuine pleasure. If we speak warmly of the book, it is because it richly deserves it. It is sold only by agents, and is meeting with an enormous sale. Agents who introduce a first-class work like this ought to be cordially welcomed. We believe that the best way to keep out poor books is by introducing good ones, and a better one than this has never been brought to our notice Put it into your homes. It will be read over and over again by old and young, with pleasure and lasting profit

The work is published by the old and well-known firm of A. D. Worthington & Co., Hartford Conn, whose imprint is sufficient guarantee of the excellence of of the volume.

Keeps it for Lagrippe.

W. A. McGuire, a well known citizen of McKay, Ohio is of the opinion that there is nothing as good for children troubled with colds or croup as Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He has used it in his family for several years with the best results and always keeps a bottle of it in the house. After having lagrippe he was himself troubled with a severe cough. He used other remedies without benefit and then concluded to try the children's medicine and to his delight it soon effected a permanent cure. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord. 48

Courage, Democrats!

[New York World].

New York is naturally a Democratic state. It is republican only when democrats make it republican. Not in twenty-two years have the republicans elected a governor against a united democracy. Gen. Dix was elected by the republicans in 1872 by 53 524 plurality because large numbers of democrats, dissatisfied with Mr. Greeley's nomination for president, did not vote.

Did that make New York republican? On the contrary, at the very next election for governor the same Gen. Dix was beaten by Tilden, the democratic reformer, by 50,317, completely reversing the result of two year before. In 1876 Lucius Robinson was elected by the democrats. In 1879 came the fluke by which Cornell got 42,777 plurality. But he had about 35,000 less than the combined democratic vote, 77,566 democrats supporting John Kelly, the bolting Tammany candidate.

Did this defeat kill the democratic party?

At the next election for governor the democrats elected Grover Cleveland by the unparalleled plurality of 192,854.

If defeat disintegrates, if a complete overthrow in one election is final, surely the republican party did not rally from this disaster.

As if to illustrate the perversity of politics and vitality of parties the republicans elected their candidate for secretary of state in the very next year by a plurality of 18,583.

Did that give them the decisive electoral vote of New York in 1884?

Hardly. The democrats carried the state for Cleveland in spite of the intrenchment of the republicans in power in the nation and against their most brilliant and popular leader.

Again the pendulum swung, and in 1888 the republicans carried the state for Harrison by a plurality of 13,002, largely through the indifference or hostility of democrats to President Cleveland, while Hill had a plurality of 19,171 for governor.

Did this reverse, involving the loss of the presidency, destroy or even dishearten the democrats?

On the contrary, in 1889 the democrats elected their state ticket by a plurality of 20,527, and in 1890 they secured an aggregate majority in the state of nearly 50,000 for their candidates for congress.

In 1891 the democrats elected Flower governor by a plurality of 47,937.

In 1892 came another and stranger paradox of politics. Grover Cleveland, the candidate who was beaten four years before, and who encountered the strenuous hostility of the delegation from his own state in nominating covention, carried the state by a pluralty of 45 518, and his party swept the country. Surely this intrenched the democrats in power?

Again no. The very next year, once more by the help of democratic votes, the republicans elected their state ticket by a plurality of nearly 25,000 and defeated Maynard by a majority of over 100,000—a defeat that was more honorable to the party than victory would have been.

Thus in twenty years the democrats have elected their state ticket fourteen times, have twice by needed discipline of their own fatuous leaders thrown the state to the republicans and have once lost it by a factional bolt.

Is there not encouragement in this record? Does it not hold out a hopeful prospect that the democrats can carry the state in the great contest of 1896?

New York can be and will be recovered through reunion, reorganization and reform.

Some Facts For Mr. Harrison,

New York World.

Ex President Harrison made a speech in this city Wednesday in favor of the party which elected him to the Chief Magistracy of the country. There are some arguments, however, which tell very strongly against him and his party that he did not fairly meet.

Mr. Cleveland's Administration which preceeded his left him a surplus of $103,000,000. In the first year of his own administration the surplus was reduced to $2,342,000. Against this was a charge of about $40,000,000 for the sinking fund, besides other unpaid obligations. At the end of his term there was an impending deficiency.

When Mr Cleveland's term came to an end the net gold in the Treasury was $172,000,000; at the end of Mr. Harrison's it was $103,000,000. Besides this, Treasury notes to a large amount had been issued under the Sherman law which Mr. Harrison signed. These were also a charge on the Treasury, and so threatened the nations finance as to cause the panic of 1893 and demand a special session of congress for the repeal of the law.

By the operation of the McKinley act, which a republican congress passed and Mr. Harrison signed, the receipts of the Government for the fiscal year 1893 fell short of the expenditures by $72,000,000.

Mr. Harrison attempts to explain the dissipation of the surplus by saying that his Administration used the excessive revenues in paying the public debt. In Mr. Cleveland's term bonds were redeemed to the amount of $182,000,000 in Mr. Harrison's term the redemptions amounted to $147,000,000. In Mr. Cleveland's term the public debt decreased $236,000,000; in Mr. Harrison's only $43,000,000.

If Mr. Harrison can explain how these figures and facts are compatible with the statement that a republican administration is better for the country than a democratic administration he will show himself to be a statesman of wonderful powers and resources.

Right Arm Paralyzed!

A National Insect Factory.

From Harper's Young People.

The reason that the government built its bug factory was that it wanted to raise insects, see how they lived, what they ate, how they changed in form, and find out what would finally destroy them. You can see how important all this information would be to a man who had every year been bothered by insects he could hardly see, and whose potatoes and strawberries were being eaten by a hungry army which paid nothing for the feast.

The men who watch these little creatures find lots of things to interest them, and it takes away the weariness of their waiting. They find that marvelous changes often take place in the insects. Some of them alter their form so that you would not recognize them for the same insect. One will at first be a short thick fly, with sharp eyes, wings and a minute feeler like an elephant's trunk, and he will next be a worm without legs and no eyes. It is always an easy matter to find out what the bug is doing and what will drive it away, but it is not always so easy to say where he comes from or how he happened to appear in certain places. The day I was in the insectary I saw a bug which had been found in California by a boy while eating boiled potatoes, and later his father found more potatoes in the cellar, which had been dug a short time before, also inhabited by this same worm. I was told that this worm had come all the way from China, probably, nobody knew how. Anyway, a member of the unwelcome tribe had reached the insectary, and was a guest there. He was a famous bug, but he did not know it, for he was to be carefully watched, and his every action was to be noted in a book each day. He would receive as much attention as any great man—probably more attention, for hardly any man has been closely watched every day of his life, as this Chinese bug will be.

Nothing Succeeds Like Success.

And that accounts for the wonderful sales of Infallible Scotch Cure, for rheumatism, gout, lumbago, sciatica, neuralgia, etc. Just introduced in America by the Hall Medicine Co., Toledo, O. An infallible cure in Scotland is proving an infallible cure here. A fair trial will convince you. For sale by Fischler & Son. Accept no substitute. 30

THE NEWS RECORD.

SUMMARY OF A WEEK'S HAPPENINGS.

Another Terrific Explosion of Dynamite at Huntington, Ind.—A Family of Five Murdered by Indians—Chinese Outrage on a Priest—Murder at Gallipolis.

DYNAMITE

Claims More Victims in the Public Work Being Done at Huntington.

Huntington (Ind.) special: Another terrible explosion occurred in the Flint Creek sewer the other day, only a short distance from the place in which the recent fatal accident happened. The injured by the catastrophe are Henry Bain, fatally; Fred Stalder, seriously; John Freehafer, John First, and Thomas Jones. The men were excavating in the sewer, picking out the loose rock. No blasting had been done for several days, but it seems that a cartridge remained which had not exploded, and as Bain was at work he struck the cap with his pick and the explosion followed. Bain was terribly mutilated. His face was mangled, both eyes were blown out, and his skull crushed. He suffers fearfully, and his death is but a question of time. Stalder's face was filled with small particles of stone, but was not greatly mutilated. He was otherwise injured, but it is thought will recover. The injuries to the other men are serious, but it is thought none of them will prove fatal. The explosion was one that doubtless could not have been avoided—at least it is not ascribed to carlessness on the part of any one. The presence of the dynamite cartridge was not known. The indications were that when the blast had been discharged, all the cartridges had exploded.

Chinese Outrage.

St. Louis special: An account of a fiendish outrage committed on Father Capistan Goette, a Roman Catholic missionary in the province of Shensi, China, is given in a letter received here from Father Hugh, O. S. F., a brother missionary. Father Goette was assaulted by Chinamen September 9, his native servants driven off and the priest taken to a neighboring market town, where the inhabitants vented their hatred by maltreating him in various ways. If the old firelock guns used by the natives had not missed he would have been shot. He was dragged to another village and would have been beheaded but for the protest of a few Chinese and the arrival of an officer.

A Mexican Murder.

San Antonia (Texas) special: Henry Bash, a stockman of Pecos County, brings news of the murder of Louis Poidert and son by Mexican outlaws. Poidert was a prominent sheepman, and, accompanied by his son, aged 15 years, was returning to his ranch from a business visit to a ranchman living just across the border in Mexico. They were riding down a ravine of the Mexican side of the Rio Grande when fired upon from ambush. The elder Poidert was killed outright and his son received a bullet through his body, which resulted in his death a few hours later.

Raised the Drafts.

A swindling scheme was practiced at the Ketcham National Bank, Toledo, Ohio. On November 20, a man giving his name as George H. Hendricks, bought a New York draft for $12, and on the 27th another for the same sum. The first draft was cashed on the 30th by an Altoona bank, but was raised to $1,200. The drafts were on safety paper and the method of the forgery is unknown. The other draft has not been heard of.

A Family of Five Murdered.

Santa Rosa (Mexico) special: News has reached here of the murder of a family of five Seminole Indians on the reservation near this place. The crime has created a great stir among the Indians and further trouble is feared. The killing is said to be the result of a feud between the Indians and other settlers of that locality. A few days ago two Mexicans were murdered in their homes by Indians.

The Marine Hospital Service.

The notification to the Marine Hospital service that Park, Davis & Co., the Detroit chemists, were preparing to manufacture Anti Toxine, the new remedy for diphtheria, has been fully confirmed and has awakened great interest. Dr. Roux's discovery has created such a sensation in Europe that American physicians are anxious to put it to a thorough test.

Photograph Man in Demand.

At Springfield, O., an itinerant photographer has been selling photographs to young men about town, the faces of which belong to society beauties and the remainder to actresses in tights. If he is found there is likely to be some shooting done by the relatives of the scandalized girls.

Kansas Wheat Crop in Danger.

The reports from Western and Central Kansas about the continued droughts are that the wheat in hundreds of fields is dead, and in others the ground is so dry that the grain cannot sprout. If rain does not come within ten days one-half the acreage in the State will be destroyed.

Long Search Rewarded.

Thomas Johnson of Odin, Ill., who has been searching for his father for twenty-three years, found him in the St. Clair County Poor-house. The aged man will be properly cared for hereafter.

Burned by Revolutionists.

Port Au Prince special: The northern part of this city has been burned. This is the work of revolutionists. Hundreds have been rendered homeless by the conflagation.

Babe Fatally Burned.

The 8-months-old child of R. F. Warren was fatally burned at Delaware, Ohio, by the upsetting of a lamp.

Murder at Gallipolis, Ohio.

Elsick Boster, an old man, murdered Oliver Anderson, a barber, at Gallipolis, Ohio. Boster's son at the same time shot Henry Martin through the shoulder. The tragedy arose from a quarrel over a game of cards.

Convicts Die for Liberty.

Convicts Freese and Brandon shot Guard Foster fatally, and tried to escape from the convict camp at Wells, Texas. Foster returned the fire, killing Brandon and wounding Freese mortally Indiana Diamonds.

Columbus (Ind.) special: Diamonds have been found in Brown County, Indiana. About six weeks ago Z. T. Staples, the manufacturing optician of Georgetown, found a stone near that place immediately after a hard rain. He sent it to a lapidary in Philadelphia, who cut and polished it, and pronounced it a diamond of great purity. William Waltman, Prosecutor of the Ninth Judicial Circuit, to whom Staples exhibited the gem, has just returned from Brown County, and says the diamond is faultless in its purity and weighs about two carats. He also vouches for the integrity and honesty of Staples. Another rough diamond was picked up by him, but it was found to contain a flaw. News of the discovery of the new diamond field has caused considerable of a stir. Some years ago a diamond weighing three carats was found in the same locality.

TRADE OF THE WEEK.

The Bond Sale Did Not Help Matters.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says:

"The complete success of the Government loan and the replenishment of the gold reserve have not perceptibly affected business, nor prevented an advance of foreign exchange near the exporting point.

"As January interest has soon to be met, and the operations of the syndicate are thought likely to prevent much selling of the bonds to foreigners, some exports of gold are not improbable. Meanwhile domestic trade and industry have not been little influenced by the heavy defalcation in one bank and minor disorders in two others, nor by the failure of the Erie Railway to meet interest on its bonds. The closing of sugar refineries will diminish the industrial force more than it is increased by the resumption of the Bethlehem steel works and a few other concerns. The controlling fact is that, although in two instances wages have been increased, the earnings of the working force and its purchasing power are not on the whole enlarging at present and prices of the chief farm products do not materially improve.

"The liabilities in failures for the third week of November were $2,838,931 against $2,285,676 for the same week last year. The decrease was all in manufacturing, of which liabilities were $915,326 against $1,880,027 last year, while in trading concerns, liabilities were $1,395,640 against $1,384,640 last year. For three weeks of November liabilities have been $8,088,429 against $17,987,145 last year.

"Failures this week have been in the United States, 219 against 271 last year, and in Canada, 36 against 48 last year."

SAME OLD STORY.

The Turk Attempts to Explain the Last Brutal Massacre of the Armenians.

Washington special: The Turkish legation has furnished the following official telegram, received by the Minister from Turkey, relative to the troubles at Armenia:

"It has been ascertained that agitators originally from Roumania and Greece and recruited in Caucasus, took an important part in Sassoon rebellion. Following instruction from the London Armenian committee, money is even now secretly subscribed in Caucasus, with the view of creating more trouble at Moosh and other places. It was the Armenians of the Tahourie district who started the revolt by attacking Musselman villages, the inhabitants of which had great difficulty in sheltering themselves in their winter quarters near Diarbekir.

"Regular troops were immediately sent to the spot. These troops never employed more than seventy or eighty Kurds of the Djafer tribe who served as guides in the Lilly regions, according to the customs that all armies follow. These facts show that far from committing any cruelties, the regular troops succeeded in restoring peace and order. A further proof that there was no persecution of any sort is evinced by the fact that the peaceful Armenian villages, not partaking of the revolutionary movement, although surrounded by villages, the inhabitants of which were in open revolt, were left in perfect security, and unmolested during and after the military operations."

Robbers' Booty.

Greensburg (Ind.) special: For the last two months stores at Sandusky, Adams, Forest Hill, Horace, and Harris City were were repeatedly robbed. All efforts to apprehend the guilty ones were futile, until Monday, when Marshal Smith and Sheriff Meek searched Noah Moody's house, where they found tobacco, cigars, and many other articles kept in a general store. Underwear and shoes were found at Mollie Parcel's house. A large quantity of clothing was found in a straw stack, eight miles out, where it was secreted the night before by the thieves. Jake Ascheraft is the only one of the supposed gang arrested. The other four members escaped. Sheriff Meek, accompanied by Marshal Smith and Detective Raynor, of the Big Four Railroad, are in pursuit of the fugitives.

Japan's Reply.

Washington special: An official who is in a position to know the facts says that Japan has made a reply favoring China's peace proffer presented through United States Minister Denby. It still remains, however, for China to make it plain that she can and will execute what she has proposed, and until this is done there will be no cessation of hostilities. The favorable reply of Japan was given, it is understood, through United States Minister Dun, at Tokyo, Japan, who in turn presented it to United States Minister Denby, at Peking, China. While the exact terms of the offer accepted by Japan are not known it is said to be about $125,000,000 cash indemnity and China's relinquishment of suzerainty over Korea. There is said to be no surrender of China's territory.

Tortured by Robbers.

Three masked men battered down the front door of the residence of Henry Keller, a wealthy farmer residing three miles west of Alliance, Ohio, and running into the house dragged Keller and his daughter from their beds. The ruffians bound them securely to chairs, and when the girl began to scream knocked her senseless with a club. The robbers then ransacked the house from top to bottom, securing only $33. They then left the house, swearing they would burn his buildings down if he raised any alarm for half an hour. Keller managed to release himself, and after untying his daughter went and aroused his neighbors, but no trace of the marauders could be found.

A Double Drowning.

Bruce Irwin and Edward L. Fulkrod were drowned in the locks at the aqueduct near Coshocton, Ohio. Irwin lived at Canal Lewisville, and Fulkrod's home was near Williamsport, Pa. The two were in Coshocton until about 10 o'clock at night, when they started for Irwin's home on foot. Just how they came to fall into the locks is unknown. They were both intoxicated. Their fate was not apprehended until next afternoon, when their hats were discovered floating on the water between the locks and their bodies were recovered. Both men were young and unmarried. Fulkrod was an all around musician and made music-teaching his profession.

A Romantic Wedding.

A romantic wedding took place at Kokomo, Ind. recently, the bride being Mrs. Amanda C. Pierce, widow, aged 68, of that city, the groom Charles Moore of Monroe County, widower, aged 80. They were childhood lovers, but were separated and took other companions, raising large families. Some time ago they lost their consorts by death, after which the early love was rekindled, culminating in marriage, after a separation of fifty-five years. The groom owns a 700-acre farm near Martinsville, being one of the wealthiest residents of Monroe County, the future home of the happy couple.

Public Debt Statement.

The regular monthly Treasury debt statement shows an excess of expenditures over receipts for the month of November of $8,156,367, which makes the deficiency for the five months of the present fiscal year, $22,510,226. The receipts from customs during November were $10,260,692; from internal revenue, $7,740,054; from miscellaneous sources, $1,376,637; making the total receipts for the month, $19,411,403. The disbursements for the month, were $27,567,770, of which $12,037,800 is on account of pension, making the disbursements for the five months, $158,909,043.

Murder Case Dismissed.

At Allegan, Mich., in the Circuit Court, Prosecuting Attorney Fish, moved that the case against Mrs. Ira Hurd, charged with the murder of her husband, be nolle prossed. He was her paramour, and was claimed to have been in Hurd's house the night of the shooting. Mrs. Hurd and her sureties were discharged.

HAS TWO GOVERNORS.

KOLB AND OATES BOTH TAKE THE OATH IN ALABAMA.

The Populist Candidate Sworn in by a Justice of the Peace—Threatened with Arrest If He Attempts to Speak at the State House.

More Trouble Feared.

Although no outbreak of violence attended the attempt to inaugurate Capt. Kolb as Governor of Alabama, the situation in the Southern State is even more precarious than it was before the twin inaugural services were performed. As it is, Alabama finds itself with two Governors, two sets of public officers and two factions of popular sentiment, one supporting Capt. Kolb in his claim that he was defrauded of votes and the other sustaining Col. Oates, who was inaugurated in the usual way and has the State militia at his disposal. As Captain Kolb is a man of pretty well-known determination, there is a disquieting prospect that the post-election battle may not end here. The General Assembly has declared in favor of Col. Oates, but his opponent means to demand a reconsideration, and in the prospect that he will fail lies the source of alarm.

REUBEN F. KOLB.

Kolb was sworn in at Montgomery by James E. Powell, a justice of the peace, the ceremony occurring in the law office of Warren Reese. Kolb and his Cabinet then proceeded to the State House for the purpose of making a speech. He was followed by several hundred of his adherents. They marched up the State House steps through the ranks of the assembled militia and took their places beside the identical portico upon which Jefferson Davis was declared President of the Confederate States. In a few minutes Gov. Jones sent for Capt. Kolb, who was escorted into his presence by Lieut. Irwin, of the regular army. "I understand, sir," said Gov. Jones, "that you propose to make a speech in these grounds, claiming to be Governor of Alabama." "That is my intention," answered Kolb. "Then I must say to you that the moment you attempt it I will have you arrested and carried off the grounds. I say this in all kindness to you. If you were Governor you would do the same thing in a similar case. I will not permit you or anyone else on these grounds to interrupt the inauguration proceedings of Gov. Oates."

STATE HOUSE, MONTGOMERY, ALA.

Gov. Jones' manner was courteous but firm. Capt. Kolb looked around at the assembled troops, and with a wave of his hand started down and out of the grounds, followed by his adherents. They congregated again in the street outside the Capitol grounds. A wagon stood near by, and upon this Capt. Kolb mounted. He said that the proceedings would be opened with prayer. A Populist clergyman mounted the wagon, and at his motion the crowd uncovered their heads. Every man in the crowd was a plain countryman with rough clothes and big top boots. The clergyman invoked the blessing of God upon the assemblage, "a plain people, Oh, God," he said, "who are here to secure an honest government."

At its conclusion Capt. Kolb made a short, temperate address. The only bitterness in it was directed at Gov. Oates, whom he termed a usurper. He declared he had been legally elected Governor, and that he would use every means to gain the position which, he declares, belongs to him.

At 2 o'clock Governor-elect Oates reached the State Capitol, escorted by the militia. The inaugural ceremonies were preceded by a prayer, after which Gov. Jones introduced his successor, who was greeted with prolonged cheers.

ECKELS ON BANK ISSUE.

He Discusses Currency and the Defects and Limitations of Present System.

The report of the Hon. James H. Eckels, Comptroller of the Currency, submitted to Congress, gives full information in regard to the organization, supervision, and liquidation of the national banks for the year ended Oct. 31, 1894. It shows that during this period but fifty banks were organized, with a capital stock of $5,285,000, the smallest number chartered, as well as the minimum amount of capital, in any one year since 1879. Of these banks twenty-seven are in the Northern and Eastern States, ten in the Southern States, and thirteen in the Western or trans-Mississippi division.

On Oct. 31, 1894, the total number of national banks in operation was 3,756, with an authorized capital stock of $672,671,365, represented by 7,955,076 shares of stock owned by 287,892 shareholders.

On Oct. 2, 1894, the date of their last report of condition, the total resources of the banks were $3,473,922,055, of which their loans and discounts amounted to $2,007,122,191, and money of all kinds in bank, $422,428,192. Of their liabilities $1,728,418,819 represented individual deposits, $334,121,082 surplus and net undivided profits, and $172,331,978 circulating notes outstanding. The total circulation of national banks on Oct. 31, 1894, amounted to $207,472,003, a net decrease during the year of $1,741,563 and a gross decrease of $8,614,864 in circulation secured by bonds.

During the year seventy-nine banks, with an aggregate capital stock of $10,475,000, passed out of the system by voluntary liquidation; twenty-one—including two which failed in 1893—with a capital stock of $2,770,000, became insolvent and were placed in charge of receivers.

The feature of the Comptroller's report is his discussion of the currency question and the defects which are said to exist in the note-issuing powers vested in national banks. On this subject he says:

No section of the law should be disturbed which cannot be materially improved upon and no amendment engrafted unless such amendment will work out better results than flow from the existing order of things.

For the present law it must be conceded it has been successful in every material feature, excepting in the matter of bank-note issues, and here the failure has been a partial one. The notes issued by the banks under governmental supervision have been uniform in appearance and under any and all circumstances of the full face value which they purport to carry. They have possessed the first requisite of a good bank note issue—immediate convertibility into coin upon presentation.

It is probable that there could be no better plan for simply insuring the note holder against loss than the present requirement of a deposit of bonds to secure a bank's circulation, but it is equally certain, however, that a method could be devised, not less safe in this respect, and in addition thereto possessing that which is essential and is now wholly wanting—elasticity of issue. The complaint, therefore, made against the present system is that, lacking in elastic of issue, it fails to meet as fully as it ought the varying wants of the country's trade and commerce. This defect must attach to every scheme for a currency issued by the banks against a deposit of bonds, the market value of which fluctuates while the percentage of issue, less than the value of the bonds granted the banks, remains unchanged.

But serious as is this fault and retardful as it is to the business interests of the country, any attempt to remedy it which should lose sight of or in any wise make less certain the present unquestioned credit and convertibility of the bank issues of the country could not be justified. It is a duty of governments to see that the currency which circulates among the people shall always be of the very highest character, the soundness of which should never be a subject of inquiry. For thirty years the American people have had such a bank currency, and having seen the value of it both here and abroad they will not be content to have any innovation made unless such new departure insures not only equal but better results.

It is respectfully suggested that not only as good but better results would be attained if the present bank act were amended by repealing the provision thereof requiring each bank as a prerequisite to entering the system and issuing bank-note currency to deposit government bonds. In lieu of such provision should be substituted one permitting the banks to issue circulating notes against their assets to an amount equal to at least 50 per cent. of their unimpaired capital.

The Comptroller follows this suggestion with the further one for the maintenance of a safety fund to be provided by graduated taxation upon the outstanding circulation of the banks until the same shall be equal to not less than 5 per cent. of the total of such outstanding circulation, this fund to be held by the Government as an agent only, and for the purpose of immediately redeeming the notes of insolvent banks. It is to be immediately replenished out of the assets of the banks, on which it shall be a first and paramount lien, and from assessment to the extent of the double liability on the shareholders.

Civil Service Report.

The eleventh annual report of the United States civil service commission shows that from July 1, 1893, to June 30, 1894, 4,372 appointments were made in the classified service, an increase of eighty-three over the previous year. The number is divided as follows: Departmental service 385, railway mail service 718, Indian service 166, customs service 280, and postal service 2,823. The whole number of applicants examined for the five branches of the classified service was 37,379, of whom 22,131 passed.

The commission claims that experience shows that all positions in the government service, with possibly a few exceptions, can be filled under the competitive system. About one-half of all the employes of the classified service are in the 610 classified postoffices. The law, it is said, is now better observed in the larger offices than ever before. The Indianapolis and Baltimore offices are cited as having been very badly managed from a civil service standpoint, but are now considered well conducted, as are those of Boston and Chicago. Politics is said to have been practically eliminated in making appointments and removals in almost all of the larger postoffices, as well as in most branches of the departmental service at Washinton. The report declares that politics should have nothing to do with continuance in the service, but that to some extent religious and political reasons will influence dismissals until there is a requirement of law or rule that not only shall the reasons for dismissals be made a matter of record and be made known to the person dismissed but that an opportunity to give for defense

REED AND HIS SPEECH

MAKES NO EFFORT TO DEFEND M'KINLEYISM.

Neither Does He Propose a Restoration of the McKinley Tariff—The Revival of Business Not Due to the Republican Victory.

Satire and Sophistry.

Ex-Speaker Reed mixes more brains in his speeches than most other Republicans who are now addressing the people. But the essential weaknes of the Republican position reduces even Reed to the necessity of sophistry and mere satire.

When, for example, he ponderously declares that "this country is in favor of the doctrine of protection," the implication is that it has not protection under the existing law. Mr. Reed of course knows, and it is a pity that a man of his intellectual resources has not the honesty or the courage to admit it, that the new tariff is a high protective measure. It is much higher than the Morrill war tariff, higher than the tariff recommended by President Arthur, s protective commission, and nearly as high as the Republican tariff of 1883.

If Mr. Reed means that this country believes in a 50 per cent. tariff, a monopolists' tariff, a McKinley tariff, he disregards two consecutive popular majorities of over 1,000,000 against that tariff. And it is worthy of note that Mr. Reed does not defend the McKkinley tariff nor propose its restoration.

The ex-Speaker is not deluded and did not attempt to delude his hearers with the notion that the tidal wave this year is liable to be more permanent in its effects than others before it have been. "If we have wisdom for two years we will be trusted with more," is his sensible admonition. And wisdom, according to his conception, consists in "lying low."

This is not courageous. It is hardly possible. The Republicans in the next Congress cannot sit with folded hands and bated breath. They cannot win the Presidency by concealing from the people their purpose and policy in case they should obtain control of the Government.

In Mr. Reed's plea for more teaching, more facts, more object-lessons, we cordially concur. The new tariff will be an instructor. If it shall revive commerce, increase industry, cheapen prices, and restore wages, Mr. Reed's sophisms and satire will be in vain. If it shall fail to do this it cannot be defended. The experiment of a partial measure of tariff reform is assured. Both parties will have to abide by the result.—New York World.

Explaining Wage Advances.

Among the score or more of wage advances in large mills, reported since the new tariff bill took effect, is one by the Whiting Manufacturing Company of New York. The New York Press of Nov. 18, in reporting this advance, makes an interesting comment and admission. It says: "The restoration of wages to the former standard is believed to be the direct result of the recent overwhelming Republican victories. In this particular case some four hundred men are benefited thereby. The assurance of a Republican Congress leads the firm to believe there will be no further reduction in tariff duties, and they therefore look for a speedy revival in business." The heading over the article removes all doubt, and says the restoration is "directly due to the recent Republican victories."

It is probable that a majority of the gullible readers of the high protectionist paper will believe the explanations of the Press. But there must be a considerable minority who will ask themselves, "Why should this company advance wages on the strength of higher duties three or four years hence?" Oh, I see; wages are not advanced in anticipaton of higher duties, but on the belief that "there will be no further reduction in tariff duties." "But," says this intelligent minority, "isn't that a queer explanation to find in my protectionist paper? With a 45 per cent. duty on silverware wages were reduced; now with a 35 per cent. duty wages are advanced. My protection logic may be out of repair, but it seems to me that it would be proper and honest to credit such wage advances to tariff reduction, and to say that it is probable that a still greater reduction would have caused a still greater advance." The people are not all fools, even though the Republicans did have a big majority at the last election. They cannot be caught with such thin sophistry and cheap buncombe as this is.

Did the Republican Victory Do It?

And now the Republicans papers print all the news of the revival of business that is in progress, just such news as they have been suppressing for the past few weeks, and attributing it all to the Republican victories in the November elections. How little confidence these editors have in their own protective tariff. According to them, the tariff has no effect at all—it is only Republicanism that counts. We had over a year of concededly hard times, all under a protective tariff, and the same tariff which they claimed to be absolutely perfect. They allowed that the tariff was all right, but attributed the panic and hard times to the Democratic administration. Then the McKinley tariff was repealed, and business at once began to improve. This they denied at first, but now concede, and attribute it all to the election of a Republican House of Representatives. This House will not meet for more than a year, and when it does meet cannot change the tariff or do anything else. Yet these papers claim that the Republican victory alone can nullify a tariff that is sure to be in operation for the next three years and which they claim to be the worst possible, so that business flourishes under it much better than during the last year of McKinleyism. If they are right, surely the tariff has very little effect on business. And a tariff that only needs a fruitless Republican victory to go with it to make business hum, cannot be so very bad, even from a protectionist view.—Rockland Opinion.

A Suggestion to Brice and Gorman.

And now comes Senator Brice and tells the country who, in his opinion, will be the next Democratic candidate for the Presidency. We may not be able to catch precisely what the wild tidal waves are saying, but we fail to detect in any quarter a call for Senator Brice to speak for the Democratic party. The one thing which Senator Brice could do with most grace at present would be to go into a secret session, behind closed doors, with Senator Gorman.—Courier-Journal.

Senator Sherman's Interpretation.

It is significant that although Senator John Sherman lives in Mr. McKinley's own State he does not share McKinley's illusions. He does not discover in the results of last week's elections any sign or symptom of a popular demand for the restoration of McKinleyism.

In his World interview, published yesterday, he said:

"I do not regard the present result as an indorsement of the McKinley bill or a demand on the part of the people for radical tariff legislation."

Further than that, and perhaps even more significantly, he points out the fact that tariff legislation of a disturbing character is impossible during Mr. Cleveland's term, and pretty plainly intimates that even if the Republicans secure full control of the Government by the elections of 1896—which he does not regard as by any means certain—he would not even then favor a return to McKinleyism:

"I would not favor any great increase in duties. On the stump in the campaign I said very plainly that I was a CHAPTER VIII.

"Well, mother, and when are we to have that little talk you promised me now nearly two weeks ago?"

"About what, my dear?"

"Surely you remember?"

A vexed look passing like a shadow across the round, good-tempered face, showed that Mrs. Jardine did remember, though she would have been glad enough to pretend she did not, and to shirk the question.

"What, that entanglement of yours with the little Swiss girl? Oh, she has forgotten you by this time, depend upon it: and I was in hopes you had forgotten her."

"That was not likely, and I must beg of you not to call it an 'entanglement.' What I have to speak to you about is the very serious question of my marriage. You promised to consider it. I have waited, not merely a few days, but a whole fortnight, and you have never said a single word to me on the matter, which, you must know, is so very near my heart. It is rather hard, mother."

It was hard, and to do the young man justice, he had behaved exceedingly well. Never sulky, never distrait, as is the manner of young men in love, he had set his mind steadily to do his best, had been at his mother's beck and call from morning till night, had gone with her wherever she had wished, and done whatever she told him to do.

"Mother," he said sitting down by her and taking her hand—it was a wet afternoon, and she had just sent the carriage away—"you promised me to think it over—this matter so very near my heart. Mother, have you done so? Will you give me your approval, and let me take your love and blessing with me—to Neuchatel."

"And why? What may be your business at Neuchatel?"

He turned bitterly away. "Mother, do you think I am a stone, that you try me so? You understand quite well though you pretend to misunderstand. You know I am going to Neuchatel to ask Mademoiselle Jardine to marry me."

"And then?"

"Then, I suppose, we shall be married."

"Might I inquire what you intend to marry upon?"

"I have not considered the question of my income; but it keeps me, and it is doubtless enough to keep a wife. You pay it so regularly that it is you who can best inform me its precise amount, and whence I draw it for I should like naturally, from this time, to be as independent as possible."

"So you shall be, never fear, and much good may your independence do you. Roderick Jardine, since you will be such a fool, hear first what you have to look to. When I married your father, except that tumble-down place, Blackhall, he had not a half-penny. I was daft to marry him, I know that but I was young and I was fond of him. Her voice trembled a little. "However, that's all past; and he was a good man and a kind husband to me—always let me do as I liked with my own. For everything was my own, and is still, and I will do as I like with it; mind that."

"Of course; who wishes to hinder you, mother?" said Roderick, gently for the loud tongue was growing louder and the red face redder. Self-restraint, he knew, was not one of his mother's characteristics—perhaps that was why he had been obliged to learn it himself.

"My money is my own" ("my ain," she pronounced it, dropping, as she always did in excitement, into the speech of her youth). "If ye vex me, and marry against my will, lad, ye may do the best ye can with that wretched hole, Blacknall; go and starve in the musty old rooms among the mice and rats, as I dare say your father would have liked to do; but ye'll get naething out o' me. I have thousands—hundreds of thousands—to spend and to leave; but though you're my ain, only son, marry that woman, and I'll neither gie ye, nor leave ye, ae bawbee."

She thought she had overwhelmed him, crushed him; but he stood there, without any visible change in him, except a certain loftiness of carriage and brightness of eye.

"Don't let us quarrel over money matters, mother. As you say, do as you like with your own. If I have Blackhall I shall be quite satisfied, and so will she."

"Then you mean to brave me, insult me, and marry her?"

"Not to insult you. But I certainly mean to marry her—if I can."

"With or without my consent?"

Roderick waited a minute and then answered, in a very low tone, "Yes."

"Lad, lad! have ye gone clean daft? Do ye really mean what ye say?" For a parently, until now, ever accustomed to entire and unquestioned authority, she had refused to believe him in earnest.

"I shall go back to Switzerland, marry my cousin if I can, and present her here as soon as possible as my wife. If she will not marry, me I—I shall never come home at all."

"Ae fear o' that. She'll tak' ye, lad; she'll jump at ye if she thinks you've got the siller."

"Mother"—Roderick spoke beneath his breath in a white heat of suppressed passion—"mother, how dare you say such things to me? If there is a creature in the world that ought to be sacred to a woman, it is that other woman whom her son loves."

"That other woman, as you call her, is nothing to me. You chose her without my knowledge, and you say you will marry her with or without my consent. Do it. But from that day I will never set eyes upon either her or you."

"Be it so." Roderick sprang up in irrepressible passion, and paced the room once, twice, and then stopped opposite her. "You didn't really mean what you said? Mother—oh, mother." The appeal was almost like a cry, but in vain.

"I did mean it, and I do."

"Then, mother, it is no use our talking together any more. Good by."

"Good-by."

Roderick held out his hand, but she did not take it. His voice was tender, sad—nay, almost heart-broken; but here was cold as a stone.

* * * * * * *

Roderick stayed a day in London, at a hotel, the address of which he had carefully written out and left upon Mrs. Jardine's dressing table, waiting vaguely in the hope of some blessed telegram that might change his miserable journey into a happy one. Then he started; and when he found himself drifting away from Dover pier under the cold clear winter stars, he felt as if he had cut the cable of his life forever.

Reaching the hotel after his long journey, the familiar faces and the bright Swiss welcome warmed his heart. It was Sunday morning—during that miserable week he had almost lost count of days—and all the good people of Neuchatel were gone to church; doubtless also the Reynier family. Still, he could not rest. He thought he would just go and see the outside of the house, perhaps hear she was well, and then hover about for a glimpse of her, till he could speak to the professor, her nominal protector, and ask permission, after the fashion of the country, formally to offer his hand. For he was determined no respect, no decorum, should be wanting in anything he did, down to the commonest outside convenances, toward the woman he adored.

His hand almost shook as he rang the bell of Professor Reynier's door—for after all he could not pass it—and his voice failed, and his disused French seemed to fly away from him when he faced the little Bonne, who at once recognizing him, and breaking into the most courteous of smiles, showed him in quiet like "un ami de la famille."

They were all well—they would return from church immediately—monsieur must allow himself to wait—her master would be charmed to see him. Would monsieur repose himself in the salon? No one was there, she believed.

And for the first moment he believed so, too, and sat down, looking tenderly round on the familiar room—the Paradise where his love had appeared to him that first night—making ever afterward the whole world new. The dear, silent, empty room! empty? No! something stirred in a recess; some person, sitting there reading, rose with a low, listless air, came forward, suddenly stopped.

The slender figure, the black dress, the fair, clustering curls! Roderick started up. The whole thing was so sudden, so unexpected, that there was no time for any disguises on either side. Besides, both were so young; and it is in later life that love learns concealment. As they stood, these two young creatures, face to face and quite alone, no human power could have concealed the joy of both.

Roderick advanced a step. "Ma voici! je suis revenu," was all he said, speaking in French, as seemed most natural.

"Oui, oui, oui!" and with a glad cry Silence clasped her hands, the first impulsive gesture he had ever seen her use: "oui, il est revenu."

The minute afterward—he knew not how; in truth, neither ever did know—he felt her in his arms, gathered close to his breast, sheltering and sheltered there as if it were her natural refuge. He did not kiss her—he dared not—but he touched her soft hair as it lay on his shoulder—he pressed her, all shaking with sobs, to his breast he called her by name—first "ma cousine," and then "Silence." An instant more, and putting her a little apart from him, so that he could look down into her eyes, he breathed, rather than spoke, another word—an English word—"My wife."

Silence shrunk back for one moment, trembling violently, dropped her face, all scarlet, and then lifted it up with a strange pathos of entreaty, almost appeal, as if she had but him in the whole world.

"Your mother," he whispered; "your mother knew it all."

Roderick drew her back again close into his very heart, and pressed his lips upon hers. In that long, silent, solemn troth-plight the two became one—forever.

Immediately on the family's return from church, Roderick asked for an interview with M. Reynier, and explained everything, while Silence did the same to Mme. Reynier and the girls. There were due congratulations, both formal and tearful, from the simple affectionate Swiss household, and then the thing was an accepted fact and the young people were fiances and treated as such, according to the fashion of the country, which holds the bond almost as sacred as that between husband and wife.

A week went by, and still he heard nothing, had told her nothing of his own people, except briefly answering her innocent questions, that his mother was quite well and his sister married.

This might have gone on still longer, he shrunk so from the cruel task of giving pain to his innocent darling, had it not been for a letter which came one morning the very morning when he took her to look at the new white cross, and she had asked him to "tell her everything." He had told her a good deal how the repairs were progressing at Blackhal.—not restorations, only needful repairs, which he had left in charge of Mr. Black, the factor—desiring that nothing might be altered which was not absolutely necessary. But in reading the letter to Silence, he had omitted the P. S., which ran thus.

"I saw Mrs. Jardine this morning. She was quite well; looked exceedingly well. She had let her house for the winter and was just starting on a round of visits in England. She bade me tell you she had received your last letter, and there was 'no answer.'"

Then she was inexorable, this woman who called herself a mother. As Roderick stood beside the grave of the dead mother here and thought of his own, he could almost have forgotten his manhood and burst into an agony of childish tears.

"What are you thinking about? Is there anything in the letter that vexes you? or anything that you have not read to me?" She spoke in her pretty broken English; she always talked English with him now; and she looked him straight in the face with her innocent eyes. "I shall not mind you not telling me everything, if you say distinctly, 'I have reasons. I would rather not.' But still I think it would be better—better for us both, if you did tell me."

"You are right," he answered, with an almost convulsive clasp of the hand which lay on his arm, which she returned. It was one of the touching peculiarities of hers that, now she was betrothed, she never seemed the least shy or ashamed of loving him, of identifying herself with him, and of belonging to him and him alone, without an atom of coquetry, or exactness, or doubt. That delight in teasing, in showing their power, which so many girls—really generous and good girls—have with their lovers, was in Silence Jardine altogether absent. She simply loved him, nothing more.

"Now tell me what it?" she said. "It will not hurt me. Nothing can hurt me now, except so far as it hurts you. Tell me."

So he told her, as briefly and tenderly as he could without compromising the truth. He attributed Mrs. Jardine's objections to his marriage chiefly to her vexation that his bride was of another country and had no dot. Of the family riches, or his own, he said as little as possible; and, in truth, Silence did not seem to take in that phase of the subject, or be affected thereby. The one thing which struck her—and put it as carefully as he would, it could not fail to strike her like a heavy blow—was the fact that he was marrying her without his mother's consent, and hopeless of ever winning it.

"We never do that here," she said, faintly. "It is, I think, impossible, illegal."

"It is not so in our free England," Roderick answered, passionately. "No injustice, even of parents, is allowed to blight our lives. After a man is 21, or a woman, either, both can walk out of their parents' door and in at any church door, and be married in the face of all the world, which is a right and righteous thing——"

"Hush!" she whispered; and he saw that her face was white and the touch of her poor little hand deadly cold. "We will not talk any more of this today. To-morrow. We will part now. Do not walk."

"Not walk home with you. Not see you till to-morrow morning!"

"Roderick," she whispered, putting her cold little hands in his. They stood together in the shelter of the cemetery wall the early December dusk had already fallen, and there was not a creature near. "My Roderick, kiss me—kiss and forgive."

He kissed her—the sacrament of the lips which only faintly expresses the union, through life and after, of soul to soul, and both were comforted and at peace. Nevertheless in walking home together, they scarcely spoke a single word.

NILE BOATMEN.

They Lead Hard Lives of Excessive Poverty.

"The workingmen of this country are princes compared with those of some countries I have visited," said a traveler. "Take, for instance, the boatmen on the River Nile. They live a miserable life of hard labor, without enough pay to be able to save a penny, and yet they always seem to be happy. Their songs make the night musical, and all day long, at their oars or the tow rope, they go chanting and singing as cheerfully as if they received $30 instead of $8 a month. Out of this miserable pittance they are obliged to feed and clothe themselves. Their food is but the poorest kind of bread, baked and broken into pieces and dried on deck in the sun. A heap of several bushels of it always lies on the cabin deck, and this is boiled in river water, making a sort of mash or soft mass, which the men surround three times a day, and sat with their hands dipping it out of the wooden bowl, which is their sole possession in the shape of a dish or plate. These men have a queer way of fishing. They have a rope about two hundred feet long, armed with large hooks at every few inches, which is sunk by weights, and dragged up and down the river. By chance they sometimes in this way hook a large fish, but it is a rare occurrence."

Coffee Drinking Theories.

It is hard to determine whether the excessive coffee drinking of the Americans is the cause of their extreme nervousness, or whether their high-strung temperaments induce the craving for it. Scientists have tried to prove both theories, but have not agreed upon either. However, we are a nervous people, and we are much addicted to the use of table stimulants.

Coffee first became known contemporary with the discovery of America. It is an evergreen shrub native in the East, bearing bright red berries, which inclose a seed known as the coffee bean. The story goes that the Superior of a far-away monastery was once told by a shepherd of the singular activity displayed by his sheep after browsing upon a certain shrub. The Superior made an infusion of the shrub and gave it to his monks, hoping that it would assist in keeping them awake during the night devotions. It worked like a charm, and the fame of the little brown coffee berry soon spread abroad. It was not introduced into England until the middle of the seventeenth century. Sir Henry Blount went to Turkey in 1634, and found that the Turks had a drink called "kauphe," made, he said, "from a berry which they dried and crushed and made into a black infusion, and which they drank at all hours of the day and night."

In 1652 it was brought to England, and the first coffee-house was established in London. In the time of Queen Anne there were 3,000 coffee-houses in London. Pope, Byron, Cowper and other celebrities were frequenters of coffee-houses, which they immortalized in verse. Coffee was introduced in France in 1668 by a Turkish ambassador. Since then it came to America, which is now the greatest coffee-consuming country in the world. The Southerners use coffee most extensively and always very strong.

Tea as used in China is really a hygienic necessity owing to the dense population and lack of sewerage. The Chinese do not drink water until it has been boiled and poured over tea. Tea is a stimulant and is extensively used as a drink.

Abyssinian Superstition.

The Abyssinian has a singular superstition about eating in the open. To him a fit of indigestion from overfeeding would mean these illnesses. He would feel assured that some one had seen him in the act of appeasing his appetite. In walking along a highway in Abyssinia a traveler came across what appeared to be a large bundle of washing near the road. He investigated the matter, and thus describes the result in the Century:

On approaching it, a movement going on within was plainly discernible. Covered up in their shemas, or cloths, were three men eating their midday meal. So much in fear of the evil eye are the people, that they carry amulets containing prayers, and rolls of parchment several yards long, and pictures illustrative of the triumphs of the good spirit over that ocular absurdity are kept in their houses for protection.

If an Abyssinian sells you anything, and is well inclined, he will caution you to keep it indoors or covered up, for if an evil eye should fall upon your purchase it may spoil or disappear, which latter contingency is much the more probable in Abyssinia.

I had some experience of the kind of evil eye that caused goods and chattels to disappear. It gleamed for an instant in the head of an Ethiopian whom I caught walking off with some dollars from a pile in our paymaster's tent. The corner of the evil eye smiled when detected, but the smile faded away under the influence of the paymaster's boot.

THERE is a tax on grave-stones in England, and the man who wishes to inclose a grave by means of a fence or wall is compelled to pay dearly for the privilege.

A REFORMER is often a man whose neighbors wish he would begin on himself.

A LONG face is not a passport to heaven.

MURDEROUS TURK.

HORRORS SUFFERED AT HIS HANDS BY CHRISTIANS.

Unparalleled Indignities Offered the Armenians by Cruel and Ferocious Kurds and Circassians—Land Where There's No Justice and No Law.

Cling to Their Faith.

The recent horrible massacre of the Christians by the Turks in Armenia, Asia Minor, draws attention to that highly picturesque but unfortunate and most unhapy region of the earth. Armenia claims the honor of being the cradle of the human race. According to tradition, the Garden of Eden was within her bounds, and after Noah left the ark on Mount Ararat he made his home in the midst of her territory. Armenia is as full of famous cities of the dead as Greece or Italy, but the fame belongs to a remoter and less familiar past. There is Bayazed, paved with fragments of sculpture, fashioned when Moses was a boy in the house of the Pharaohs; Ani, the city of colossal ruins, in which the treasures of the King of Kings were preserved; Takhti-Soliman, the reputed birthplace of Zoroaster, where burned the holy fire descended from heaven, and visited forages by the Magi in quest of light for their torches, which kindled all the fires that blazed within the great empire of Persia. Petrifying lakes occupy the sites of other populous cities which flourished when this earth was young, and new cities flourish on the beds of exhausted lakes.

MGR. KRIMIAN.

Mgr. Krimian, the head of the Armenian Church, bears the title of Catholikos. He resides at Etchmiadzin, a monastery near Erivan, said to be the oldest monastic institution in the world. He was previously Archbishop of Jerusalem, and has been Patriarch of Constantinople, but was banished from the Turkish capital and deprived of his rights as an Ottoman subject on account of his patriotic views. He was chosen Catholikos in 1892.

MOUNT ARARAT, ARMENIA.

The Oldest People.

According to their own annals, the Armenians are the oldest people in the world and the earliest Christian nation. They trace their origin back to Haig, the grandson of Noah, who, 2,000 years before the Christian era, established a dynasty of sovereigns that continued to rule until Vahe, the sixtieth in succession, fell in battle against Alexander the Great. In their earlier history they were a conquering nation and their empire once stretched from the Caspian Sea, on the east, to Cicilia, on the Mediterranean, on the west, and from the borders of Pontus, on the north, to the confines of Assyria, on the south. Then the population was 35,000,000 souls.

Though the Armenians are brave and seem to have all the elements of a military people, they have been held under subjection most of the time for 3,000 years. After being made at different times, away back in the dim past, part of the Assyrian, Medean and Persian empires, Armenia fell under the Greek kings of Syria, about 200 B. C. Since then the land has been conquered or overrun in turn by Romans, Parthians, Saracens, Mongols, Russians, and, last and worst, Turks, who first established their supremacy nearly five hundred years ago.

PEASANTS OF SASSOUN.

[These are types of the people who were massacred.]

The country is now parceled out among the three nations—Turkey, Russia and Persia.

Through all their vicissitudes the Armenians have preserved their faith intact. They profess to have been converted just after the ascension of the Savior by St. Thaddeus, the apostle.

The Dead Fed to Dogs.

Since the Turk has asserted his sway over part of Armenia, atrocities almost beyond belief have been common. The sacking of a church, the desecration of an altar and the most fiendish treatment of women are every day affairs, and only attract the attention of the civilized world when, as now, great numbers of people are murdered. It is a matter of daily occurrence, says an American who has traveled in Armenia, to have funeral processions mobbed, the mourners dispersed, the dead taken out of the coffin and thrown to the dogs in the streets. Wedding festivities are stopped by means of revolvers, and the bride is dishonored. The young Armenian wife and the blushing maiden are entirely at the mercy of the unbridled Moslems; while horses, cattle, crops, merchandise, furniture, and even houses are coolly appropriated by the cruel, ferocious Kurds and Circassians, with the tacit sanction of corrupt Turkish officials. Armenian Christians are not permitted to carry arms, while the Circassians and Kurds are armed and are encouraged to hunt them. The Christian Armenians generally live in the valleys and cultivate the soil, while the Kurds and Circassians are nomadic people and live high up on the mountains where they tend their flocks. Whenever they desire they swoop down upon the valleys, gathering in the fruits of the peaceful Armenians' labors and carrying away flocks and herds.

There is no justice and no law for the Armenian. An Armenian is not allowed to testify against a Turk and the latter hardly ever thinks of carrying out any obligation he may owe the Armenian. The tax collectors travel in bands and swoop down upon the villages like harpies, collecting all that is possible to get without regard to rate or value. If the farmer has no money, off he goes to prison until he pays, and the prisons are now full to overflowing with unfortunates such as these.

And the shame of these awful outrages lies at the door of England which fails to carry out her obligations to protect Christians in Turkey.

ASKS FOR MORE SHIPS.

Secretary Herbert Is of the Opinion that the Navy Should Be Increased.

The most important recommendation made by Secretary Herbert in his annual report is that Congress authorize the construction of three great battle ships of about 10,000 tons displacement each, to cost, exclusive of armament, not exceeding $4,000,000 each, and twelve torpedo boats of from 100 to 300 tons each, at the discretion of the Secretary, to cost not exceeding an average of $170,000.

Since his last report five splendid ships have been added to the naval list, three of which are capable of speed in excess of twenty-one knots, while two of them are the fleetest cruisers in the world. The five vessels are the Marblehead, 18.44 knots; Columbia, 22.80; Olympia, 21.69; Montgomery, 19.056; and Minneapolis, 23.076. One important change of naval policy is noted in connection with the advertisements for three new torpedo boats soon to be issued. The Secretary says that no speed premiums will be allowed on these boats; that the premium system undoubtedly had its advantages when adopted, but the department is now convinced that the time has come when, with the experience gained, it may with profit be abandoned.

The report shows the number of torpedo boats now on hand in foreign countries is 1,283, and the number building 182. Great Britain has 175 on hand and 64 building, while France is even better off with 214 on hand and 41 building. Of seventeen countries enumerated not one has less than 22 of these boats, while the United States, with more coasts and ports than any nation, has but six, counting those yet to be built.

After calling attention to the urgent need of legislation for the relief of the personnel of the navy, the Secretary recommends that the enlisted force be increased by 2,000 men. In conclusion the Secretary submits estimates for the next year aggregating $27,885,914, exceeding the current appropriation by $5,495,193, caused mainly by the necessity of paying for vessels now under contract. It is stated that after this year the appropriations on this score will rapidly diminish, falling from $13,259,393 next year to $750,000 in the following year.

MAILS OF TWO NATIONS.

England's Postal Service Compared with That of the United States.

The report of the Postmaster General furnishes an opportunity to make an interesting comparison between the postal service of the United States and that of Great Britain, and the curious features of each, which will correct some popular misapprehensions. The following table furnishes a summary of the services of both countries:

	Great Britain.	United States.

Great Britain has three-fifths as many people as the United States, but they are confined to an area of 121,000 square miles. We have three and one-half times as many postoffices, but they are scattered over an area of 3,501,409 square miles, which accounts for the difference in the cost of the postal service. The British Government makes a profit of more than $13,000,000 out of her mails every year, while we lose an average of $5,500,000. The deficit during the last year in the United States was larger than ever before and $2,000,000 more than the estimate of the Postmaster General, which was due to the decrease in receipts caused by the financial depression and the falling off in trade. The deficit in 1890 was $5,048,619, and in 1893 $5,177,171. It will be noticed, too, that there are many more employes in the British service than in that of the United States in proportion to the amount of business transacted, although they are paid much less. This is accounted for also by the fact that the British postal system includes the telegraph, savings banks, and other extra features. The average salary of the British postal employe is not more than one-half of that paid for the same service in the United States. The 101,096 employes in the United States postal service are divided as follows: Postmasters, 69,805; clerks, 12,674; carriers, 11,736; railway mail agents, 6,881. There is no record of the number of women employed in our service. The British use the money order more than the people of the United States, but it will be seen from the figures in the table above that the two countries write about the same number of letters annually.

Representatives of the Senator Stanford estate have foreclosed a mortgage on property which belonged to the estate of Dr. J. B. F. Stillman, an old-time friend of Senator Stanford.

The dress of the 4-year-old daughter of David McCord, living at Odon, near Washington, Ind., caught fire from a grate and she was burned to death.

BONDS ARE AWARDED.

Secretary Carlisle Allots Entire Issue to the United States Trust Co.

SECRETARY CARLISLE has acted in the matter of the allotment of the $50,000,000 5 per cent. bonds, bids for which were opened at the Treasury Department. He accepted the proposal submitted by the syndicate represented by John A. Stewart, of the United States Trust Company of New York, and others to take the entire issue at 117.077. It is the expectation of the treasury officials that the deposit of gold for the payment of the bonds will be made promptly, and, as the understanding is that none of the gold is to be taken from the treasury, an early restoration of the gold reserve to above the $100,000,000 mark will be the result. The bonds, including premium, will realize the government about $58,500,000.

The gold balance, which is now in round numbers, $57,500,000, will, if the expectations of the officials regarding the deposits of the gold bonds are borne out, be increased to about $116,000,000. Previously, however, there had been $4,550,000 in gold drawn from the subtreasury at New York, presumably to be used in the payment of the bonds. Assistant Secretary Curtis heard inofficially over the long-distance telephone from New York that $8,000,000 in gold had been deposited in the subtreasury there for bond payments. The bonds are deliverable as soon as the gold is deposited, and as the bureau of engraving and printing has been busy at work preparing for the issue they will, it is expected, soon be ready for distribution.

The denominations of bonds which the syndicate will take are as follows—Coupons: $50, $25,000; $100, $25,000; $1,000, $34,950,000. Registered: $10,000, $15,000,000.

The condition on which the bonds are accepted is shown by the original proposal of the syndicate, which is in the following terms, minus the names of the companies composing the trust and the denominations wanted:

"We hereby propose, under the terms of your circular of Nov. 13, 1894, to purchase United States 5 per cent. ten-year bonds described in said circular of the face value of $50,000,000, and we agree to pay therefor at the rate of 117.077 and accrued interest per $100. This bid is for the whole $50,000,000, but not for any lesser amount. We further agree, upon due notice of the acceptance of this subscription, to deposit the amount thereof in gold coin or gold certificates with United States Assistant Treasurers at either Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis, New Orleans, San Francisco, in accordance with the terms of said circular.

"We desire (registered or coupon) bonds in denominations as stated below, and we wish them to be delivered to us as follows: $40,000,000 at New York, $3,000,000 at Boston, $3,000,000 at Philadelphia, $2,000,000 at Chicago, and $2,000,000 at San Francisco, or other United States treasuries, as may be approved by the Treasury Department."

The total sum that the Government will receive for the issue will aggregate about $58,500,000, and as the understanding is that the syndicate will not take gold out of the treasury to pay for the bonds, a healthy increase in the gold reserve will be the result. From the statements contained in the bid made by the syndicate, treasury officials believe that between $30,000,000 and $40,000,000 of the gold will be paid in at the sub-treasury at New York, and the remainder at the sub-treasuries in Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, and San Francisco.

THE SALVATIONISTS' FARM.

Where Men from London Slums Are Reclaimed and Taught.

When in 1890 Gen. Booth of the Salvation Army published his book, "Darkest England," he asked for contributions that a farm might be established near London where men reclaimed from the slums might have a chance to reform and learn some useful trade. The sum of $42,000 was raised and a farm called Hadleigh, of 1,000 acres, purchased. Buildings and dormitories were put up and the work successfully started. The men working on the farm are paid by the week from 15 cents to $2.50 and out of this sum they must purchase clothes, food, lodging and a chance to work is given them. Each man must also save a certain part of his earnings, which is given him when he leaves the farm. The average number of men is 260 and there are besides 100 permanent officials, who are members of the army.

The most extensive industry at Hadleigh is the raising and picking of fine fruit. Fruit picking within reach of London is generally given over to the denizens of the slums, who are conveyed to the scenes of action in train loads, and usually convert the rural scene into more or less of a slum during their labors. At the colony great care is exercised in the choice of pickers; the moral experiment, which forms a large half of the scheme, will not allow of indiscriminate association. For the same reason the colony is a complete in itself as the governor can make it, in order to prevent the necessity for much communication with the village. Even a tobacco license has been obtained, for though thoroughgoing Salvationists do not approve of tobacco, they find that some concession to human weakness is the highest wisdom. Permission to go beyond the colony has to be asked, but as the task is several miles in length this is not so great a hardship as one might fancy. Games too are provided for the men, foot-ball, cricket, quoits, racing, jumping, tug-of-war, are all encouraged.

A visitor to the farm writing of the various industries there, says: A rabbit warren with 1,200 rabbits reared for the market and a thriving poultry farm interested me much. We drove round fields of waving corn, wheat, barley, oats. The rich alluvial ground grows excellent crops. We visited the sawmills, the wheelwright's shop, blacksmith's shop, the brickmaking industry. This last is somewhat important, employing forty men. Excellent brick clay is found on the land, and this is wisely utilized. Nearly all the bricks used in the colony have been made at the kiln, and a large and growing market is found for the bricks both in the immediate neighborhood and in London. The colony has been enterprising enough to build a railway connecting the wharf and brickwork at an expense of $10,000. This was done by the advice of a noted railroad contractor, who agreed to build it without any profit to himself.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, postoffice as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.....DECEMBER 6, 1894.

JOHN K. COWEN was elected to congress from Maryland at the late election as an anti-Gorman democrat. He is a son of Dr. G. W. Cowen so long a resident of Garrett.

WE PUBLISH this week as usual, the president's annual message to congress. As it is an important state paper, coming at an important period in our history, it should be peserved and carefully studied.

GERRYMANDER, the apportioning of states or districts in such a way as to secure party advantage, is unjustly attributed to Elbridge Gerry, as the plan was put in operation in Massachusetts, at the time he was its governor. He however opposed it, but somehow his name got fastened to it. The word is not pronounced "jerrymander" but "gerrymander" the "g" having its close sound.

SOMEONE ought to put a shingle nail on top of Bro. Willis' head to keep the top from bulging off. Since he was elected to the legislature he has filled a pretty large space in his paper, with laudatory notices of himself, taken from republican papers. Don't put them all in at once. By inserting one every other week the pleasure will last longer, and people will not so soon forget that there is a statesman in their midst.

NEWLY fledged members of the legislature are inflating their machines. One wants to have a law made creating a new office, "humane officer," he calls it. That's right. Give us more officers. If there is one thing the republican party wants more than another, it is offices enough to 'round. At the late election in DeKalb county, 306 of her citizens were running for office on either a district, county or township ticket, and it wasn't a very good day for office seekers either.

MR. SAWYEL is the officer most directly benefited by the supreme court decision that the fee and salary law is unconstitutional. Under the new law he got just $2,200, while under the old law which is now in force again, he would have received the salary of $800 and fees amounting to about $2,000 more. He is now, without doubt, entitled to get his full pay under the old law, which for the two years would be nearly $1,500 more. The sheriff will probably get some more, in the shape of fees earned but not yet collected. So far, we believe, he has not yet collected enough to get his salary under the new law. The auditor had only got a few days started in his term, which was also now under the new salary law. So he is just in time and will have to go on under the old law. The clerk in this county is still acting under the old law, and will for two years more, no matter what decision the supreme court makes. The same is true of recorder in this county. However, it is possible that the legislature may make a new law this winter.

The Proposed Gerrymander.

We have already shown that there could be no re-apportionment of the state for legislative purposes till 1897. Let us make, this plain. The present state constitution was adopted in 1851. It provided that there should be an enumeration of the voters of the state once in six years, so that the number of voters could be used to assist in determining how many representatives could be sent from a given county, or from a group of counties if they had few voters. It also provided, that the next two legislatures, those of 1853 and 1855 should be chosen under the old apportionment in force at the time the constitution was adopted. So the first legislature to make a new apportionment, would be the legislature of 1855. And besides, it was after that body had been elected, in fact while it was in session, that the first enumeration of voters was taken. This first enumeration was taken in the winter and spring of 1855. On this new number of voters the next legislature, that of 1857, made the first apportionment of legislative districts under the new, or present constitutions. Now from this date, it is easy to trace the other apportionments, for the constitutions says a new enumeration of voters must be taken every six years, and that the next legislature that meets must make a new set of legislative districts for the state. So we see the enumeration of the voters was taken in 1855, and should have been taken again the next time in 1861. But owing to the confusion caused by the war, it was not taken till four years later, in 1865. The next ones were at regular intervals of six years, viz: in 1871, 1877, 1883, 1889, and in each case the next legislature, or that which met two years later, made the legislative apportionment. These were the legislatures of '67, '73, '79 1885 and 1891. From this it will be seen that the next enumeration of voters will be in 1895, (next year), and the next apportionment, two years later or in 1897. Again the constitution says an apportionment must be made by the next legislature after an enumeration of the voters. The enumeration was not made last year, 1893, but, four years earlier, in 1889. It will be made again in 1895, next year. As to the change in congressional districts, we presume that may be done. There will be some disagreement over it, however, as there is now a republican member in every district, and each will dislike to have his district made hopelessly democratic, as that would have to be done in three or four districts in order to make all the others surely republican. All in all, the coming legislature will have some hard nuts to crack.

The J. L. Davis Sale.

The sale of the J. L. Davis real estate Saturday closed out the entire transaction as we understand it. The main building where the store is, brought $3,000 and was bid in by Perry Randall, of Ft. Wayne, and we believe Mr. Davis buys it of him. The room next south, was bid off by James Draggoo for $1,730, he intending to use it as a building in which to start a bank, as contemplated by him, and Mr. Sawyel and Mr. Ober. But for some reason Mr. Draggoo at once allowed Mr. Davis to take it, at $1820. Mr. Davis then sold the entire interest that of himself and his wife to Edward Baker for about $3,000. It should be stated that all the property was sold subject to the one third rights of Mrs. Davis. Mr. J. W. Baxter got the house and lot near the Catholic church. Four vacant lots in Ralston's addition were sold, Fred Kring getting one, Frank Hoff one; E. D. Hartman, two. Mr. Hartman also got Mr. Davis' stock in the Auburn Mining Campany. Randall also got the new brick building on west Eight street adjoining the main building, the price being $700. The main building will cost $3700 including Mrs. Davis' interest.

The Farmers Bank

Several weeks ago the Farmers Bank of this place was incorporated under the state banking laws and under the supervision of the State Bank Examiner. The list of stockholders is also increased. Among the new ones are the following leading business men: Charles Eckhart, president of the Eckhart Carriage Co; G. A. Bishop, of Bishop & Lackey; C. C. Shaffer, of Shaffer & Son; F. Zimmerman, Supt. of Zimmerman Mfg. Co.; M Boland, of Brown, Culbertson & Boland, and others. The directors are, J. C. Henry, Albert Robbins, C. C. Shaffer, F. T. Zimmerman and B. C. Robbins. The management will remain as heretofore. This bank has done quite a successful business for the last twelve years, and having passed through the recent panic without embarrassment, we have no doubt it will be equally successful in the future under the control of the above named gentlemen, who are among our best known and most successful business men and manufacturers.

Commissioners' Court.

About the first thing done on Monday, was the retiring of the outgoing member Mr. Lockwood, who gave place to Mr. Hague. Then the board was reorganized, Mr. Henderson being made the president. The retiring member, Mr. Lockwook has made a fair member, and especially lately has taken a good deal of pains to inform himself on all subjects that come up. He has made but few mistakes, and retires with the respect of both the other members and the public generally. Mr. Hague, the new member, took hold of work at once, as having been auditor some years ago, he is familiar with some of the duties of his new position. Mr. Hoffelder has one year yet to serve and Mr. Henderson has two years, going out of office at the December term, 1896.

Musical Convention.

Prof. S. W. Straub, of Chicago, will hold a musical covention at Butler Chapel Center, beginning Monday evening, Dec. 10, and closing Friday evening of the same week with a concert. Tuition for membership for entire week is $1 and for concert alone, 25 cents; children ten cents. Prof. Straub is well known as one of the very best teachers of vocal music in the country and he has already a large class in that vicinity. He will probably visit Auburn before long, for the same purpose.

G. A. R. Election.

At the election of officers Monday evening the Post here chose John Otto for commander; Isaac Ditmars, senior vice commander, and J. R. Thomas, junior vice. J. N. Wilson was elected chaplain, Robert Simpson officer of the day; Joseph Cullers officer of the guard; G. W. Gordon, quartermaster, and Ed. Mason, adjutant. The campfire on Monday next, is found in our announcements.

The many friends of S. B. Mottinger will be interested to learn that he has moved from Baraga, Mich., to New Berne, North Carolina. He does not say so, but we suppose he found employment there in some milling interest, as there is a great deal of lumber cut in certain localities in the southern states.

WANTED:—An intelligent man, good penman (member of the "S. O. V.," or school teacher preferred) to superintend the work of a corps of agents canvassing for a specialty in DeKalb Co., Ind.; also to take charge of the delivering and collecting; steady employment; good pay to right party. Address, J. W. C. & Co., 334 Dearborn St, Chicago, Ill.

The financial acumen of the young ladies of the Presbyterian church is well illustrated by the plan they have struck to get wood enough to warm their room in the Davis block during the Christmas Bazar. They propose to take a light wagon and go about town, calling on those who are likely to be friendly to their cause, for a donation of a few sticks of wood. In this way they will soon get a load. They display a business ability that should make them popular with some of our young men who can already almost support themselves.

Sheriff Stroh has five prisoners on his hands at present. One is Haman Emery, who is accused of stealing the wool down near Newville. Mr. Ralston had caught him up in Branch county, Mich. Charles Robertson, of Butler, is up for stealing a wagon. On Monday three more were brought over from Waterloo, Ed Derthick, Albert Ruple and James Reinhart, who are accused of breaking into Waters' saloon and stealing enough whisky to get drunk on. Mr. Blum is still in the sheriff's office and will stay for a time till the new deputy, Mr, Platter, gets the hang of business. Court begins a week from Monday, Dec. 17.

Misfortunes are said, not to come singly. Week before last, we noted the death of Luther Hoffman's youngest child; last week, with sadness, we announced the death of the mother, his wife. This week, we add, the death of the second child It was laid to rest on Sunday, the stricken father, just risen from a bed of sickness following it to its last resting place. There is but one child left, of the lately happy little family—the eldest girl, who went with her grandmother back to Indianapolis, after her mother's death. Such a series of bereavements as have fallen to him are happily unusual. Our people all speak of it with sadness and sympathy.

Does Your Horse Like to be Curried?

If you want to see your horse stand still while being curried, and purr like a kitten, use one of these Spring Curry Combs advertised on another page. This comb is made of four loops of a clock spring. The yielding loops of the spring make the comb soft as the touch of a gentle hand, and yet they allow the teeth to get down into the hollows and folds of the skin, so that the horse is cleaned quickly and thoroughly. And for the horse the operation is changed from one of barbarous torture to one of supreme delight. This comb is sold for only 25 cents, and is to be found in almost every retail store in the land. It is made by the Spring Curry Comb Co. of South Bend, Ind. You will see their name stamped on the handle.

Closing the postoffice on public days, is a very suitable way to give the employes a rest, but it is hard on the public. Every such day, we see people from the country call in vain for their mail and then go home without it. Some way should be devised to keep the offices open so as to accommodate the public who live at a distance. It makes but little difference to people in town.

The DeKalb folks are still at the front, and seem likely to remain there. A late copy of the "Mail" published at Philipsburg in Montana, shows the re-election of Josiah Shull an old Auburn boy, to the office of county clerk, while his brother-in-law, W. T. Allison, was elected "public administrator," which we suppose is something like our county commissioner. They also took a vote on moving the state capital from Helena to Anaconda, the vote of the county being in favor of the latter. Still, the vote of the entire state, lets the capital remain at Helena.

This speaks very loudly the praises of this concern, and while other manufacturers were closed, they were running overtime. The Boot and Shoe Reporting Co.'s statistics show this firm to be doing the largest volume of business of any manufacturer selling to the retail trade from Boston, which is the heart of country. This means, in these days of competition, that up to date styles, courteous treatment, and prices lower than others care to offer, make success.

A NATION'S AFFAIRS

Reviewed in Detail by the President.

REFORM IN CURRENCY

One of the Many Recommendations Offered.

Governmental Questions Treated at Great Length—New Treaty Needed with Mexico—Germany's Embargo Against Our Pork—The Blue Fields Incident and the Eastern War—Review of the Great Railroad Strike—Treasury Deficit, Bond Issue, Etc.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 3.—Following is President's Cleveland's message which was read to both houses of Congress today:

To the Congress of the United States:

The assemblage within the nation's legislative halls of those charged with the duty of making laws for the benefit of a generous and free people, impressively suggests the exacting obligation and inexorable responsibility involved in their task. At the threshold of such labor now to be undertaken by the congress of the United States and in the discharge of an executive duty enjoined by the constitution, I submit this communication containing a brief statement of the condition of our national affairs and recommending such legislation as seems to me necessary and expedient.

Our Foreign Relations.

The history of our recent dealings with other nations and our peaceful relations with them at this time, additionally demonstrate the advantage of constantly adhering to a firm but just foreign policy, free from envious or ambitious national schemes and characterized by entire honesty and sincerity.

During the past year, pursuant to a law of congress, commissioners were appointed to the Antwerp industrial exposition. Though the participation of American exhibitors fell far short of completely illustrating our national ingenuity and industrial achievements, yet it was quite creditable in view of the brief time allowed for preparation.

I have endeavored to impress upon the Belgian government the needlessness and positive harmfulness of its restrictions upon the importation of certain of our food products, and have strongly urged that the rigid supervision and inspection under our laws are amply sufficient to prevent the exportation from this country of diseased cattle and unwholesome meat.

The termination of the civil war in Brazil has been followed by the general prevalence of peace and order. It appearing at an early stage of the insurrection that its course would call for unusual watchfulness on the part of this government, our naval force in the harbor of Rio de Janeiro was strengthened. This precaution, I am satisfied, tended to restrict the issue to a simple trial of strength between the Brazilian government and the insurgents and to avert complications which at times seemed imminent. Our firm attitude of neutrality was maintained to the end. The insurgents received no encouragement of eventual asylum from our commanders and such opposition as they encountered was for the protection of our commerce and was fully justified by public law.

A serious tension in relations having arisen at the close of the war between Brazil and Portugal, by reason of the escape of the insurgent admiral, Da Gama, and his followers the friendly offices of our representatives to those countries were exerted for the protection of the subjects of either within the territory of the other.

Although the government of Brazil was duly notified that the commercial arrangement existing between the United States and that country based on the third section of the tariff act of 1890, was abrogated on Aug. 28, 1894, by the taking effect of the tariff law now in force, that government subsequently notified us of its intention to terminate such arrangement on the 1st day of January, 1895, in the exercise of the right reserved in the agreement between the two countries. I invite attention to the correspondence between the secretary of state and the Brazilian minister on this subject.

The commission organized under the convention which we had entered into with Chili for the settlement of outstanding claims of each government against the other, adjourned at the end of the period stipulated for its continuance, leaving undetermined a number of American cases which had been duly presented. These claims are not barred, and negotiations are in progress for their submission to a tribunal.

The 17th of March last the new treaty with China, in further regulation, was signed at Washington. On Aug. 13 it received the sanction of the senate. Ratification on the part of China and formal exchange are awaited to give effect to this mutually beneficial convention.

China and Japan.

A gratifying recognition of the uniform impartiality of this country towards all foreign states was manifested by the coincident requests of the Chinese and Japanese governments that the agents of the United States, should within proper limits, afford protection to the subjects of each during the suspension of diplomatic relations due to a state of war. This delicate office was accepted, and a misapprehension which gave rise to the belief that in affording this kindly unofficial protection our agents would exercise the same authority which the withdrawn agents of the belligerents had exercised, was promptly corrected. Although the war between China and Japan endangers no policy of the United States, it deserves our gravest consideration, by reason of its disturbance of our growing commercial interests in the two countries and the increased dangers which may result to our citizens domiciled or sojourning in the interior of China. Acting under a stipulation in our treaty with Corea, the first concluded with a Western power, I felt constrained at the beginning of the controversy to tender our good offices to induce an amicable arrangement of the initial difficulty growing out of the Japanese demands for administrative reforms in Corea; but the unhappy precipitation of actual hostilities defeated this kindly purpose.

Deploring the destructive war between the two most powerful of the Eastern nations and anxious that our commercial interests in those countries may be preserved and that the safety of our citizens there shall not be jeopardized, I would not hesitate to heed any intimation that our friendly aid for the honorable termination of hostilities would be acceptable to both belligerents.

A convention has been finally concluded for the settlement by arbitration of the prolonged dispute with Ecuador, growing out of the proceedings against Emilio Santos, a naturalized citizen of the United States.

Our relations with the republic of France continue to be such as should exist between nations so long bound together by friendly sympathy and similarity in their form of government. The recent cruel assassination of the president of this sister republic called forth such universal expressions of sorrow and condolence from our people and government as to leave no doubt of the depth and sincerity of our attachment. The resolutions passed by the senate and house of representatives on the occasion, have been communicated to the widow of President Carnot.

Differences With Germany.

Acting on the reported discovery of Texas fever in cargoes of American cattle, the German prohibition against importations of live stock and fresh meats from this country has been revived. It is hoped that Germany will soon become convinced that the prohibition is as needless as it is harmful to mutual interests.

The German government has protested against that provision of the customs tariff act which imposes a discriminating duty of one-tenth of 1 cent a pound on sugars coming from countries paying an export bounty thereon, claiming that the exaction of such a duty is in contravention of Articles V and IX of the treaty of 1828 with Prussia. In the interests of the commerce of both countries and to avoid even the accusation of treaty violation, I recommend the repeal of so much of the statute as imposes that duty, and I invite attention to the accompanying report of the secretary of state containing a discussion of the questions raised by the German protests.

Behring Sea Award.

Early in the present year an agreement was reached with Great Britain concerning instructions to be given to the naval commanders of the two governments in Behring sea and the contiguous North Pacific ocean, their guidance in the execution of the awards of the Paris tribunal of arbitration and the enforcement of the regulations therein prescribed for the protection of animal life in the waters mentioned. An understanding has also been reached for the payment by the United States of $425,000 in full satisfaction of all claims which may be made by Great Britain for damages growing out of the controversy as to fur seals in Behring sea, the seizure of British vessels engaged in taking seals in these waters. The award and findings of the Paris tribunal to a great extent determined the facts and principles upon which these claims should be adjusted, and they have been submitted to both governments to a common friend for his decision as to the amount in each case where he shall deem himself competent to act upon the data furnished him by the two governments, and to fix the amount in other cases upon such data as he may deem adequate. Pending the ascertainment of the amount payable in the first class of cases, the payment of the $425,000 has been delayed at the request of the British minister, who has informed us that his government desires to avoid the payment of interest upon the awards, which it may be obliged to make if its consent to the payment of the awards be longer withheld. I hope that the claimant governments will shortly signify their acceptance of the method of payment proposed, which will put the awards at interest from the date of the exchange of the ratifications of the agreement of February last.

Relations With Russia.

The recent death of the czar of Russia called forth appropriate expressions of sorrow and sympathy on the part of our government with his bereaved family and the Russian people.

As a mark of respect and friendship, our minister at St. Petersburg was directed to represent our government at the funeral ceremonies.

The seal fishery interests of Russia in Behring sea are second only to our own. A modus vivendi has therefore been concluded with the imperial government restrictive of poaching on the Russian rookeries and of sealing in waters which were not comprehended in the protected area defined in the Paris award.

Occasion has been found to urge upon the Russian government equality of treatment for our great life insurance companies whose operations have been extended throughout Europe. Admitting as we do foreign corporations to transact business in the United States, we naturally expect no less tolerance for our own in the ample fields of competition abroad.

But few cases of interference with naturalized citizens returning to Russia have been reported during the past year. One Kisenetski was arrested last summer in a Polish province on a reported charge of unpermitted renunciation of Russian allegiance, but it transpired that the proceedings originated in alleged malfeasance committed by Kisenetski while an imperial official a number of years ago. Efforts for his release, which promised to be successful, were in progress when his death was reported.

Gen Ezeta's Extradition.

The government of Salvador, having been overthrown by an abrupt popular outbreak, certain of its military and civil officers, while hotly pursued by insurgent adherents, sought refuge on board the United States warship Bennington, then lying in a Salvadorean port. Although the practice of asylum is not favored by this government, yet in view of the imminent peril which threatened the fugitives, and solely from consideration of humanity, they were afforded shelter by our naval commander, and, when afterwards demanded under our treaty of extradition with Salvador for trial on charges of murder, arson and robbery, I directed that such as had not voluntarily left the ship be conveyed to one of our nearest ports, where a hearing could be had before a judicial officer in compliance with the terms of the treaty. On their arrival at San Francisco such a proceeding was promptly instituted before the United States district judge, who held that the acts constituting the alleged offenses were political, and discharged all the accused except one, Cienfuegos, who was held for an attempt to murder. Thereupon I was constrained to direct his release for the reason that an attempt to murder was not one of the crimes charged against him, and upon which his surrender to the Salvadorean authorities had been demanded.

Vexatious Differences With Spain.

Unreasonable and unjust fines imposed by Spain on the vessels and commerce of the United States have demanded from time to time during the last twenty years earnest remonstrance on the part of our government. In the immediate past, exorbitant penalties have been imposed upon our vessels and goods by customs authorities of Cuba and Porto Rico for clerical errors of the most trivial character in the manifests or bills of lading. In some cases fines amounting to thousands of dollars have been levied upon cargoes of the carrying vessels when the goods in question were entitled to free entry. Fines have been exacted even when the error had been detected and the Spanish authorities notified before the arrival of the goods in port. This conduct is in strange contrast with the considerate and liberal treatment extended the Spanish vessels and cargoes in our ports in like cases. No satisfactory settlement of these vexatious questions has yet been reached.

The Mora case, referred to in my last annual message, remains unsettled. From the diplomatic correspondence on this subject which has been laid before the senate, it will be seen that this government has offered to conclude a convention with Spain for disposal by arbitration of outstanding claims between the two countries, except the Mora claim, which, having been long ago adjudged, now only awaits payment as stipulated, and, of course, it could not be included in the proposed convention. It was hoped that this offer would remove parliamentary obstacles encountered by the Spanish government in providing payment of the Mora indemnity. I regret to say that no definite reply to this offer has yet been made and all efforts to secure payment of this settled claim have been unavailing.

Protection of American Citizens.

In my last annual message I adverted to the claim on the part of Turkey of the right to expel, as persons undesirable and dangerous, Armenians naturalized in the United States and returning to Turkish jurisdiction. Numerous questions in this relation have arisen. While this government acquiesces in the asserted right of expulsion it will not consent that Armenians may be imprisoned or otherwise punished for no other reason than having acquired the imperial consent American citizenship. Three of the assailants of Miss Melton, an American teacher in Mosul, have been convicted by the Ottoman courts, and I am advised that an appeal against the acquittal of the remaining five has been taken by the Turkish prosecuting officer.

A convention has been concluded with Venezuela for the arbitration of a long disputed claim growing out of the seizure of certain vessels, the property of citizens of the United States. Although signed, the treaty of extradition with Venezuela is not yet in force, owing to the insistence of that government that, when surrendered, its citizens shall in no case be liable to capital punishment.

The rules for the prevention of collisions at sea, which were framed by the maritime conference held in this city in 1889, having been currently incorporated in the statutes of the United States and other nations, have been announced to take effect March 1, 1895, and invitations have been extended to all maritime nations to adhere to them. Favorable responses have thus far been received from Austria, France, Portugal, Spain and Sweden.

Failure of Samoan Policy.

In my last annual message I referred briefly to the unsatisfactory state of affairs in Samoa under the operation of the Berlin treaty as signally illustrating the policy of entangling alliances with foreign powers, and on May 9, 1894, in response to a resolution of the senate, I sent a special message and documents to that body on the same subject, which emphasized my previously expressed opinions. Later occurrences, the correspondence in regard to which will be laid before congress further demonstrate that the government which was intended to benefit the three powers and forced upon the Samoans against their inveterate hostility can be maintained only by the continued presence of foreign military force at no small sacrifice of life and treasure. The suppression of the Mataafa insurrection by the powers and the subsequent banishment of the leader and eleven other chiefs, as recited in my last message, did not bring lasting peace to the islands. Formidable uprisings continued, and finally a rebellion broke in the capital island, Upolu, headed in Aana, the western district, by the younger Tamasese, and in Atua, the eastern district, by other leaders. The insurgents ravaged the country and fought the government troops up to the very doors of Apia. The king again appealed to the powers for help, and the combined British and German naval force reduced the Atua to an apparent subjection, not, however, without considerable loss to the natives. A few days later, Tamasese and his adherents, fearing the ships and the marines professed submission.

Reports received from our agents at Apia do not justify the belief that the peace thus brought about will be of long duration. It is their conviction that the natives are hostile to the present government; that such of them as profess allegiance do so from fear of the powers, and that it would speedily go to pieces if the warships were withdrawn. In reporting to his government on the unsatisfactory situation since the suppression of the late revolt by foreign armed forces, the German consul at Apia stated: "That peace will be lasting is hardly to be presumed. The lesson given by firing on Atua was not sufficiently sharp and incisive to have a lasting impression on the forgetful Samoan temperament. In fact, conditions are existing which show that peace will not last, and it is seriously intended that Mala, the king, and his chiefs, are convinced that the departure of the warships will be a signal for a renewal of the war. The circumstance that the representatives of the villages of all the districts which were supposed to have participated have already withdrawn to Atua to hold meetings, and that both Atua and Aana have forbidden inhabitants of those districts which fought on the side of the government to return to their villages, and have already partly burned down the latter, indicates that a real conciliation of the parties is still far off." And in a note of the 10th ult., enclosing a copy of that report for the information of this government, the German ambassador said: "The contents of the report awakened in the imperial government the supposition that under existing circumstances the peace concluded with the rebels will afford no assurance of the lasting restoration of tranquility in the islands."

The present government has utterly failed to correct, if it has not aggravated, the very evils it was intended to prevent. It has not stimulated our commerce with the islands. Our participation in its establishment against the wishes of the native chiefs was a violation of the conservative teachings and warnings of the wise and patriotic men who laid the foundations of our free institutions, and I invite an expression of the judgment of congress on the propriety of steps being taken by this government looking to the withdrawal from its engagements with the other powers on some reasonable terms not prejudicial to any of our existing rights.

Statement of the Finances.

The secretary of the treasury reports that the receipts of the government from all sources of revenue during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1894, amounted to $372,802,498.29, and its expenditures to $442,606,758.87, leaving a deficit of $69,803,260.58, which was a deficit of $16,952,074.66 in the ordinary expenditures of the government, as compared with the fiscal year 1893. There was collected from customs $131,818,530.62, and from internal revenue $147,168,440.70. The balance of the receipts, $93,815,527.97, was derived from the sales of lands and other sources.

The value of our total dutiable imports amounted to $275,199,089, being $146,657,625 less than during the preceding year and the lowest point in any year since 1879. The exports were $3,370,783,536, being $64,748,675 less than during the preceding year. The receipts from customs were $73,536,486.11 less, and from internal revenue $13,836,539.77 less than in 1893. The total tax collected from distilled spirits was $85,230,250.25; on manufactured tobacco $8,617,898.02, and on fermented liquors $31,414,788.26.

Our exports of merchandise, domestic and foreign, amounted during the year to $892,140,572, being an increase over the preceding year of $44,495,378.

The total amount of gold exported during the fiscal year was $76,898,061, as against $108,680,484 during the fiscal year 1893. The amount imported was $72,449,119, as against $21,174,581 during the previous year. The imports of silver were $13,286,552, and the exports were $59,241,861.

The total bounty paid upon the production of sugar in the United States for the fiscal year was $12,100,208.89, being an increase of $2,725,078.01 over the payments made during the preceding year. The amount paid from the time July 1, 1894, to Aug. 28, 1894, the time when further payments ceased by operation of law, was $966,185.84. The total expenses incurred in the payment of the bounty upon sugar during the fiscal year was $150,140.85.

An Estimated Deficit of $20,000,000.

It is estimated that upon the basis of our present revenue laws, the receipts of the government during the current fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, will be $297,000,000, and its expenditures $444,427,748.40, resulting in a deficit of $20,000,000.

On the first day of November, 1894, the total stock of money of all kinds in the country was $2,240,773,895, as against $2,084,231,604 on the first day of November, 1893, and the money of all kinds in circulation, or not included in the treasury holdings, was $1,672,093,422, or $24.27 per capita upon an estimated population of 68,887,000.

At the same date there was held in the treasury gold bullion amounting to $44,615,177.55, and silver bullion, which was purchased at a cost of $127,779,988. The purchase of silver bullion under the act of July 14, 1890, ceased on the 1st day of November, 1893, and up to that time there had been purchased during the fiscal year 11,917,038.78 fine ounces at a cost of $8,715,521.32, an average cost of $.7313 per fine ounce. The total amount of silver purchased from time to time from the law took effect until the repeal of its purchasing clause, on the date last mentioned, was 168,674,082.53 fine ounces, which cost $155,931,002.25, the average price per fine ounce being $.9244. The total amount of standard silver dollars coined on the mints of the United States since the passing of the act of Feb. 28, 1878, is $421,776,408, of which $378,166,703 were coined under the provisions of that act, $38,531,143 under the provisions of the act of July 14, 1890, and $5,078,562 under the act providing for the coinage of trade dollar bullion. The total coinage of all metals at our mints during the last fiscal year consisted of 63,485,220 pieces valued at $106,216,750.06, of which there were $99,471,915.50 in gold coined; $758 in standard silver dollars; $6,024,140.30 in subsidiary silver coin, and $716,919.26 in minor coin.

Production of Precious Metals.

During the calendar year 1893 the production of precious metals in the United States was estimated at 1,730,323 fine ounces of gold, of the commercial and coinage value of $35,955,000, and 60,000,000 fine ounces of silver of the bullion or market value of $46,500,000, and of the coinage value of $77,576,000. It is estimated that on the 1st day of July, 1894 the stock of metallic money in the United States, consisting of coin and bullion, amounted to $1,254,000,000, of which $627,023,201 was gold, and $624,847,757 was silver.

Fifty national banks were organized during the year ended Oct. 31, 1894, with a capital of $5,285,000, and seventy-nine, with a capital of $16,475,000, went into voluntary liquidation. Twenty-one banks, with a capital of $2,770,000 were placed in the hands of receivers. The total number of national banks in existence on the 31st day of October last was 3,756, being forty less than on the 31st day of October, 1893. The capital stock paid in was $672,671,365, being $6,078,491 less than at the same time in the previous year, and the surplus fund and undivided profits, less expenses, taxes paid, amounted to $334,121,052.10, which was $16,089,780 less than on Oct. 31, 1893. The circulation was decreased $1,741,563. The obligations of the banks to each other were increased $117,268,334, and the individual deposits were $277,294,489 less than at the corresponding date in the previous year. Loans and discounts were $161,206,923 more than at the close of the previous year, and checks and other cash items were $20,849,963 more. The total resources of the banks at the date mentioned amounted to $3,473,922,055 as against $3,109,563,284.36 in 1893.

United States Military Forces.

From the report of the secretary of war, it appears that the strength of the army on Sept. 30, 1894, was 2,135 officers and 25,765 enlisted men. Although this is apparently a very slight decrease compared with the previous year, the actual effective force has been increased to the equivalent of nearly two regiments through the reorganization of the system of recruiting and the consequent release to regimental duty of the large force of men hitherto serving at the recruiting depots. The abolition of these depots, it is predicted, will furthermore effect an annual reduction approximating $250,000 in the direct expenditures, besides promoting generally the health, morals and discipline of the troops.

The execution of the policy of concentrating the army at important centers of population and transportation, foreshadowed in the last annual report of the secretary, has resulted in the abandonment of fifteen of the smaller posts, which was effected under a plan which assembles organizations of the same regiments hitherto widely separated. This renders our small forces more readily effective for any service which they may be called upon to perform, increases the extent of the territory under protection without diminishing the security heretofore afforded to any locality, improves the discipline, training and esprit de corps of the army, besides considerably decreasing the cost of its maintenance.

Though the forces of the Department of the East have been somewhat increased, more than three-fourths of the army is still stationed west of the Mississippi. This carefully matured policy, which secures the best and greatest service in the interests of the general welfare from the small force comprising our regular army, should not be thoughtlessly embarrassed by the creation of new and unnecessary posts through arts of congress to gratify the ambitious or interests of localities.

While the maximum legal strength of the army is 25,000 men, the effective strength through various causes is but little over 20,000 men. The purpose of congress does not, therefore, seem to be fully attained by the existing condition. While no considerable increase in the army is, in my judgment, demanded by recent events, the policy of sea coast fortification, in the prosecution of which we have been steadily engaged for some years, has so far developed as to suggest that the effective strength of the army be now made at least equal to the legal strength. Measures taken by the department during the year as indicated have already considerably augmented the effective force, and the secretary of war presents a plan which I recommend to the consideration of congress, to attain the desired end. Economies effected in the department in other lines of its work will offset to a great extent the expenditure involved in the proposition submitted. Among other things it contemplates the adoption of the three battalion formation of regiments, which for several years has been indorsed by the secretary of war and the generals commanding the army. Compact in itself, it provides a skeleton organization ready to be filled out in the event of war, which is peculiarly adapted to our strength and requirements; and the fact that every other nation, with a single exception, has adopted this formation to meet the conditions of modern warfare, should insure its secure for the recommendation an early consideration.

The A. R. U. Strike.

It is hardly necessary to recall the fact that in obedience to the commands of the constitution and laws and for the purpose of protecting the property of the United States, aiding the process of federal courts and removing lawless obstructions to the performance by the government of its legitimate functions, it became necessary to employ in various localities during the year to employ a considerable portion of the regular troops. The duty was discharged promptly, courageously and with marked discretion by the officers and men, and the most gratifying proof was thus afforded that the army deserves that complete confidence in its efficiency and discipline which the country has at all times manifested. The year has been free from disturbances by Indians and the chances of further depredations on their part are constantly becoming more remote and improbable.

The total expenditures for the war department for the year ended June 30, 1894, amounted to $50,000,094.04. Of this sum $42,000,664.99 was for salaries and contingent expenses; $23,065,156.16 for the support of the military establishment; $5,001,682.23 for miscellaneous objects, and $25,371,555.96 for public works. The estimates for 1895 are $19,494,097.40. Our river and harbor improvements and $3,947,863.56 for fortifications and other works of defense. The appropriations for the current year aggregate $32,429,112.78, and the estimates submitted to this session of congress for the next fiscal year call for appropriations amounting to $52,318,629.55.

The skill and industry of our ordnance officers and inventors have, it is believed, overcome the misfortune of our being so long delayed and delayed the armament of our coasts, and this great national undertaking, upon which we have entered, may now proceed as rapidly as congress shall determine. With a supply of finished guns of large caliber already on hand, to which additions should now rapidly follow, the wisdom of providing carriages and emplacements for their mount can not be too strongly urged.

The total enrollment of the militia of the several states is 112,531 officers and enlisted men, an increase of 5,848 over the number reported at the close of the previous year.

The reports by regular army officers show a marked increase in interest and efficiency among the state organizations, and I strongly recommend a continuance of the policy of affording very practical encouragement possible to this important auxiliary of our military establishment.

The condition of the Apache Indians, held as prisoners by the government for eight years at a cost of $500,000 has been changed during the year from captivity to one which gives them an opportunity to demonstrate their capacity for self-support and, at least, partial civilization. Legislation enacted at the last session of congress gave the War department authority to transfer the survivors, numbering 346, from Mount Vernon barracks, in Alabama, to any suitable reservation. The department selected as their new home the military lands near Fort Sill, Indian Territory, where, under military surveillance, the former prisoners have been established in agriculture under conditions favorable to their advancement.

In recognition of the long and distinguished military service and faithful discharge of delicate and responsible civil duties by Maj.-Gen. John M. Schofield, now the general commanding the army, it is suggested to congress that the temporary revival of the grade of lieutenant-general in his behalf, would be a fitting and gracious act and would permit his retirement, now near at hand, with rank befitting his merits.

Progress Made by Supreme Court.

The report of the attorney general notes the gratifying progress made by the Supreme court in overcoming the arrears of its business and in reaching a condition in which it will be able to dispose of cases as they arise without any unreasonable delay. This result is, of course, very largely due to the operation of the working of the plan inaugurating Circuit Courts of Appeals. In respect to these tribunals, the suggestion is made in quarters entitled to the highest consideration, that an additional circuit judge for each circuit would greatly expedite the work of courts and the confidence reposed in their adjudications, and that such an addition would not create a greater force of judges than the increasing business of such courts requires. I commend the suggestion to the careful consideration of congress.

Other important topics are adverted to in the report accompanied by recommendations, many of which have been treated at large in previous messages, and at this time, therefore, need only be named. I refer to the abolition of the fee system as a measure of compensation to federal officers; the enlargement of the powers of United States commissioners, at least in the territories; the allowance of writs of error in criminal cases on behalf of the United States; and the establishment of degrees in the crime of murder.

Much work has fallen to the attorney-general of much importance in the condition of the administration of justice in the Indian territory. The permanent solution of what is called the Indian problem is probably not to be expected at any time, but meanwhile the ameliorations of present conditions as the existing system will admit of, ought not to be neglected. I am satisfied there should be a federal court established for the territory with sufficient judges, and that this court should sit within the territory and have the jurisdiction as to territorial affairs as is now vested in the federal courts sitting in Arkansas and Texas.

Reorganization of the Union Pacific.

Another subject of pressing moment referred to by the attorney-general is the reorganization of the Union Pacific Railway company on a basis equitable as regards all private interests, and as favorable to the government as existing conditions will permit. The operation of a railroad by a court through a receiver is an anomalous state of things which should be terminated on all grounds, public and private, at the earliest possible moment. Besides, not to enact the needed enabling legislation at the present session postpones the whole matter until the assemblage of a new congress, and inevitably increases all the complications of the situation and could not but be regarded as a signal failure to solve a problem which has practically been thrust upon the present congress ever since its organization.

Eight years ago, in my annual message, I urged upon the congress as strongly as I could the location and construction of two prisons for the confinement of the Navy department's prisoners. A similar recommendation has been made from time to time since, and a few years ago a law was passed providing for the selection of sites for these such institutions. No appropriation has yet been made to carry that act into effect and the old and discreditable condition still exists. It is not my purpose at this time to repeat the consideration which makes so urgent a case in favor of the ownership and management by the government of the penal institutions in which federal prisoners are confined. I simply desire to again urge my former recommendations on the subject and to particularly call the attention of the congress to that part of the report of the secretary of war in which he stated that the military prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kas., can be turned over to the government as a prison for federal convicts without the least difficulty, and with an actual saving of money from every point of view.

Pending a more complete reform, I hope that by the adoption of the suggestion of the secretary of war it may easily be taken in the direction of the proper care of its convicts by the government of the United States.

The Postoffice Department.

The report of the postmaster-general presents a comprehensive statement of the operations of the Postoffice department for the last fiscal year. The receipts of the department during the year amounted to $75,080,479.04, and the expenditures to $76,684,324,414.15. The transactions of the postal service indicate with barometric certainty the fluctuations in the business of the country. Inasmuch, therefore, as unfavorable conditions continued to exist throughout the last year to an unforeseen extent, it is surprising that the deficiency of revenue to meet the expenditures of the Postoffice department, which was estimated in advance at about $8,000,000, should be exceeded by nearly $1,250,000. The ascertained revenues of the last year, which were the basis of calculation for the current year, being less than estimated, the deficiency for the current year will be correspondingly greater, though the postmaster-general states that the latest indications are so favorable that he confidently predicts an increase of at least 8 per cent. in the revenues of the current year over those of the last year. The expenditures increase steadily and necessarily with the growth and needs of the country, so that the deficiency is greater or less in any year depending upon the volume of receipts. The postmaster-general states that this deficiency is unnecessary, and might be obviated at once if the law regulating rates upon mail matter of the second-class was modified. The rate received for the transmission of this second-class matter is 1 cent a pound, while the cost of such transmission to the government is eight times that amount. In the general terms of the law this rate covers newspapers and periodicals. The extensions of the meaning of these terms from time to time have admitted to the privileges intended for legitimate newspapers and periodicals a surprising range of publications and created abuses the cost of which amount in the aggregate to the total deficiency of the Postoffice department. Pretended newspapers are started by business houses for the mere purpose of advertising goods, complying with the law in form only and discontinuing the publications as soon as the period of advertising is over. "Sample copies" of pretended newspapers are issued in great numbers for a like purpose only. The result is a great loss of revenue to the government, besides its humiliating use as an agency to aid in carrying out the scheme of a business house to advertise its goods by means of a trick upon both both its rival houses and the regular and legitimate newspapers. Paper covered literature, consisting mainly of trashy novels, to the extent of many thousands of tons is sent through the mails at 1 cent a pound, while the publishers of standard works are required to pay eight times that amount in sending their publications. Another abuse consists in the free carriage through the mails of hundreds of tons of seed and grain uselessly distributed through the department of agriculture. The postmaster-general predicts that if the law be so amended as to eradicate those abuses not only will the Postoffice department show no deficiency, but he believes that in the near future all legitimate newspapers and periodical magazines might be promptly transmitted through the mails to their subscribers free of cost. I invite your prompt consideration of this subject, and fully indorse the views of the postmaster-general.

The total number of postoffices in the United States on the 30th day of June, 1894, was 69,305, an increase of 1,403 over the preceding year. Of these 3,425 were presidential, an increase in that class of sixty-eight over the preceding year. Fifty-nine additional cities and towns are provided with free delivery. Ninety-three other cities and towns entitled to the service under the law have not been accorded it on account of insufficient funds. The expense of free delivery for the current fiscal year will be more than $12,300,000, and under existing legislation, this item of expenditure is subject to constant increase. The estimated cost of rural free delivery generally is so very large that it ought not to be considered in the present condition of affairs.

During the year 330 additional domestic money order offices were established. The total number of these offices at the close of the year was 10,204. There were 14,304,041 money orders issued during the year, being an increase of 904,806 over the preceding year of 904,806. The value of these orders amounted to $138,798,570.40, an increase of $11,217,145.84. There were also issued during the year postal notes amounting to $12,640,054.65.

During the year 128 international money order offices were added to those already established, making a total of 2,625 such offices in operation June 30, 1894. The number of international money orders issued during the year was 617,823, a decrease of 138,176, and their value was $13,792,465.81, a decrease in amount of $2,549,382.55. The number of orders paid was 301,150, an increase over the preceding year of 60,262, and their value was $6,342,024.64, an increase of $1,285,118.08. From the foregoing statements it appears that the total issue of money orders and postal notes for the year amounted to $165,235,129.85.

The number of letters and packets mailed during the year for special delivery was 15,436,903. The special delivery stamps used on these letters and packages amounted to $343,681. The messengers' fees paid for their delivery amounted to $261,209.70, leaving a balance in favor of the government of $82,471.30.

The report shows most gratifying results in the way of economies worked out without affecting the efficiency of the postal service. These consist in the abrogation of steamship subsidy contracts, rebidding of mail transporting contracts, and limiting of mail transportation in the cost and amount of supplies used in the service, amounting in all to $16,619,047.42. This report also contains a valuable contribution to the history of the Universal Postal union, an arrangement which approximates practically to the establishment of one postal system for the entire civilized world. Special attention is directed to this subject at this time, in view of the fact that the next congress of the union will meet in Washington in 1897, and it is hoped that timely action will be taken in the direction of perfecting preparations for that event.

In the postmaster-general's suggestion made in a previous report that the department organization be increased by the extent of creating a direct district supervision of all postal affairs, I fully concur.

There are now connected with the postoffice establishment 32,061 employees who are in the classified service. This includes many who have been classified upon the suggestion of the postmaster-general. He states that another year's experience at the head of the department serves only to strengthen the conviction as to the excellent working of the Civil Service law in this branch of the public service.

Gratifying Progress Made by Navy.

Attention is called to the report of the secretary of the navy, which shows very satisfactory progress in the construction of ships for our new navy. All the vessels now building, including the three torpedo boats authorized at the last session of congress, and excepting the first class battleship Iowa, will probably be completed during the coming fiscal year.

The estimates for the increase of the navy for the year ending June 30, 1896, are large, but they include practically the entire sum necessary to complete and equip all the new ships not now in commission or in course of construction. If these appropriations for the navy service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, should fall below the estimates for the coming year by at least $12,000,000, The secretary presents with much emphasis the effect which the authorization of three additional battleships and ten or twelve torpedo boats. While the unarmored vessels heretofore authorized, including those now bearing completion, will constitute a fleet which it is believed will be effective for ordinary cruising purposes in time of peace, we have now completed and in process of construction but four first-class battleships and but few torpedo boats. If we are to have a navy for warlike operations, offensive and defensive, we certainly ought to provide forthwith the number of battleships and torpedo boats.

The manufacture of armor requires expensive plants and the aggregation of many skilled workmen. All the armor necessary to complete the vessels now building can be delivered before the 1st of June next. If no new contracts are given out, contractors must disband their workmen and their plants must lie idle. Battleships authorized at this time would not be well under way until late in the coming fiscal year, and at least three years and a half would be required for the contract would be required for their completion. The secretary states that no more than 15 per cent. of the cost of such ships need be included in the appropriations for the coming year.

Recommends More Warships.

I recommend that provision be made for the construction of additional battleships and torpedo boats. The secretary recommends the manufacture not only of a reserve supply of ordnance and ordnance material for our ships of war, but also a supply for the auxiliary fleet. Guns and their appurtenances should be provided and kept on hand for both these purposes. We have not to-day a single gun that could be put on the ships Paris or New York of the International Navigation company, or any other ship of our reserve navy. The manufacture of guns at the Washington navy yard is proceeding satisfactorily, and none of our new ships will be required to wait for their guns or ordnance equipment.

An important order has been issued by the secretary of the navy coordinating the duties of the several corps employed in the construction of ships. This order, it is believed, will secure to a greater extent than has heretofore been possible the harmonious action of these several bureaus, and make the attainment of the best results more certain.

During the past fiscal year there has been an unusual and pressing demand in many quarters of the world for the presence of vessels to guard American interests. In January last, during the Brazilian insurrection, a large fleet was concentrated in the harbor of Rio de Janeiro. The vigorous action of Rear Admiral Benham in protecting the personal and commercial rights of our citizens during the disturbed conditions afforded results which will, it is believed have a far-reaching and wholesome influence whenever in like circumstances it may become necessary for our naval commanders to interfere on behalf of our people in foreign ports.

The war now in progress between China and Japan has rendered it necessary or expedient to dispatch eight vessels to those waters. Both the secretary of war and the secretary of the treasury recommend the transfer of the work of the coast survey proper to the Navy department. I heartily concur in this recommendation.

Excluding Alaska and a very small area besides, the work of the hydrographic survey of our coast has been completed. The hydrographic work, which must be done over and over again by reason of the shifting and varying depths of water consequent upon the action of streams and tides, has heretofore been under the direction of army officers, in subordination to the superintendent of the coast survey. There seems to be no good reason why the Navy department should not have entire charge hereafter of such work, and especially as the hydrographic office of the Navy department is now, and has been for many years, engaged in making efficient maps entirely similar to those prepared by the coast survey.

I feel it my imperative duty to call attention to the recommendations of the secretary in regard to the personnel of the line of the navy. The stagnation of promotion in this, the vital branch of the service, is so great as to seriously impair its efficiency. I consider it of the utmost importance that the young and middle-aged officers should before the eve of retirement, be permitted to reach a grade entitling them to active and important duty.

The system adopted a few years ago regulating the employment of labor at the navy yards is rigidly upheld and has fully demonstrated its usefulness and expediency. It is within the domain of civil service reform, inasmuch as workmen are employed through a Board of Labor selected at each navy yard, and are given place in rotation according to merit, politics and in the order of their application, preference, however, being given to army and navy veterans and those having former navy yard experience. Amendments suggested by experience have been made to the rules regulating the employment. Through its operation, the work at our navy yards has been vastly improved in efficiency and the opportunity to work has been honestly and fairly awarded to willing and competent applicants. It is hoped that the provisions of the law may be strictly adhered to, there will soon be as a natural consequence such an equalization of party benefit as will remove all temptation to relax or abandon it.

Public Land Undisposed Of.

The report of the secretary of the interior exhibits the situation of the numerous and interesting branches of the public service connected with his department. I commend this report and the valuable recommendations of the secretary to the careful attention of congress. The public land disposed of during the year amounted to 10,406,100.77 acres, including 28,876.05 of Indian lands. It is estimated that the public domain still remaining amounts to a little more than 600,000,000 acres, excluding, however, about 360,000,000 acres in Alaska, as well as military reservations and railroad and other selections of lands yet unadjudicated. The total cash receipts from sale of lands amounted to $2,074,235.79, including $1,981.03 received from sale of Indian lands. Thirty-five thousand patents were issued for agricultural lands and 100 patents were issued to Indians on allotments of their holdings in severalty, and also to those of inalienable by the Indian allotees for a period of twenty-five years after patent. There were certified and patented on account of railroad and wagon road grants during the year 865,656.45 acres of land, and at the close of the year 29,000,000 acres were embraced in the lists of selections made by railroad and wagon road companies and awaited settlement. The selections of swamp lands and that taken as indemnity therefor since the passage of the act providing for the same in 1849 amount to nearly or quite 80,500,000 acres, of which 59,000,000 have been patented to states. About 138,000 acres were patented during the last year. Nearly 820,000 acres of school and education grants were approved during the year, and at its close 1,250,963.81 acres remained unadjusted.

It appears that the appropriation for the current year on account of special service for the protection of the public lands and the timber thereon, is much less than those for previous years and inadequate for an efficient performance of the work. A larger sum of money than has been appropriated during a number of years past on this account has been returned to the government as a saving in the aggregate of those employed in the particular service mentioned, and I hope it will not be crippled by insufficient appropriation. I fully endorse the recommendation of the secretary that adequate protection be provided for our forest reserves and that a comprehensive forestry system be inaugurated.

Such keepers and superintendents as are necessary to protect the forests already reserved should be provided. I am of the opinion that there should be an abandonment of the policy sanctioned by present laws under which the government, for a very small consideration, is rapidly losing title to immense tracts of land covered with timber which should be properly reserved as permanent sources of timber supply Arbitration in New Zealand.

One result of the recent democratic victory in New Zealand will be the passage of a compulsory arbitration law within six months, and it will not be long before this example is followed by the Australian colonies. This law, which, in the opinion of Mr. Reeves, will work satisfactorily and do a vast amount of good, will provide that any association of registered workingmen may file a complaint against an employer and compel him to show cause in court why wages should be reduced or why they should not be raised. Employers, on the other hand, will get the right to compel the association of employes to appear in court in case of a strike. When either party brings the other into court both parties are to be bound by the court's decision. The act will apply only to registered laborers and incorporated associations and protect employers against actions brought by laborers not connected with any organization.—Washington Post.

passed in 1888, I appointed in July last Hon. John D. Kernan of the state of New York, and Hon. Nicholas E. Worthington of the state of Illinois to form, with Hon. Carroll D. Wright, commissioner of labor, who was designated by said statute a commissioner for the purpose of making careful inquiry into the causes of the controversies between certain railroads and their employees which has resulted in an extensive and destructive strike, accompanied by much violence and dangerous disturbance with considerable loss of life and great destruction of property. The report of the commissioners has been submitted to me, and will be transmitted to the congress with the evidence taken upon their investigation. Their work has been well done, and their standing and intelligence give assurance that the report and suggestions they make are worthy of careful consideration.

Favors Free Coal and Iron.

The tariff act passed at the last session of the congress needs important amendments if it is to be executed effectively and with certainty. In addition to such necessary amendments as will not change rates of duty, I am still very decidedly in favor of putting coal and iron upon the free list. So far as the sugar schedule is concerned, I would be glad, under existing aggravations, to see every particle of differential duty in favor of refined sugar stricken out of our tariff law. If, with all the favor now accorded the sugar refining interest in our tariff laws, it still languishes to the extent of closing refineries and discharging thousands of workmen, it would seem to present a hopeless case for reasonable legislative aid.

Whatever else is done or omitted, I earnestly repeat here the recommendation I have made in another portion of this communication that the additional duty of one-tenth of a cent a pound laid upon sugar imported from countries paying a bounty on its export, be abrogated. It seems to me that exceedingly important considerations point to the propriety of this amendment.

About the New Tariff.

With the advent of a new tariff policy, not only calculated to relieve the consumers of our land in the cost of their daily life, but invite a better development of American thrift and create for us closer and more profitable commercial relations with the rest of the world, it follows as a logical and imperative necessity that we should at once remove the chief, if not the only obstacle, which has so long prevented our participation in the foreign carrying trade of the sea. A tariff built upon the theory that it is well to check imports and that a home market should bound the industry and effort of American producers, was fitly supplemented by a refusal to allow American registry to vessels built abroad though owned and navigated by our people, thus exhibiting a willingness to abandon all contest for the advantages of American trans-oceanic carriage. Our new tariff policy, built upon the theory that it is well to encourage such importations as our people need, and that our products and manufactures should find markets in every part of the globe, is consistently supplemented by the greatest possible liberty to our citizens in the ownership and navigation of ships in which our products and manufactures may be transported. The millions now paid to foreigners for carrying American passengers and products across the sea should be turned into American hands. Ship building, which has been protected to strangulation, should be revived by the prospect of profitable employment for ships when built, and the American sailor should be resurrected and again take his place, a sturdy and industrious citizen in time of peace and a patriotic and safe defender of American interests in the day of conflict. The ancient provision of our law denying American registry to ships built abroad and owned by Americans appears in the light of present conditions not only to be a failure for good at every point, but to be nearer a relic of barbarism than anything that exists under the permission of a statute of the United States. I earnestly recommend its prompt repeal.

The Issue of Bonds.

During the last month the gold reserve in the treasury for the purpose of redeeming the notes of the government circulating now in the hands of the people became so reduced, and its further depletion in the near future seemed so certain, that it became necessary to replenish the reserve and thus maintain popular faith in the ability and determination of the government to meet, as agreed, its pecuniary obligations. It would have been well if, in this emergency, authority had existed to issue bonds of the government bearing a low rate of interest and maturing within a short period. But the congress having failed to confer such authority, resort was necessarily had to the resumption act of 1875, and, pursuant to its provisions, bonds were issued drawing interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum and maturing ten years after their issue, that being the shortest time authorized by the act. I am glad to say, however, that on the sale of these bonds, the premium received operated to reduce the rate of interest to be paid by the government to less than 3 per cent.

Nothing could be worse or further removed from sensible finance than the relations existing between the currency the government has issued, the gold held for its redemption, and the means which must be resorted to for the purpose of replenishing such redemption fund when impaired. Even if the claims upon this fund were confined to the obligations originally intended, and if the redemption of these obligations meant their cancellation, the fund would be very small. But these obligations, when received and redeemed in gold, are not cancelled, but are reissued and may do duty many times by way of drawing gold from the treasury. Thus we have an endless chain in operation constantly depleting the treasury's gold and never near a final rest. As if this was not bad enough, we have, by a statutory declaration that it is the policy of the government to maintain parity between gold and silver, added the force and momentum of this exhausting process and added largely to the currency obligations claiming this peculiar gold redemption. Our small gold reserve is thus subject to drain from every side. The demands that increase our danger also increase the necessity of protecting this reserve against depletion, and it is most unsatisfactory to know that the protection afforded is only a temporary palliation. It is perfectly and palpably plain that the only way under present conditions by which this reserve, when dangerously depleted, can be replenished, is through the issue and sale of bonds of the government for gold; and congress has not only thus far declined to authorize the issue of bonds best suited to such a purpose, but there seems a disposition in some quarters to deny both the necessity and power for the issue of bonds at all.

I cannot for a moment believe that any of our citizens are deliberately willing that their government should default in its pecuniary obligations, or that its financial operations should be reduced to a silver basis. At any rate, I should not feel that my duty was done if I omitted any effort I could make to avert such a calamity. As long, therefore, as no provision is made for the final redemption or the putting aside of the currency obligation now used to repeatedly and constantly draw from the government its gold and as long as no better authority for bond issues is allowed than at present exists, such authority will be utilized whenever, and as often as it becomes necessary to maintain a sufficient gold reserve, and in abundant time to save the credit of our country and make good the financial declarations of our government.

The Proposed Plan.

It is proposed to repeal all laws providing for the deposit of United States bonds as security for circulation; to permit national banks to issue circulating notes not exceeding in amount 75 per cent. of their paid-up and unimpaired capital, provided they deposit with the government as a guarantee fund in United States legal tender notes, including treasury notes of 1890, a sum equal in amount to 30 per cent. of the notes they desire to issue, this deposit to be maintained at all times but whenever any bank retires any part of its circulation a proportional part of its guarantee fund shall be returned to it; to permit the secretary of the treasury to prepare and keep on hand ready for issue in case an increase in circulation is desired, blank national bank notes for each bank having circulation and to repeal the provisions of the present law imposing limitations and restrictions upon banks desiring to reduce or increase their circulation—thus permitting such increase or reduction within the limit of 75 per cent. of capital to be quickly made as emergencies arise. In addition to the guarantee fund required, it is proposed to provide a safety fund for the immediate redemption of the circulating notes of failed banks by imposing a small annual tax, say one-half of 1 per cent. upon the average circulation of each bank until the fund amounts to 5 per cent. of the total circulation outstanding. When a bank fails, its guarantee fund is to be paid into this safety fund, and its notes are to be redeemed in the first instance from such safety fund thus augmented—any impairment of such fund caused thereby to be made good from the immediately available cash assets of said bank, and if these should be insufficient, such impairment to be made good by pro rata assessment among the other banks, their contributions constituting a first lien upon the assets of the failed bank in favor of the contributing banks. As a further security, it is contemplated that the existing provision fixing the individual liability of stockholders is to be retained, and the bank's indebtedness on account of its circulating notes is to be made a first lien on all its assets. For the purpose of meeting the expense of printing notes, official supervision, cancellation and other like charges, there shall be paid a tax, say one-half of 1 per cent. per annum on the average amount of notes in circulation. It is further provided that there shall be no national bank notes issued of less denomination than $10. That each national bank, except in case of a failed bank, shall redeem or retire its notes in the first instance at its own office or at agencies to be designated by it, and that no fixed reserve need be maintained on account of deposits.

Exemption of State Banks.

Another very important feature of this plan is the exemption of state banks from taxation by the United States in cases where it is shown to the satisfaction of the secretary of the treasury and the comptroller of the currency by banks claiming such exemption that they have not had outstanding their circulating notes exceeding 75 per cent. of their paid-up and unimpaired capital; that their stockholders are individually liable for the redemption of their circulating notes to the full extent of their ownership of stock; that the liability of said banks upon their circulating notes constitutes under their state law a first lien upon their assets; that such banks have kept and maintained a guarantee fund in United States legal tender notes including the treasury notes of 1890 equal to 30 per cent. of their outstanding circulating notes, and that such banks have promptly redeemed their circulating notes when presented at their principal or branch office.

It is quite likely that this scheme may be usefully amended in some of its details; but I am satisfied it furnishes a basis for a very great improvement in our present banking and currency system.

I conclude this communication fully appreciating that the responsibility for all legislation affecting the people of the United States rests upon their representatives in the congress and assuring them that whether, in accordance with recommendations I have made or not, I shall be glad to co-operate in perfecting any legislation that tends to the prosperity and welfare of our country.

TREASON IS CHARGED.

LI HUNG CHANG ACCUSED OF BETRAYING CHINA.

Said to Have Favored Japan and to Have Sold Her War Secrets and Ammunition—Organized Attack on the Great Viceroy.

Plotted Against the Empire.

His majesty the Emperor of China has been memorialized by over one hundred of the highest officials in his empire for the impeachment of General Li Hung Chang. Advices from Shanghai say the important memorial has caused a profound sensation. The disgraced prime minister is charged with corruption, peculation and deception. The memorial also declares that Li Hung Chang has openly rejoiced at the successive important victories by land and sea of the country's enemies, the Japanese, and that by his deliberate action he virtually prevented the Chinese from achieving success. The prime minister is said by the memorial to have represented that China was fully equipped and well prepared for war when he was well aware of the fact that the country was illy able to contend against the forces of Japan.

It is further charged that he has been implicated with Prince Kung, the uncle of the Chinese Emperor and President of the Tsung Li Yamen and of the Admiralty, who was recently appointed to the position of dictator, and with the Taotai Wu and the commander of the forces at Port Arthur.

LI HUNG CHANG.
(China's disgraced Prime Minister.)

Gen. Li Hung Chang, who is declared to be the prime mover in the alleged conspiracy against his own country, was born in the Anu-Huei province of China on Feb. 16, 1823. In 1860 he co-operated with General (then Colonel) Gordon in suppressing the Taeping rebellion, being then Governor of the Thiang-Sin province. The other Thiang province being added to his rule, he was created Viceroy of the united countries in May, 1865. The following year he was appointed Minister Plenipotentiary, and in 1867 Viceroy of Hong-Kuang, and a grand chancellor in 1868. After the Tien-Tsin massacre in 1870, he was despoiled of his titles and otherwise punished on the charge of not assisting the general in command, but in 1872 the then Emperor restored him to favor and offered him the office of Grand Chancellor. He was the mediator for fixing the indemnity for the murder of Mr. Margary, who was killed, in 1876, while endeavoring to explore southwestern China. Then he was appointed Viceroy of the metropolitan provinces of Pe-Chih-Li, and as such has been the administrator of the Chinese empire. He has been regarded as a man of liberal views, and has permitted coal-[illegible] coast steamer traffic to be car[illegible] English companies, and it [illegible] thought that he would be favo[illegible] to the building of railways.

Curious Damage Suit of a Lawyer.

A case is about to be tried in London that is a peculiar one. It is alleged that this particular paper printed his name only in reporting cases he has lost, omitting it in cases where he has won.—San Francisco Argonaut.

IMPORTANT FOOD TESTS.

How to Produce More Economical and Healthful Articles for the Table.

The official food analyses by the United States and Canadian governments have been studied with interest. The United States Government report gives the names of eighteen well-known baking powders, some of them advertised as pure cream-of-tartar powders, which contain alum.

The report shows the Royal to be a pure cream-of-tartar baking powder, the highest in strength, evolving 160.6 cubic inches of leavening gas per single ounce of powder. There were eight other brands of cream-of-tartar powders tested, and their average strength was 111.5 cubic inches of gas per ounce of powder.

The Canadian government investigations were of a still larger number of powders. The Royal Baking Powder was here also shown the purest and highest in strength, containing forty-five per cent. more leavening gas per ounce than the average of all the other cream-of-tartar powders.

These figures are very instructive to the practical housekeeper. They indicate that the Royal Baking Powder goes more than 33 per cent. further in use than the others, or is one-third more economical. Still more important than this, however, they prove this popular article has been brought to the highest degree of purity—for to its superlative purity this superiority in strength is due—and consequently that by its use we may be insured the purest and most wholesome food.

The powders of lower strength are found to have large amounts of impurities in the food. This fact is emphasized by the report of the Ohio State Food Commissioner, who, while finding the Royal practically pure, found no other powder to contain less than 10 per cent. of inert or foreign matter.

The statistics show that there is used in the manufacture of the Royal Baking Powder more than half of all the cream-of-tartar consumed in the United States for all purposes. The wonderful sale thus indicated for the Royal Baking Powder—greater than that of all other baking powders combined—is perhaps even a higher evidence than that already quoted of the superiority of this article, and of its indispensableness to modern cookery.

Origin of Nursery Rhymes.

"Three Blind Mice" is a music-book of 1609.

"Little Jack Horner" is older than the seventeenth century.

"Pussy Cat, Pussy Cat, Where Have You Been" dates from the reign of Queen Elizabeth.

"Boys and Girls, Come Out to Play," dates from Charles II., as does also "Lucy Locket Lost Her Pocket."

"Old Mother Hubbard," "Goosey, Goosey Gander," and "Old Mother Goose" apparently date back to the sixteenth century.

"Cinderella," "Jack, the Giant Killer," "Blue Beard," and "Tom Thumb" were given to the world in Paris in 1697. The author was Charles Perrault.

"Humpty-Dumpty" was a bold, bad baron, who lived in the days of King John, and was tumbled from power. His history was put up into a riddle, the meaning of which is an egg.

"The Babes in the Woods" was founded on an actual crime committed in Norfolk, near Wayland Wood, in the fifteenth century. An old house in the neighborhood is still pointed out upon a mantel-piece in which is carved the entire history.

Age of Newspapers.

The annual report of Dr. W. T. Harris, commissioner of education, says that 23 per cent. of the population attend school during some period of the year. The average attendance in the year, however, is only eighty-nine days for each pupil. The report says:

"It would seem to be the purpose of our system to give in the elementary schools to every child the ability to read. After he leaves school he is expected to continue his education by reading the printed page of newspaper and book. The great increase of public libraries in the United States is significant of progress toward the realization of this ideal. In 1892 we had over 4,000 public libraries with more than 1,000 volumes in each. The schools teach how to read; the libraries furnish what to read. But far surpassing the libraries in educative influence are the daily newspapers and magazines. We are governed by public opinion as ascertained and expressed by the newspapers to such a degree that our civilization is justly to be called a newspaper civilization. The library and the newspaper are our chief instrumentalities for the continuation of the school and the university. The lecture courses and scientific and literary associations are assisting largely. The work in the churches of the land is an even more potent factor in school extension."

How They Tell Time in Nepaul.

There are no public schools in Nepaul. The sons of princes and nobles—even our young king, while he is yet only a boy—are taught at home by the guru, or household priest, who is supposed to be also a pundit, or very learned man. Later, the young men of rank are sent to Patna, Benares or Calcutta, where they learn to speak English and to wear English clothes, and to tell the time of day by an English clock; for in Nepaul time is measured by means of a copper vessel, with a small hole in the bottom, set afloat on a tank or pool.

Sixty times a day this kettle fills and sinks, according to St. Nicholas, and every time it sinks a gong is struck so that the day is divided into sixty "gongs" or "bells," as sailors reckon time aboard ship. The poor Bhootiya shepherds, or the Newar women who make pottery in the fields, say that the day is begun when they can count the tiles on the roof of a house, or when they can see the hairs on the back of a man's hand by holding it up against the light.

The Shah's Farewell.

When the Shah came to England last, he visited one of the large towns in the West Riding of Yorkshire. While driving through the crowded streets of that town he noticed some gamins who had taken up a very prominent position, and were saluting him with great gusto by applying their thumbs to the extremities of their nasal organs.

On inquiring the meaning of this strange procedure, he was told by his attendant that it was looked upon as a great mark of respect in this country.

When the Shah's visit came to an end, he was accompanied to the station by the Mayor of the borough. When they arrived there the train was about to start, and the Shah immediately took his seat.

Just as the train was moving off, amid the cheers of the assembled crowd, the Shah rose, put his head out of the carriage window, gravely applied his thumb to his nose, and spread out his fingers in the most approved style at the astonished Mayor, to the gentleman's discomfiture and the great delight of those who were standing around.

Breakers Ahead!

Prudence, foresight, that might have saved many a good ship that has gone to pieces among the breakers, is a quality "conspicuous by its absence" among many classes of invalids, and among none more notably than persons troubled with inactivity of the kidneys and bladder. When these organs fall off in duty grievous trouble is to be apprehended. Bright's disease, diabetes, catarrh and stone in the bladder, are among the diseases which a disregard of early symptoms confirm and render fatal. That signally effectual diuretic, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, will—and let no one so troubled forget this—remedy the symptoms of approaching renal disease and check its further progress. Equally efficacious is the Bitters for constipation, liver complaint, malaria and rheumatic trouble and debility.

What One Woman Has Done.

A woman in a little Ohio township asserted her right to be up and doing some twenty-eight years ago, when she decided she would build a sidewalk from her house to the village, two and one-half miles away. She headed a subscription list which was presented to women only, collected and disbursed $225 in money, besides soliciting and procuring many times that amount in work. She personally superintended the construction of bridges and culverts, and assisted in the grading. The sidewalk is in good repair to-day, and for all these years has been a monument of what one small, unpretending woman can accomplish when backed by energy and perseverance.

Mines of Soap.

The wonderful natural soap mines at Owens' Lake, California, are accounted for by the following theory, which has been advanced by a well-known Western scientist: The water of the lake contains a strong solution of both borax and soda. In the water a curious species of grub breed by millions. These grubs go through their various transformations, and finally emerge as short-winged, heavy-bodied flies, very fat and oily. They live but a few days, dying and falling into the lake in such numbers as to be frequently washed ashore in layers more than a foot thick. The oily substance of the dead flies blends with the alkali of the borax and soda, and the result is a layer of pure soap, corresponding in thickness to the drift strata of the dead flies, a foot deep of the flies making a layer of soap nearly an inch thick. These strata, repeated year after year, have formed the celebrated "Soap Banks of Owens' Lake," where a large force of men have been constantly employed for a number of years.

On Hand in Both Capacities.

The prosecuting attorney in the Western Kansas village had been out with the boys the night before and taken a leading part in a free fight in which one saloon had been cleaned out and considerable damage done to the glassware and fixtures of another.

In pursuance of his regular duty as an official he appeared before the police magistrate the next morning, fully sobered and ready for business. In front of him was a stack of law books and he held in his hand a warrant for his own arrest on the charge of drunkenness and disorderly conduct.

"Your honor," he said, rising and addressing the court with emphasis and deliberation, "as village attorney I am here to prosecute this case. And as defendant," he added, jabbing a long bowie knife into the table and laying a huge navy revolver down by the side of it, "I am here, by gum, sir, to defend myself."

"Enter a nolle pros., Mr. Ferguson," said the magistrate hastily.—Chicago Tribune.

PROGRESS.

People who get the greatest degree of comfort and real enjoyment out of life, are those who make the most out of their opportunities. Quick perception and good judgment, lead such promptly to adopt and make use of those refined and improved products of modern inventive genius which best serve the needs of their physical being. Accordingly, the most intelligent and progressive people are found to employ the most refined and perfect laxative to regulate and tone up the stomach, liver, and bowels, when in need of such an agent—hence the great popularity of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. These are made from the purest, most refined and concentrated vegetable extracts, and from forty-two to forty-four are contained in each vial, which is sold at the same price as the cheaper made and more ordinary pills found in the market. In curative virtues, there is no comparison to be made between them and the ordinary pills, as any one may easily learn by sending for a free sample, (four to seven doses) of the Pellets, which will be sent on receipt of name and address on a postal card.

ONCE USED THEY ARE ALWAYS IN FAVOR.

The Pellets cure biliousness, sick and bilious headache, dizziness, costiveness, or constipation, sour stomach, loss of appetite, coated tongue, indigestion, or dyspepsia, windy belchings, "heart-burn," pain and distress after eating, and kindred derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels. Put up in glass vials, therefore always fresh and reliable. One little "Pellet" is a laxative, two are mildly cathartic. As a "dinner pill," to promote digestion, take one each day after dinner. To relieve distress from over-eating, they are unequaled. They are tiny, sugar-coated granules; any child will readily take them.

Accept no substitute that may be recommended to be "just as good." It may be better for the dealer, because of paying him a better profit, but he is not the one who needs help. Address for free sample,

CORRESPONDENCE

ST. JOE.
LAST WEEK.

Ben Hamilton had business at Auburn Thursday last.

Attorney C. J. Coats, of Butler, was in town on Saturday.

James H. Abel, wife and daughter are visiting with a daughter in Chicago.

The M. P. people are holding a series of meetings, Rev. Luneberry officiating.

E. Case, of the Case Co., had business in Sam. Tarney's Jackson township court last Thursday, as plaintiff in a debt suit.

J. M. Irvin, constable elect from Concord, was at the Hub Friday, and was made a constable for the coming four years by Clerk Moody.

The third township institute for this school year was held at Spencerville last Saturday with a good attendance. Prof Eichols and wife, nee Audry Woodcox, entertained the teachers at dinner.

Charley, son of Wash Woodcox, sustained a serious fracture of the left elbow Friday evening. Dr. Hines succeeded in replacing the broken bones. A fall or push from the sidewalk was the cause.

We see by correspondence in the St. Joe News from Spencerville, that there is a movement on foot looking to the building of some gravel roads by subscription. Why is the time not at hand for the people of St. Joe to wake up to this all important work? Some of these fine mornings we will wake up and find Spencerville building the gravel roads right by our doors, and then there will be weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth

We had supposed that our republican friends did all their voting Nov. 6, but are led to think otherwise since last Thursday. At that time at the intersection of the alleys at the rear of Frank Barney's and Wm Hart's lots, we unexpectedly came across three of our republican friends—one an ex-township officer, one an aspirant for postoffice honors in '96, the other an old and respected friend of the writer. We would not tell his name for worlds. Our postmaster friend had one of the sample ballots that were so plentiful before election, and had it up against the side of the barn (Dick's barn) and was either telling the others how to vote in '96, or was explaining to the ex-officer how he had voted Nov. 6. Perhaps explaining away some charge of changing (not scratching, as M. E. O objects to that term) his ballot and not voting straight.

We enclose a few extracts from a letter from Mrs. B. Erick at Watonga, Okla. She says, "We are all well, and our only trouble is to find something to eat. Beeks and the children never had such appetites before. Beeks has outgrown all his old clothes and don't look like himself. We have been living on venison, white duck and prarie chicken until I don't care if I never see any more. Everything went republican here. Could not expect anything else, as there are ten republicans to one democrat When it comes to politics, we are simply not in it. Oh, how the wind blows! If it was not for the wind I would have no fault to find with this country, but sometimes it is almost enough to discourage us. In a letter from home I see that you are having snow and cold weather. We are having lovely weather, except now and then a windy day. Last Thursday, Nov. 15, beat the record here for wind and sand It blew all day terrifically and with it a cloud of sand so that sometimes I could not see our gate, and it kept it up till Friday morning I thought sometimes in the night it was going to pick us up and carry us away. We slept but little, I can tell you, but yesterday (17th) and to-day are lovely. Cannot ask for anything better."

Obituary.

Josephine Lettie Henderson, daughter of Jonn and Addie Henderson was born in Concord Tp., DeKalb Co., Ind., on Nov. 17, 1872. Died, Nov. 21, 1894 Aged 22 years and 4 days.

Josie, as everybody knew her, is known to have possessed one of the brightest and far-reaching intellects of any person of her age whom we have ever known. She trusted in God and her Savior Jesus Christ at a very early age and has ever since evidenced a true christian spirit.

On July 5, 1891 she was baptised by Rev. H. Bridge, then of Ft. Wayne, and united herself with the M. E. church at Spencerville. While she at the time gave me her hand and to the church her name the most serious and prevailing thought was that she gave God her heart without the least sign of any selfish reserve. Her religion was a truly exemplary possession and in her everyday life she always impressed her loved ones and associates that, though she suffered a continual pain of body she enjoyed a most peaceful condition of soul and spirit, A constant sufferer all her life she was always weary and tired and often longed for that rest "which remaineth for the people of God" Yet, with all her terrible suffering she was willing to bear it all if perchance it might help one of those around her into a better life. Her greatest anxiety was for her loved ones and before her departure she wrote each of them an individual letter and, with remarkable precision, suited her words to each separate case; urging each to trust her God and meet her in heaven that they might be happily homed there.

She ardently denounced all vain pretense of display, telling her father "if he must put a stone at her resting place to use only a plain marker, (a green mound she thought best) and use any money over price of such marker to make some little heart glad in happy remembrance of Christ's birthday, and who scarcely knew when christmas comes."

She urgently requested her loved ones to give all her belongings to the poor who need them and tell all her loved ones to try to be more charitable and generous. Last Saturday was her 22d birthday and as it grew near her greatest desire seemed to be to spend it in glorious celebration in heaven. Leaving behind her a loving father and mother, two kind and ever helpful sisters and one cherished brother and many loved ones and friends, she goes out to yonder heaven to be a beacon light to constantly lead them onward and upward to a home where the husk of clay pains not, and where joys immortal reign.

Can we be thankful into whose doors
The angel of death has come?
And taken our treasure, our pearl of price,
Away from her earthly home?

With hungry hearts, can we sing to-day,
When so much of our hopes has gone
And the bright pure face we cannot see
Nor the sweet kind voice can hear?

Thanks we will give that a soul so rare,
Unto our home was sent,
That a life so beautiful and full
Before our sight was spent,

Closer the magnet of love will draw
Because it points toward heaven,
While sacred memories weld the lives
To whom her own was given. —J. J. F.

The funeral services were conducted by Rev. J. J. Fred her pastor, in the M. E. Church at Spencerville, Ind. on Nov. 23, 1894, Rev. J. W. Thomas kindly assisting.

"WIND 'EM UP, JOHN."

Mrs. Jarley Lectured and the Wax Works Did the Rest.

IN MADAME JARley we have the last, lingering representative of a once popular style of public amusement the wax fac simile figures of more or less noted persons and historical characters. The late lamented Artemus Ward was another. Who will soon forget his "amoosin' lecter" or his no less "amoosin' wax figgers?" All this, from Dickens to A. Ward, was vividly recalled last Saturday evening by the entertainment given at the Armory by the Y. L. M. C. of the M. E. church. The hall was packed full and when the entertainment began, all were ready to enjoy it. Miss Della Weaver officiated as the owner and manager of the show and made an excellent Mrs. Jarley. She had a long and difficult part. In fact, she had all the speaking to be done in the entire program. She deserves praise for the distinctness of her words and excellent reading, for all could hear and understand. Her father, John Weaver, was her assistant, and brought on and took off the various "wax figgers" as they came up on the program. Her "John, wind 'em up," always caught the audience, and "John" would nimbly go about and with a ratchet brace or whatever it is called, proceed to "wind 'em up," and the heretofore immovable figure would start into motion. All did their part well and there were so many we cannot remember them all, nor the characters they took. In fact, many were so disguised we could not recognize them. However, that made no difference in the fun. Mike Boland as the "organ grinder," got an enthusiastic and hilarious encore, and they came near holding him to it an hour or so had he not got tired of it. Vest Zimmerman, too, was called back, at the close of the male quartet, in which he worked out a world of fun in tenor. The others of the quartet were, Ben Zimmerman, Geo Quinse and E. T. DeLapp. Blanche Shilling was the bride Mother Goose tells about, who was brought to town in a wheelbarrow. She was "spilled out" in such a graceful way that she came near getting an encore. It was neatly done. It will be impossible to trace the "Jarley wax figgers" farther, Those who want a good description of such an entertainment should come and see it. As a cheeky young blood near us said in a loud way 2779½ times that evening it was "out 'o sight." The figures were rolled out of the dressing room and into sight on a little hardware trunk and the "wax works" displayed a good deal of "balance" by standing up without falling or moving a muscle, though now and then some funny thing thawed the wax into a broad smile. We did not hear how much cash was received but as it cost the young ladies a big lot of work, we hope they were well paid. Our artist "took" Mrs. Jarley as she said, "I have the finest show on earth."

A Correction.

AUBURN, IND., Dec. 11, 1894.

A few words to the public:

The officials of the M. E. church have been considerably annoyed for the past two or three years by the circulation of reports by some thoughtless person or persons, stating that on various occasions the church had been refused to persons for funeral purposes, unless certain and various amounts were paid for the use of the church. Heretofore the trustees have paid no attention to the matter more than individually to deny the charge, but the board have now decided in this public way to say that they have never refused the use of the church to any party, neither have they charged any party, nor attempted to charge any party for the use of the church for any funeral occasion, and they trust that further circulation of such reports will be denied by all christian people.

MOSES B. WILLIS,
Pres Board of Trustees.

AUBURN, IND., Dec. 11, 1894.

To all whom it may concern:

I wish to say that when making arrangements for the funeral of my brother that I went to Mr. McCord and asked him who I should see in regard to getting th Methodist church, and he told me that he thought Mr. Robbins was the man to see. I then went to Mr. Robbins and he said it was all right as far as he was concerned, but that I should see some of the other trustees, and that I had better see the preacher, Mr. Wooton, first to know if he had any meeting at that time. I started to see Mr. Wooton and on the way met Mr. Griswold and talked with him a little and when he found out what I was after, said we could have the Baptist church and welcome. I studied over the matter a little and as my brother usually attended that church, I said "Well, I will look no farther," and proceeded to make arrangements accordingly. I farther wish to say that I do not consider that I was refused the use of the Methodist church at all.

BUTCHERED FOR MONEY!

One of the Bloodiest and Most Fiendish Crimes of the Age.

Two of Auburn's citizens were buried Sunday, and a third lay at the point of death at Fostoria, Ohio. All were riddled with bullets. It was one of the most brutal affairs the country has ever known, and was the work of a gang of fiendish tramps, strangers to this section. The two dead men, are Henry Reesch and Arthur E. Brown, better known here as "Dick" Brown. The third one who was still alive at Fostoria, when the others were buried here, is Henry Harris has a wife and two children, the others are single. The three men it appears, thought there might be a chance to get work on a big sewer that was being constructed at Fostoria, Ohio started for that place Friday evening. They took the very unwise plan of beating the railroad, by going down to the Junction and boarding on east bound freight train on the B. & O. They had money enough to pay their fare, but preferred to take the other course. Ex-Marshal Joe Pfefferl, told the writer that Reesch, who had been in his employ a good deal, had drawn about $18 just before starting, Harris had about $12, and Brown had a smaller sum. They caught the freight that goes east at about 5 p m. and crawled into an open box car, and all went well till they got to Deshler about 8 p. m. But they did not know of the murderous set of fellows who were beating their way eastward on the same train. Four tramps, very tough characters, had been terrorizing the citizens of Garrett all that day. They had trouble in a saloon, as Dick Burniston of that place tells us, and later at one of the groceries, where they were driven out. They went to Teeters' hardware, and got some powder, and wanted dynamite, but could get none. They also broke into a house on the north side, in the absence of the owners, ate all the food they could find, played on the piano, and then danced on it, and raised cain generally. The city marshal heard of it, and made them leave town. They went on the freight train mentioned. The next morning a telegram came from Fostoria asking Mrs. Harris to come, as her husband was at the point of death and Reesch and Brown had been killed. She started at noon together with Frank Harris, of Columbia City, and attorney J. E. Rose was sent along to bring back the dead. He had a talk with Harris, but the latter was too weak, to give much information. He said that the first he saw of the men who attacked them was at Deshler, when four men came to the car as it was leaving, and got in. They told the three Auburn boys to throw up their hands, and give up their money. This was refused, and a fight ensued, and soon the assailants began shooting. The death struggle could not have lasted long, though many shots were fired, as 15 shells were afterwards found in the car. Brown and Reesch were killed at once, the former, having eight balls in him, and the latter three. Harris was shot seven times. It would seem that the murderers got out as the train slowed up for Bloomdale, though they may have jumped out before, as the train ran slow at times. At Bloomdale, Si. Beaber, of Garrett, a brakeman walked along the train with his lantern, and seeing the car door open, looked in, for though he did not know anyone was beating a ride on his train the open door made him think of it. He saw something was wrong and looking more carefully, discovered the bodies. He at once notified the engineer and other traimen. They found Harris in one end of the car, with his head across one of the bodies. He told as well as he could, what had happened. The car floor showed evidence of the deadly struggle for there was blood everywhere, and bullet marks were thick at the end of the car where Harris lay. The floor was covered with broken pieces and dust of coke, and a plain path showed where Harris had dragged himself from near the south door, the open one, to where he was found. He was taken on to Fostoria to get medical attendance. There he was taken off and cared for, and the two dead men taken in charge by an undertaker.

The bloody car was sidetracked at Tiffin. As before stated, Mr. Rose, Frank Harris and Mrs. Harris reached there Saturday afternoon. Frank and Mrs. Harris remained with her husband and Mr. Rose reached Auburn about ten that evening. The body of Reesch was taken to the home of his father, Charles Reesch, sr. and Brown was taken to his father's home. Sunday at 2 p. m. the funeral of both was held at the Baptist church. Two hearses drove up one behind the other, and the two coffins were carried into the church. The Auburn Rifles escorted the body of Reesch as he was a member. Mr. Hart of the Baptist preached the sermon and was assisted by Mr. Wooton of the M. E, church. The choir was Mrs. Garwood, Miss Vandorn, Mr. Hastings and Mr. Gibson, There was an immense attendance, for the double murder and its attending horrors had spread the news all over the country. The coffins were opened at the close of services, and the vast audience filed silently by, to gaze for the last time on the victims of this terrible tragedy. They had been carefully treated by skillful undertakers, and looked much better than might have been expected. Yet the purple bullet holes could not all be concealed. The crowd was just forty minutes filing past them, coming in at the east entrance and going out by the west, without stopping or breaking walk at the coffins. The interment of both was in the Evergreen cemetery. Brown was laid to rest near the north center of the ground and Reesch in the southeast. The brief service at the former's grave was at once followed by a similar one for the latter, at which also, were the Rifles, who fired salutes over the grave of their comrade.

We said they were riddled with bullets. The fiends must have kept shooting them after they were helpless, possibly after they were dead. E. E. Webb who helped to prepare Brown for the grave, says there were eight holes in his body, one wound being in the left groin, one in the left side a few inches above the hip, one just above the navel, one over the heart, one under the heart, one about the center of the breast, one near the right shoulder, about the collar bone and one, he thinks went in at the right ear, as the ear is burnt and powder stained. Others think this last hurt is from a bullet that came from the other side, through his head and out at his right ear. There is some difference as to the location of some of the other wounds. Mr. Rose saw but one wound at the heart, and locates the two center shots, farther to the right. But this gives the reader an idea of the murderous work.

Reesch had three shots. Two were in the head and one in the thigh.

BUT LITTLE CLUES.

The marshal at Garrett gives the best description of the supposed murderers, the tramps who terrorized Garrett and whom he forced to board the eastbound freight in order that the town might be rid of them. Not knowing their names he describes them thus:

No. 1—Five feet eleven inches in height, weighing 185 or 190 pounds, full face, pupil of left eye gone, wore an overcoat with "nigger head" collar, brown derby hat.

No. 2—Five feet eight inches in height, black overcoat, black soft hat, medium dark moustache.

No. 3—Five feet three inches in height, looks like a Polock, wore dark brown soft hat, no overcoat.

No. 4—Five feet seven inches, weighs about 185 pounds, light moustache, black soft hat, dark overcoat, light gray eyes.

It is thought the desperadoes got off the freight as it slowed up for Bloomdale, and boarded the passenger train that overtook and passed them there, for at Fostoria, three men of about that description who appeared to have got off the east-bound passenger, went into a restaurant and asked for water to wash with. The proprietor noticed that there was blood on their hands, faces and clothes, and asked them how they got hurt. They replied they had had a racket with some men in a B. & O. box car. One had a thumb freshly mashed, and one had a bad gash as if made by a razor on the side of the neck. (Henry Reesch took a razor with him, as well as a revolver, and neither was found on him, though the razor strop was found in his overcoat pocket). His brother, Charles Reesch, says a stranger came here Sunday, and called at his house and asked about the matter, but gave no name. The stranger also gave part of the particulars noted above in regard to the men who washed at Fostoria. He said one of the men was large, one of middling size and one smaller. This agrees with the description of the Garrett marshal and may assist to lead to their arrest.

It would appear that after the fight was over, they robbed the dead men, for each had a small amount. Reesch, who had most, was known to have a $10, a $5 and and $1 in paper. These he had in a large pocket book, such as bills, etc., are usually carried in. In this is still some odd papers and some old war-time scrip money that he was keeping as a relic. In a small purse he probably had some small change, but nothing is left but an old cent or two, a brass check marked "25" and a militia number.

HARRIS' ACCOUNT.

Harris was brought home Tuesday afternoon, though still weak and in a critical condition. From his brother Frank, who has heard him relate the affair many times to different interviewers in exactly the same way, we get the following, which, it will be seen, is a little different from the account already in type. The strangers got into the car with the Auburn men not far from St. Joe, by coming along the top of the car and swinging themselves over and into the door. They seemed friendly, and after a time got out again. Just after our men had got in again after getting a lunch at

SUMMARY OF A WEEK'S HAPPENINGS.

Three Tramps Arrested for the B. & O. Box-Car Murder—Storms Cause Much Damage in California—A 15-Year-Old Boy Assults a Woman 80 Years of Age—Another Train Held Up.

DON'T LIKE IT.

Gompers Places Himself in Opposition to the Establishment of Compulsory Arbitration.

President Gompers delivered his annual report to the National Federation of Labor, now in session at Denver. He complimented the organization upon being able to preserve its existence during recent adverse circumstances. Referring to the coal miners' strike he said the establishment of a minimum rate of wages was a very great victory. He defended the action of the federation in regard to the American Railway Union strike by the assertion that Mr. Debs' proposition submitted to them was a virtual acknowledgement that the strike was a failure. President Cleveland's action at that time, he severely condemned. The hope was expressed that government telegraphs and telephones will soon be established in connection with the Postal Department, and unions among government employes were recommended as an aid to the movement. The establishment of a national labor day was referred to as the only sunbeam labor had received from the last session of Congress. Mr. Gompers opposed independent political action by organized labor at present. The results of local attempts in this line were cited to show the disastrous effects. The proposition to establish compulsory arbitration was denounced and the charge was made that designing persons are advocating it as a means of destroying labor organizations.

Bad Storms.

San Francisco special: A severe storm caused much damage to the streets and sewers all over this city. In many shops there was such a flooding that goods floated about in a mixture of black mud and water. A section of the new cement sea wall in course of construction was washed away and at Oakland where the tide was higher than for years, the wharves were damaged badly. The total precipitation at Oakland during the storm was almost five inches in as many days.

Carson (Nev.) special: Snow, sleet, and wind have caused the worst storm here in years. The snow is badly drifted on the Virginia and Truckee Railroad and disabled a train. Two snow plows were derailed and all the wires are down.

May Lynch Him.

A brutal attempt was made near Bowling Green, Ky., by a 15-year-old negro boy, Sylvester Anthony, to outrage Mrs. Matilda Johns, a respectable white woman 80 years of age, who lives ten miles in the country. Failing in his purpose, he piled bed pillows on the floor, broke a kerosene lamp over them and set them on fire. Then he securely locked the house and had started to leave when Fayette Jackson, a neighbor, came to the rescue and liberated the woman and arrested the boy. Anthony was taken to jail with a rope around his neck and there is talk of lynching.

Financial Crisis.

St. Johns (N. F.) special: A financial crisis prevails here. The Commercial Bank of New Foundland, has closed its doors, and several Newfoundland commercial firms have failed, including Edwin Duder and John Steet. The Union Bank suspended payment for a few hours, for the purpose of arranging to meet the expected run. The general belief is that with care the crisis will be tided over. The immediate cause is the suspension of Prowse, Hall & Morris of London, financial agents for Edwin Duder and other firms.

Election Contest.

The Republican leaders have decided to contest the election of James H. Budd, the Democratic Governor-elect of California. The case will be carried to the Supreme Court, but it is probable that that body will decide in Budd's favor. The Republicans have an overwhelming majority in the Legislature. Whatever the result, this action promises to cause bad blood. Budd has sworn he will take his seat as Governor, and nothing but death will stop him. The contest will be the first in the history of the State to unseat a governor.

Held for the Box Car Murder.

Stewardsville (Ohio) special: Officers from Findlay came here to arrest three tramps, Louis A. Konst, Joseph McDonald and Joseph Konst, who were acting in a suspicious manner. They answered the description of the Baltimore and Ohio box-car murderers, and were taken to Findlay to await developments. One of the men was positively identified as one of the assailants of Saloon-keeper Cook in this city last August. The man was brutally beaten, and has since been insane.

The Next House.

An unofficial list of members elect to the Fifty-fourth congress has been compiled by the clerk of the house. The list is corrected up to December 5 and gives the republicans 244 members, democrats 104 and the populists 6. In the present congress there are 219 democrats, 123 republicans and 12 populist members.

Another Hold Up.

Arkansas City (Kan.) special: Two masked men held up the north-bound Rock Island train near the Red River bridge on the frontier of the Indian Territory and compelled the engineer and fireman to help break open the express car. Amount stolen is unknown and details are hard to get.

Cyclone Down South.

A cyclone destroyed the sugar house of the Southwood plantation near Baton Rouge, La., killing two persons. A number of homes at Omega, La., Selma, Hazen, and Montevallo, Ala., were uprooted or wrecked and much stock was killed.

Mary Anderson a Mother.

Mrs. Mary Anderson Navarro, the well-known actress, was delivered of a son at her residence in Lexham Gardens, Kensington, London. The child died the same day.

Bloody Work.

In a fight between a party of tramps in a Baltimore and Ohio box car, two of the number were killed and another mortally wounded. The murder was discovered when the train reached Fostoria, Ohio, and the dying tramp told the story of the shooting, which he charges against three men who boarded the train at Auburn, Ind. He says his home is at Auburn, and that he is a chimney-sweep by occupation. The names of his two dead companions he says, are Leese and Morgan. Leese wears a detective's badge and is finely dressed. He says the three men who did the shooting were driven out of Garrett by the Marshal, and that they boarded the train at Auburn. The shooting occurred between Auburn and Deshler, and was wholly unprovoked, being for the purpose of robbery. From Harris they got $16, but he does not know how much from his companions. The murderers leaped from the train at Deshler, Ohio.

A FAT ROLL.

Train Robbers Secure $140,000 From Express Safes.

Forth Worth (Texas) special: One of the boldest and most daring train robberies ever known to have been committed in Texas took place eight miles west of here and two miles east of Benbrook station. As an incoming east-bound Texas and Pacific passenger train was nearing Mary's Creek it was brought to a sudden stop by a danger signal displayed on the trestle. As soon as the train came to a standstill the engineer was covered by three unmasked men, who boarded the cab and ordered that the train be backed up about a half mile when the fireman was covered and ordered to break in the express door. He refused but the robbers pulled the triggers on their guns and a number of shots in the air brought the fireman to terms, who burst in the express door with a pick. One of the robbers then kept the firemant and engineer covered while the others went into the express car. Fort Worth is the end of the express run and the safe doors were open. One of the robbers rifled the safes while the other kept guard over the messengers. The exact amount the robbers secured is not known, but it is said to have been in the neighborhood of $140,000 in money, gold bullion en route from San Francisco to Washington, and Texas and Pacific checks. After the hold-up the robbers mounted their horses, told the engineer to go on and then made leisurely off in a northwesterly direction. The express officials here say they do not know the amount taken, but that it is the only through train from the west and carries every evening a large amount of money. On the arrival of the train at Fort Worth posses were immediately organized to close in every direction, thereby making escape almost impossible.

HOW INNOCENT!

Turks Disclaim the Horrible Butchery of the Armenian Christians.

Washington special: The Turkish legation has received the following communication in regard to Armenian troubles: Towards the end of July last and under instigation of an Armenian named Hampartzou, the men of ten Armenian villiages, near Mooch, formed separate bands and armed with guns, daggers, hatchets, and other instruments, attacked the tribes of Delikan, killed a few men of that tribe and afterwards fell on the tribes of Bekiran and Badikan. These bands burned alive, Hadji, a nephew of Eumer Agha, one of the chiefs of Bekiran tribe, outraged Musselman women of the village of Kulliguzat and put them to death in an atrocious manner. The men were tortured in a more ferocious way. The same bands burned a few villages inhabited by Musselmen. The statement published in European newspapers that regular troops fired on defenseless men and women is utterly untrue. No individual carrying no arms was killed. Twenty insurgents, having surrendered, were treated with all possible consideration and after their depositions before the legal authorities of Mooch were taken they were given their freedom. With the exception of brigands, who broke in revolt, no one else was ill-treated.

DIFFICULT

To Detect Any Very Great Change in the Current of Business of the Country.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Review of Trade says: "It is difficult to detect any change in current business, but the prospects for business after January 1, are quite generally considered more hopeful. The meeting of Congress, and the announcement of the new currency plan and various bills proposed have not affected the situation perceptibly. On the whole agricultural products are scarcely stronger and wages of labor do not advance but there is reason to expect the employment of a somewhat larger working force after the holidays. The expected government report of the feeding of wheat to cattle and hogs has scareely influenced the market. The receipts of wheat were larger than a year ago and the exports smaller, but foreign accounts, particularly as to the Argentine crop, have helped to advance 1⅛c. The estimates of winter wheat acreage indicates an increase of 1.9 per cent. with a condition somewhat better than a year ago and exports not one-sixth as large, with the price changed but little. Failures this week, 385 in the United States, against 385 last year and forty in Canada against forty-two last year."

TRIED TO STEAL A GODDESS.

Montana's Silver Statue Tempts Some Rascal but He Fails to Get It.

The silver statue of the actress, Ada Rehan, is under guard of half a dozen detectives at Chicago, as the result of the discovery of a plot to steal the valuable image. This statue had been on exhibition at the retail store of Carson, Pierre & Co., and recently a man representing himself as an employe of the Montana Silver Statue Company, owners of the statue, called at the store and secured the address of the night watchman. The other night after closing hours the man presented to the night watchman an order signed by the Montana company saying that General Manager Higbee, of the company, was dead and asked that the statue be delivered to the bearer. The watchman refused to honor the order despite the man's protests, and the detectives who are working on the case, claim that a well-planned conspiracy has been laid to steal the statue and, after melting it down, to dispose of the silver.

Murder Mystery Cleared Up.

The Mystery surrounding the murder of Alfred Barnes, the janitor of the Hiawatha Flats at Chicago, has finally been cleared up, and Edward Jordan, the assistant janitor of the flat building, is the confessed murderer. The police succeeded in getting from Annie Mahony, the woman with whom Barnes had been at one time intimate, an admission that the crime had been committed by Jordan. She repeated her confession in the presence of Jordan, and he acknowledged that it was correct. The story of the Mahoney woman was told in a stolid, indifferent way, she apparently feeling not the slightest compunction for her part in the awful tragedy, and even at times laughing loudly.

Ute War Coming.

Delegate Rawlins of Utah, says he looks for war in Utah before the Ute Indian difficulties are settled. The latest reports that he has received indicate a serious condition of affairs. The Indians have advanced within thirty miles of Moab, and have caused the settlers a great deal of trouble, robbing and pillaging, and especially driving off stock, Mr. Rawlins says that the white settlers have notified everybody to have the women and children moved to places of safety. The settlers are arming and intend to drive the Indians back into Colorado, or at least out of Utah.

First Skirmish.

City of Mexico special: The latest reports from the Guatemala frontier is of a more serious character than any which have as yet reached the capital. It is claimed the assassination has been made by the Guatemalan of a Mexican Colonel, member of the staff of Gen. Lullane, and from unofficial sources it is reported that a company of the Nineteenth batallion of the Mexican forces have had two skirmishes with a force of 400 Guatemalan guerrillas. The first assault on the Mexican troops was a harmless skirmish, but the second resulted in two Mexican soldiers being killed. The Guatemalans retreated hastily, and it is not known that they have suffered material damage.

Lost the Wager.

A horrible accident occurred at Prescott, four miles east of Shelbyville, Ind., on the Big Four Railroad. Ferdinand Orschel, a well-known man of Franklin County, aged 26 years, who has been making his home at the above mentioned place for some time past, in company with a party of friends out for their usual evening recreation, attempted to cross the Big Four tracks in front of a rapidly moving passenger train, when he was struck by the engine and killed. Others of the party narrowly escaped injury. A wager had been made by the foolhardy young men that they could gain the opposite side of the tracks ahead of the train. Orschel was in the rear of the party with the results as narrated.

A Pitched Battle.

Guthrie (O. T.) special: Two killed, one maimed for life, two badly wounded, is the result of a pitched battle between men of Alva and Eagle, started by drunken rowdies. James Brown, Frank Brown, J. K. Knight, Charles Kitchen, Sam Wescott, and One-eyed Taylor while coming home drunk met Sam Crocker, a Deputy Marshal, and three rangers en route to Alva. Without provocation or a moment's warning the drunken men opened fire. A general fusilade followed. Kitchen and James Brown were killed, Wescott's legs were shattered and Taylor, the Deputy Marshal, and one ranger were seriously wounded.

Brutal Attack on a Farmer.

Thomas Tennyson, a farmer near Versailes, Ind., upon returning to his house from the barn, was accosted by a stranger, who fired on him with a revolver at close range. The bullet struck Tennyson in the right groin. His cry for help attracted the household, and as members of the family ran to the rescue the stranger fired a second shot, sending a bullet through Tennyson's right thigh. The stranger rushed away, avowing the purpose to kill Tennyson's family before he was done. No cause is known.

The Safe Shattered.

The general store of Zerbe & Robinson at New Washington, Ohio, was burglarized the other night. The safe was blown open and now lies in fragments about the premises. The cracksmen went next door to a meat shop and stole several hides, with which they covered over the safe to deaden the noise. They secured about $50 in cash and some valuable goods.

Americans Compelled to Show Papers

Ambassador Runyan has informed the Department of State, under date of November 23, that all persons sojourning in Germany and not stopping at a hotel are required to exhibit some certificate of nationality in case of an American passport as a condition of continuing their stay, and this is sometimes done after a very short sojourn.

She Wanted to Die.

Mrs. William O'Neill attempted to commit suicide at Logansport, Ind., with morphine on account of poverty and domestic troubles. While she tossed about in her agony her two little children crawled upon the bed and begged for food. Physicians arrived in time and saved her, although she pleaded piteously to be left to die.

Appointed by Lincoln.

James S. Hume, one of the pioneer residents of London, Ohio, was found dead in bed. He had been in poor health, but such a sudden termination was not expected. He was 77 years old and left one child, Mrs. Belle Neff. Mr. Hume was the first Republican postmaster in London, being appointed by President Lincoln.

Can't Have It.

An application for the use of the Cleveland Grays' Armory at Cleveland, Ohio, for a lecture to be given by W. C. P. Breckinridge has been refused. "The armory was engaged for that night," said Mr. J. R. McQuigg, President of the Board of Trustees, "but in any event it would not have been rented to Breckinridge."

Struck an Indian Grave.

While some men were working in a gravel pit some four or five miles north of Morristown, Ind., they unearthed several skeletons, as well as some old pottery, arrowheads, and what is supposed to be some kind of coin. It is higny probable that they were the remains of some Indians.

A Village Destroyed.

A dispatch from Charlottetown, N. S., states that the greater part of the village of Mt. Stewart was destroy by fire, which broke out in the store of J. M. Egan & Co. Seventeen stores and buildings were burned Both sides of the main street were stripped. Loss, $60,000; insurance about $20,000.

ASKS FOR NEW LAWS.

SECRETARY CARLISLE PROPOSES SOME REFORMS.

In His Annual Report He Suggests a Few Badly Needed Changes in the Currency Legislation—Would Revise the Bond Laws.

Changes Must Be Made.

The annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the state of the finances has been sent to Congress. It shows that the revenues of the government from all sources for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1894, were $372,802,498 and the expenditures $442,605,758, which shows a deficit of $69,803,260. As compared with the fiscal year 1893 the receipts for 1894 fell off $88,914,063.

During the year there was a decrease of $15,952,674 in the ordinary expenditures of the government. The revenues for the current fiscal year are thus estimated upon the basis of exibting laws:

From customs	$160,000,000
From internal revenue	165,000,000
From miscellaneous sources	15,000,000
From postal service	84,427,748
Total estimated revenues	$424,427,748

The expenditures for the same period are estimated as follows:

For the civil establishment	$91,250,000
For the military establishment	53,250,000
For the naval establishment	32,500,000
For the Indian service	11,500,000
For pensions	140,500,000
For interest on the public debt	31,000,000
For postal service	84,427,748
Total estimated expenditures	$444,427,748

The above figures, compared with the estimated revenues, show a deficit of $20,000,000. It is estimated that upon the basis of existing laws the revenues of the government for the fiscal year 1896 will be:

From customs	$185,000,000
From internal revenue	190,000,000
From miscellaneous sources	15,000,000
From postal service	86,907,407
Total estimated revenues	$476,907,407

The Secretary thinks many small district offices should be consolidated and a general reorganization of the customs service made.

He also asks for $100,000 per annum for investigating Chinese cases and paying expenses of deportation, owing to the new treaty with China.

Subject of Currency Reform.

The most important feature of Mr. Carlisle's report is his discussion of the subject of currency reform, in the course of which the administration's plans of a new system of currency are set forth in detail. Mr. Carlisle reviews the financial statistics referred to in the tabulated statement and charges $3,022,000 of the deficit to the importation of raw sugar prior to the time the new tariff law went into effect. The income tax will afford no revenue till July 1, 1895, but there is reason to believe the importation of sugar must soon be resumed on a large scale, and he thinks by July 10 considerable collections under the income tax law will have been made. He is of the opinion that the execution of the present laws will yield sufficient revenue for 1896 and leave a surplus of $28,814,920.

In urging financial legislation for the purpose of supporting the public credit Mr. Carlisle says:

"The well-known defects in our financial system and the serious nature of the evils threatened by them have done more during the last two years to impair the credit of the Government and the people of the United States at home and abroad and to check our industrial and commercial progress than all other things combined, and our first and plainest duty is to provide, if possible, some effective method for the prompt and permanent relief of the country from the consequences of the present unwise policy."

The Secretary then reviews the circumstances leading up to the first $50,000,000 issue of bonds, yielding $58,660,917 and increasing the free gold in the treasury to $107,446,802. The lowest point reached by the reserve since the resumption of specie payments was on the 7th day of August, 1894, when, by reason of withdrawals in the redemption of notes, it was reduced to $52,189,500. After that date it was slowly replenished by voluntary exchanges of gold coin for United States notes by the banks and by small receipts of gold in the payment of dues to the government until the 14th of November, 1894, when it reached the sum of $61,878,374.

In the meantime, however, the frequent presentation of notes for redemption in gold clearly indicated the existence of a feeling of uneasiness in the public mind. In addition the vast accumulation of money at our financial centers and the general depression in business which prevailed in this country had so reduced the rates of discount that the inducement to keep funds abroad was much greater than in ordinary times and made it highly imprudent to neglect any precaution which appeared necessary to insure the safety of our financial position. Therefore, the second issue of $50,000,000 was decided upon. The proceeds of the sale, $58,538,500, have nearly all been paid into the treasury, according to the terms of the sale, reducing the rate of interest to 2.878 per cent. The transaction justifies the opinion that a 2½ per cent. bond could probably have been sold at par. Here the Secretary asks for a law giving him such authority, saying it would strengthen public confidence.

Preservation of the Gold Reserve.

With regard to the redemption of government obligations the Secretary shows his attitude on the hard money question and says the one who presents paper for redemption must be given his choice of metals, as a change would work hardship on the public and nation. This condition cannot be permanently remedied except by great changes in the laws relating to the subject. The situation is the result, too, of three policies: The circulation of United States notes as currency and their current redemption in coin on demand; the compulsory reissuance of such notes after redemption; the excessive accumulation and coinage of silver and the issue of notes and certificates against it at a lower ratio than is warranted. He continues:

"Frequent issues of bonds for the purpose of procuring gold, which cannot be kept after it has been obtained, will certainly cause increased distrust among our own people as well as among the people of other countries and not only swell the volume of our securities returning from abroad for sale or redemption, but increase the withdrawal of foreign capital heretofore invested in our domestic enterprises.

"It is not the capitalists alone whose interests are affected by the use or threatened use of a depreciated and fluctuating currency and the consequent derangement and diminution of business. A paralysis of business, whatever may be its cause, strikes first the wage-earner.

"Under our present currency system, the volume of circulation is unchangeable; it is unalterably fixed at a certain amount and no matter how great the emergency may be it can be neither enlarged nor diminished. The only part of the currency possessing in any degree the quality of elasticity is that issued by the national banking associations and it is now generally conceded, I believe, that in this particular, at least, it has failed to meet the requirements of the situation at some of the most critical periods in business affairs of the country."

The National Bank Question.

With regard to the "Baltimore plan" for national banks the Secretary says:

"As the plan suggested proposes to exempt the Government of the United States from all liability for the redemption of national bank notes and place the sole responsibility upon the banks themselves, a guaranty fund of not less than 30 per tentum upon the outstanding circulation is regarded as a very proper and necessary feature of the system."

Then coming down to the tariff he says:

"The raw materials used in the production of commodities for the use of the people in their homes and in their various industrial pursuits should be free from taxation. If our industries are to be profitably conducted reduced cost of production must precede or accompany reduced prices of the finished product.

"The late act, while it places upon the free list a considerable part of most important raw materials used in our manufacture, left iron and lead ores and bituminous coal, together with several other articles of less consequence, still dutiable, thus not only failing to put in force a consistent system of revenue reform but leaving some of our most valuable industries at a great disadvantage as compared with their rivals differently located."

CARLISLE'S ESTIMATES.

Secretary of the Treasury Thinks He Can Get Along with a Million Less.

The Secretary of the Treasury has sent to the House of Representatives his estimates of appropriations required for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, which aggregate $410,435,079 as against $411,879,041 estimated for the present fiscal year. WORK OF CONGRESS.

DOINGS OF OUR NATIONAL LAWMAKERS.

Proceedings of the Senate and House Briefly Summarized—Measures Introduced, Passed, or Referred to Committee—Routine Work.

Coming Work of Congress.

The present session of Congress is not unlikely to be marked by some interesting debates. It seems altogether likely that the session will be partially devoted to a discussion of the currency problems before the country, the President having set the discussion going by the recommendations of his message. It will be strange if the West and South do not make one more attempt to pass a free silver measure. There have been elected several new Congressmen, who will, when their time comes, no doubt act with the free silver side. The income tax will undoubtedly come before the present session of Congress. There was an appropriation of $9,000 made on the recommendation of Secretary Carlisle to provide for the hire of clerks and the cost of the preparation of blanks to be used in its collection, but it will take at least half a million dollars a year to provide for the cost of the machinery of collection in the offices of the district collectors of internal revenue. Senator Hill and his school of opponents of the income tax have additional chance to voice their opposition to it. The tariff is not out of the woods yet. The "popgun" bills, so-called, the independent measure providing for the free entrance of many staples into the country, have come over from the first session of the Fifty-third Congress, and as all of them have devotees, they are sure to be brought forward for discussion, if not for action. This closing session of Congress will have one merit that its predecessor did not have. That is that the country knows when it will end. The first session didn't have that desirable qualification.

Up to Thursday neither branch had gotten in shape for active work. The reports of the Cabinet Ministers had been received, and both houses discussed them carefully. Congressman Fithian, of Illinois, introduced two bills affecting the shipping interests. The bills were designed to relieve sailing vessels of a portion of their tonnage tax, and transfer it to steam vessels, and to change the measurement law to make it conform to those of Great Britain, Norway and other nations. The object sought is to diminish the amount of taxes which the vessels of the United States have to pay in foreign ports. A bill providing for the free coinage of silver was introduced in the House by Representative Hartman, of Montana. An important provision of the measure is that requiring import duties to be paid in gold in cases where the articles of importation are brought from countries whose Governments refuse to open their mints to the free coinage of silver and gold. The Senate called for corre

CHAPTER IX.

Reaching the Reyniers' door, Roderick did not offer to enter. In truth, he felt that the usual social evening would be as impossible to him as to Silence. In their present crisis of pain they needed either to be quite alone with each other or entirely apart.

Still, when he saw her next morning, looking deadly pale, but assuming a faint smile of welcome, and sitting down beside him in the old way, though he noticed, with a slight hesitation, as of doing as a duty what had before been so natural and sweet, Roderick's heart sank. He waited in a fever of apprehension for what she had to say, or rather he tried to prevent her saying, by talking about what he had been writing in the matter of Blackhall. To all of which she answered only by a pale smile, then said gently:

"You forget, my friend, the matter we had to speak about this morning."

"No, I do not forget—but yesterday, when I spoke of our marriage, it seemed to pain you."

"It will not to-day, for I have been thinking it all over, and——"

"You are trembling! You are ill, my darling"

"Oh, no" gently putting aside and then yielding to his tender caress. "Don't mind me, I am not ill, but I lay awake the whole of last night, and it is trying when the morning breaks upon one and there is no rest, no division between two days—two such dreadful days."

"Dreadful! Why? What do you mean?"

She took his hand and stroked it with a gesture almost motherly. "Listen to me. I have a good deal to say, and you must listen. You will? I shall not hurt you, my Roderick—not very much. And that I love you—ah, you know it—only too well, if that were possible. But it is impossible! Were you a vain man, or a tyrant, or selfish, it might harm you, and I should be afraid; but you are none of the three. You are Roderick, my Roderick! I shall never love any man in this world but you."

"Of course not, it would be very wrong." But suddenly his attempt at a smile faded in a vague terror. "Why tell me this? What do you mean?"

"I think"—she spoke very slowly and softly—"I think we ought to part."

For a moment Roderick was completely stunned. Her whole manner was so quiet that a stranger might have imagined she felt nothing, that she had no feelings at all. A slight quiver about the mouth, a tightened impression of the fingers—she had taken her hand away from his and clasped them together on her lap—that was all. Shallow people might have wholly misjudged her; even her lover did a little.

"And—you say this—quite calmly—as if you did not care"

"Not care. Oh, mon Dieu! mon Dieu!"

Then she turned imploringly to Roderick. "Do not be angry with me. I do not deserve it; only listen, it is for your good I speak. Yesterday I believed—you made me believe—that it would be the best thing in the world for you to marry me. Now, I doubt.

"Now it is over. I have made up my mind—that is, so far as, being fiancee, I have a right to make up my mind. I think it would be best for you to go home at once, and tell your mother that we have parted, that we thought it best to part."

Roderick sat dead silent.

"Otherwise, think what will happen! You will be comparatively poor—

"And you are afraid of poverty?"

The moment he had said the words he felt their meanness, their utter untrueness, and passionately begged her pardon.

"What need?" Silence answered, half sadly. "The question is not whether you hurt me, or I you, or whether we vex one another, but whether we do what is right, absolutely right. That is the real heart of love. If I thought a thing right, I would do it, and help you to do it, though it killed me—ay, even though it killed us both"

"I understand you," he said, with a quietness that was a marvel even to himself. "But it is a very difficult matter to decide, and we must decide, for our whole two lives hang in the balance. Let me go away and think it out alone—quite alone."

He rose with a grave, sad air, and went to the door, then came back and kissed her hand

"My love! my only love! Yes, I have found you. It is not every man's lot so to find you. Whatever happens, I thank God."

Without more words he went away to his favorite "thinking place," a quiet walk along the lakeshore. Many an hour had he spent there within the last few months, but never such an hour as this

He would go back with the fiat of life or death in his hands. Byron, who wrote so many false things, wrote one true one:

"Man's love is of man's life a thing apart,
'Tis woman's whole existence."

At least, this is true of most women: and one of whom it is not true is scarcely a woman at all. Though all the time Sophie sat chatting beside her Silence neither wept nor complained, asked no sympathy, and betrayed by no word that anything was amiss, still, when the door opened and she saw her lover a pear, a shiver ran through her, which made the kindhearted Sophie with a troubled and anxious look, immediately disappear.

"My love" he said, "I have been thinking over everything, trying to see the right and wrong of things—simple right and wrong, without relation to ourselves at all. My father could do it, and used to say he believed I could when I was tried I hope so; I hope I can judge calmly, without being either selfish or unjust. Am I?"

"To a thousand times no."

"My darling, we must love one another—we must be married. You left it to me to decide and I have decided. It will be a pang in some ways—a risk in others—but it must be; it ought to be. Love is best. Come."

"I would have lived," she cried—"yes, I would have lived. One has no right to break one's heart and die till God chooses. But life with you and life without you oh, the difference!"

Roderick clasped her in his arms, and they wept together like little children.

Once again Roderick wrote to his mother, informing her that he had delayed his marriage for three months, hoping against hope that after all it might not be the saddest of weddings, without a parent's blessing, but that, whether or no, it must be. He allowed her no possibility of believing that he could change his mind. While opposing, he never deceived her, for deceit is always cowardice, and whatever he was, Roderick was no coward.

It was on one Sunday afternoon, which they were spending with the good Reyniers at Chaumont. They had climbed the hill through the long pine woods, and were now standing watching that lovely view, the triple chain of lakes, with its long line of snowy Alps beyond. The air was mild and soft; there were violets in the woods. It felt like the first day of spring, which always comes, as it were, with a message of promise to the young. Ay and even to those whose youth is only a never-fulfilled remembrance.

"Silence," Roderick said, as he took in his the hand that would be his own through life, "I have finished all the work I had to do here. Now, when shall we go home?"

"Home?"

"Your new home, and mine; the home we are to share together."

Startled, she faltered out something about "waiting a little longer."

"I have waited. It is now nearly nine months since the day at Berne, when—

"'I had but see her pass my by,
And yet I love her till I die.'"

"That would have been very foolish," said Silence, with a naive gravity; "unless you have followed up the acquaintance, and come to know me well." Suddenly putting her two hands in her lover's—"You do know me, faults and all, so take me; and oh! be good to me I have only you."

"And I you. You will be good to me also"

She smiled. "Little use in talking, but I think there will never come a day when I would not cheerfully die, if my dying could help you. My living will, much more. So I mean to live."

And she looked up fondly, with all her soul in her eyes, at her young bridegroom. Would she forty, fifty years hence, see in the old man's face that of this lover of her youth, the face forgotten by all but her God knows, but it is good to believe so.

The marriage was arranged, of course, to be quite quiet. All the usual Swiss festivities, the soirees aux bouquets before the wedding and the ball after it, were of necessity omitted. The Reynier family alone were to "assist" at the ceremony, for which the girls implored Silence would, for one day only, put off her mourning and assume proper bridal white She assented, because my mother would have liked it. She used often to talk of the day when she would dress me as a bride.

"And she would be glad, so glad! if she knew that you were taking care of me," said Silence, with a bright smile, though her tears were dropping down. "Also a little, that I was taking care of you. She used to say it was my mother always to take care of somebody. Therefore, adieu, my mother. You will not forget me, wherever you are; nor I you."

She laid her cheek on the white headstone in a passion of sobs, then suddenly checked them all, gave her hand to her bridegroom, and suffered him to lead her away home.

He did not see her again till next morning, when Sophie, Marie and Jeanne Reynier led into the salon and left beside him, shutting the door upon them both, the whitest, loveliest vision More like an angel than a woman, he thought then, nor ever ceased to think, though he never saw it but once in his life, on that wonderful wet morning when the Deluge itself seemed to have come back upon Neuchatel, as if to sweep away with its torrents all his old life, and begin the new life with his wedding day.

Suddenly he stooped and kissed, not her lips, but her hand. She looked suprised for an instant, perhaps just a little hurt then perceived at once the deep emotion, the tender reverence.

"Oh, my love, my love forever! Thank God!" said she or rather breathed than said it, as she put both arms round his neck and clung to his bosom. She was but a woman after all.

Soon after Roderick led his bride, both quite calm now and smiling, to the two carriages waiting below. He and she and the good Reyniers drove through the soaking streets to the damp, empty church, where, strange contrast to his sister's brilliant marriage, they two stood alone, with not a creature of their own blood beside them, and heard the old minister in his unimpassioned voice address them as "mon cher frere et ma chere soeur," recommending them to observe "une inviolable fidelite, une entiere confiance, et une affection toujours plus profonde." Then, having answered the few questions of the Swiss marriage liturgy, simple and Protestant, not unlike his native Presbyterian service, the young bridegroom listened as if in a dream to the final blessing.

"Que Dieu, notre Pere en Jesus Christ, fasse reposer Sa benediction sur vous, qu'il scelle dans vos cœurs le lien que vous venez de former, qu'il sanctifie de plus en plus, et que vous viviez ensemble en Jesus Christ, dans l'attente du jour ou ceux qui se seront aimes en Lui, seront reunis dans Son sein pour l'eternite. Amen."

CHAPTER X.

A "flat" at a Richerden terrace, furnished after the true Richerden style, not tawdry certainly, but very solid; solid and ugly. Large-patterned flowery carpets, and curtains to match, there being just that slight difference in shade which some people think "of no consequence," but which to others is a daily torment, setting their teeth on edge like an untidy room, or a piano out of tune, or any other of those small avoidable miseries which make all the difference between real and sham refinement. But the sense of harmony in color and form, a thing quite independent of riches, and often attainable in comparative poverty, was mostly unknown to, and disregarded by, the wealthy inhabitants of this excellent town. No blame to them; only a little painful to those who happen to be differently constituted.

"When I look around the room, I feel exactly like a cat with its back rubbed up the wrong way," said Roderick, trying to make a joke of his annoyance at finding the sort of "home" to which he had brought his wife, so very different from what he had desired, or even expected. They had been traveling a month abroad, and had begun to weary of hotels, and look forward eagerly to the settled life of dual solitude, which to all people who are truly "one and one"—without need of that "shadowy third," which marks, alas! the sad imperfectness of married union—is, and ought to be, the most entire felicity.

And felicity it was—even though theirs had been a sad home-coming—not a soul waiting there to welcome the bride. It was now two days since they had arrived, yet not a visit, not a card, not a letter, came to show that any body remembered there were such people in the world as Roderick Jardine and his young wife.

"We might as well be in the desert of Sahara, only there it wouldn't rain, as it seems always to do here," continued he. "What a change! We left spring, we come back to winter."

"I don't mind it. And I like the merry crackle of the open fire," said Silence, who was kneeling before it, the blaze brightening her sweet face, upon which had already come the mysterious look which even a week of marriage sems to bring, the deep, contented calm of a girl who has passed into a woman, whose lot is settled, whose life is filled. For good or ill, God knows! but it is filled; and all uncertainty is ended. "Do not vex yourself, dear," she said. "Though, I allow, it might be a prettier salon, or parlor. Is not parlor the word?"

"Drawing room; parlor is not half genteel enough for Richerden," said Roderick, laughing.

Well, whatever it is, it is very comfortable. I am quite happy in it—with you. And I like our being here, all alone, with no 'receptions.' We shall not need to have any, I suppose?"

"No 'at home,' you mean? to receive our wedding callers? Apparently we shall have none to receive. Oh, there is the door-bell."

[TO BE CONTINUED]

Grave Question for a Statesman.

"Imagine Senator Evarts, Senator Sherman, or any other of your most grave, dignified, and revered statesmen being called upon to decide the question as to whether, when a lady rides on a tandem bicycle with a male escort she should sit behind or in front," exclaims Vogue's Paris correspondent. "Yet this is the problem which has been seriously propounded to the venerable Senator Jules Simon; to the pompous and intensely dignified Comte de Haussonville, who represented the Comte de Paris' interests here and was his principal lieutenant to the portly Duke of Doudeauville; and to the octogenarian, Senator Barthelmy St. Hilaire. They have, after due consideration, responded to the inquiry with the same gravity with which it was put to them, and with as much unction as if they were determining some intricate problem of statecraft or ecclesiastical lore. I need scarcely say that their unanimous decision was that the lady should sit in front, since she is bound to prefer the green horizons and the varieties of the landscape to the back of a man, while the latter, for his part ought to prefer to the beauties of the landscape and the poesy of the horizon the little crisp curls that grow in the nape of every pretty woman's neck. Yet it is easy to understand why this decision should be declined by the majority of the bicyclists, especially those of my own sex. For it is in the nape of the neck and at the base of the skull where a woman first begins to manifest signs of her age, where her beauty shows its first token of waning, and the fair one must be very young and sure of her loveliness in order to place herself for hours at a time in the manner that shows her under the most trying circumstances to her escort."

A Grewsome Calling.

The most grewsome modern calling, beyond all question, is that of a deep-sea diver employed in examining and clearing away sunken wrecks. Putting aside the fact that his life is in constant danger from the assaults of submarine enemies or accident to his diving-dress and apparatus, the sights that he is called upon to see, and to see, moreover, amid the most horrible surroundings, seen in ghastliness even those which confront the hospital or the army surgeon. Nowhere else on land or sea are so many accumulated horrors to be found as in the hull of a ship which has sunk with crew and passengers. The hideous condition in which the diver finds the victims of the wreck, some half-devoured by fish, some standing upright and floating to and fro with a ghastly parody of living motion, some still locked together as though yet in the last agony of the death struggle, each fighting for some real or fancied chance of escape, and some swollen to twice their natural size, floating about the interior of a ship, and knocking and rubbing up against him with a hideous life-likeness that is utterly indescribable—these are some of the horrible sights which deep-sea divers have to work amid when they are employed on sunken wrecks. When to all these are added the awful gloom and silence amid which the work has to be performed, there will not seem to be much doubt that of all modern callings that of the deep-sea diver is the most grewsome.

What He Found.

When James McNeill Whistler went to Venice to make those fourteen famous etchings of his, he became so intoxicated with its beauty that he made seventy passels first, leaving his etchings till the last few days. These pastels made a tremendous sensation. All the art world of Venice was carried away with enthusiasm, excepting a Russian painter, who declared them tricks, betting a basket of champagne he could paint six not to be distinguished from them. Mr. Whistler amiably gave some of his paper and six pastels, which were finally mixed up with those by the Russian and submitted to a jury who had seen none of them. Mr. Whistler's pastels were unmistakable, and the Russian lost the wine. A few days later the two met on the Rialto, and Mr. Whistler laughed a little about the wine and the bet. The Russian was furious. "You forget, sir," he said "that I'm a Russian, and if you scratch one you find a Tartar underneath." "Oh, no, you have it wrong, said Mr. Whistler—"you have it wrong. I scratched an artist and found an amateur."

On Even Terms.

Baron Haussmann, the celebrated French administrator, who may almost be said to have made Paris a new city, used to relate the following anecdote by way of illustrating the feeling of many country gentlemen toward the prefects:

One of these gentry entered the prefect's office, having some complaint to make, and proceeded to state his errand in a pretty lofty tone, and without taking off his hat. The officer was equal to the occasion.

"Wait a moment," he said, and he rang a bell. A servant answered the summons

"Bring me my hat," said the prefect.

The hat was brought, the officer put it on, and turned to his caller.

"Now," said he, "I will hear you."

THE hygienic congress at Buda-Pesth brought out the fact that there are four times as many men who stammer as there are women so afflicted.

CRADLE OF THE RACE.

ARMENIA THE OLDEST LAND IN THE WORLD.

A Country of Great Natural Resources, but Devastated by the Worthless Turk—May Yet Be Delivered from the Sultan's Rule.

Native Home of Man.

The bloody massacres perpetrated by the Turks and Kurds in the heart of Armenia served to call public attention to one of the oldest and most remarkable countries on the globe, a country once rich and populous and powerful, but, like every other land that has suffered the curse of Turkish rule, now desolate. There was a time when the Armenians numbered at least 25,000,000 population, but now it is estimated that not more than 5,000,000 remain in their native and well-beloved land, while 3,000,000 or 4,000,000 more are wanderers to and fro over the earth, sober, industrious, economical citizens of many lands and well-to-do in every country but their own. They would do well there also were it not for the Turks. The Ottoman Empire has proved itself in modern times, as the Persian in ancient, a national curse, a sore, an ulcer among nations; it has been said of the Persian State that of all the nations over which it gained control not one ever raised its head again, and the statement is almost literally true Far more fortunate have been the States that have suffered the blight of Turkish rule. One by one they have risen in rebellion and have shaken off the Ottoman yoke. Years of revolution and bloody war were sometimes required to secure the coveted freedom, and the march to liberty has been over thousands of bloody corpses of men, women and even of children, but by perseverance the cause was always won. Greece, Servia, Roumania, Bulgaria, Roumelia, Georgia, Circassia, the story of each the same—a bloody rebellion, a long war, assistance from foreign powers, and then freedom. The unhappy land of Armenia is now going through the preliminary stages of the process of acquiring independence, and there is no reason to doubt that in time, and, perhaps, in no very long time, the Armenians will be as free as the Greeks or Bulgarians are to-day.

It is a singular land, that in which the fight for liberty is now being waged under such fearful odds. It is a land so old in history that the earliest legends of the human race point to it as the first home of mankind, and so far do the sober facts of history confirm the wild fancies of legend that historian, scientist and myth-gatherer all unite in the belief that somewhere in the region now generally designated as Armenia, the human race first began that process of migration and development that has led to the peopling of every corner of the earth. The Garden of Paradise was in Armenia. Adam was an Armenian; so was Noah, for his ark rested on Ararat, where, according to popular tradition, it remains to this day, having been seen, or at least reported to be seen, by two or three different travelers. From Armenia began the dispersion of the nations, and all the legends of the early days point the finger back toward that singular land at the head waters of the Euphrates and Tigris as the home of every nation that preserved a memory of its own origin.

The limits of Armenia proper are by no means accurately determined, for at different times the country has been under many different governments, and even at present, it is divided between Turkey, Russia and Persia, and the boundary lines form a never-ceasing source of dispute between these three powers. The truth is that Armenia really has no boundaries worth the name, the various tribes of savage kinds that occupy the eastern district, wandering back and forth at their pleasure, and, according as inclination or convenience may prompt, owing allegiance to either or neither government. According to the best authorities, the land of Armenia proper contains about 150,000 square miles, being thus a little more than twice the size of Missouri, and for the most part consists of a high tableland from 5,000 to 8,000 feet above the level of the sea. Although within the tropics it is by no means a tropical country, having, on the contrary, a climate rather severe than mild, for during at least three months in the year, deep snows cover the wide plains that stretch from the head waters of the Euphrates to the Caspian Sea, and on the Ararat range the snow has never been known to melt. In spite of its altitude, however, the country has agricultural advantages of no mean order. The tablelands are not of uniform height, and on their various terraces the products of any country on the globe may be raised, from the dates of Arabia to the oats and barley of Norway. The country is otherwise wealthy besides, for there are mines of gold, silver and several other metals, while coal is abundant in many localities, and petroleum is found in a score of different places. Under even a passable form of government Armenia would be a singularly prosperous country, but the curse of Turkish misrule has blighted every hope of the inhabitants.

Industry is checked, for no one knows the amount of taxes that will be required of him; nor, indeed, can he be certain that after the products of his field have been garnered they will not all be eaten or carried off by bands of irregular Turkish troops, who will consider themselves singularly forebearing if they do not also take his life. Instances have been known of farmers who raised a hundred bushels of grain and saw eighty-five bushels carried off under the name of taxes, to feed a rapacious soldiery. Under such circumstances, the people have no incentive to industry, and so Armenia, like every other Turkish province, is gradually wasting away; the industrious and economical portion of the population are leaving as fast as they can, and this remarkable region will soon be desolate.

The inhabitants are not all Armenians; in fact, the Armenians now form only a small fraction of the population in the country they once called their own. Turks, Kurds, Persians, Tartars, savage tribes akin to the races of hardy mountaineers that people the region from the Caspian to the confines of China, they are all alike in one respect—that all are treacherous and bloodthirsty, and all are inspired by a bitter hate of anything Christian. The name seems to rouse among these savage peoples all the innate ferocity of untamed human nature.

To do them justice, however, the Christians, so called, of Armenia, are not much better than their Turkish and Kurdish neighbors. They have been hardened and brutalized by ages of oppression and suffering; they regard the Turks as their natural enemies, and are just as ready to fight the Ottomans as the latter are to fight them. Unfortunately for the Christians, however, they are hopelessly in the minority, and so from time to time the world is shocked with these narratives of Turkish atrocity. In cold fact, there is very little choice between Christian and Moslem in that part of the world, and the swarms of wandering bandits sometimes consist of both Christians and Moslems, who rob both parties with strictest impartiality.

The cities of Armenia are not very numerous nor very populous, neither are they very prosperous. The best among them are Kars, that has stood more than one historic siege from both Russians and Turks; Erivan, a fortress from Roman days, and the capital of one province; Erzeroum, which once boasted a population of 120,000, but now has hardly more than 40,000, if so many, the reason of the decline being the same as that for the depression in every other part of the country. Erzeroum, the seat of the Turkish Pasha who misgoverns the country, is well fortified after an Oriental fashion, having great massive walls that have been neglected until they are ready to fall down of their own accord, big wooden gates covered with plates of iron, closed every night at an hour after sundown, when belated travelers are supposed to be compelled to remain outside, which, in fact, however, they rarely do, but simply walk along the wall until they find a place where it has fallen down enough to enable them to climb over, and then enter and go about their business. Erzeroum was once a city of grand proportions and great commercial consequence, but its glory has departed. Situated as it is on the high road between Teheran and Mecca, the annual caravans of pilgrims from Persia, Afghanistan and India all pass through it, but in greatly diminished numbers from those of former years. The Indian pilgrims now go by steamer through the Red Sea, so do not a few from Beluchistan and Persia, and only a few from the interior now pass through the once famous city that still presides over the destinies of the oldest land in the world. Like all other Oriental, and particularly Turkish, towns, Erzeroum presents from a distance an imposing appearance that is by no means confirmed on a nearer approach. From a few miles distance, nothing can be prettier than a Turkish town. The white walls glitter through the dark green foliage of the cypress trees that abound in the surrounding cemeteries, while the minarets and domes rise above the houses like points of vivid light. A nearer approach dispels the illusion. The marble walls are of whitewash, the minarets and domes are gaudy and flimsy, the streets are filthy enough to breed a pestilence, and everywhere savage dogs go to and fro in troops, and fight with each other for the offal that is cast out of the doors and windows of every house into the street.

But there is hope for Armenia. A brave people like the natives of this historic land can not always be kept in subjection to a degenerate race of thieves and murderers like the Turks. The incompetence of the latter to govern anything has been so plainly shown for a century and a half that the world has ceased to expect anything from the Ottoman power. But for the half-crazy fear that the English display whenever anybody raises the cry of Russian wolf, Armenia would long ago have been delivered from the rule of the Turk. Twice in the present century has Russia been ready to occupy the whole province, and twice has the deliverance of Armenia been postponed by the trickery of British politics and diplomacy. It is true that in being placed in Russian territory the Armenians would merely exchange one master for another, but experience has shown that while the Czar is a hard master, he is more tolerant than the Sultan.

THE AUBURN COURIER

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, post-office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.....DECEMBER 13, 1894.

T. G. Dowell, formerly editor of the Hicksville News, died Nov. 30.

DETROIT had five golden weddings in the same church one day last week.

REPUBLICANS will have a majority of 140 in the next House of representatives.

WHEAT acreage is greater this year than last in spite of low prices. The condition is represented as good.

THE republicans give out that they will not try to re-enact the McKiney bill. What laws will they change then?

FRANCE is having the same sort of panic and hard times that we had, caused in the same way, by a badly arranged high tariff.

WILLIS, of the Waterloo Press, says he don't know what "a half grown boy is." There are many other ordinary things that are equally new to him.

THE worst defeat democrats ever got, was in the presidential election of 1872. Two years later, we turned the tables, changing in our favor 181 congressional districts.

THE treasurer of Bartholomew county, this state, has sued to recover his commission, that is, the amount he would have been entitled to under the old law. We presume he will get it.

CONGRESS might give us a silver law requiring a certain amount of coinage each month. The eastern men could not object, and the western men would see that half a loaf is better than none.

FREE ships is one of the things Cleveland now asks for. Our ships should always have been free. There never was any excuse for the republican legislation that drove the American flag from the seas.

REPUBLICAN editors are asked: If the foreigner pays the tax, why does the sugar trust kick because a tariff is put on the sugar they have to import? Here is a good chance for Bro. Willis to make his name immortal.

THE republican landslide seems to have started another panic. Last week the Tacoma, Wash., National Bank failed, and the National Bank of North Platte, Nebraska, also, as well as a num of similar institution over the country.

THE now famous divorce case between Mrs. Hirshfield and her millionaire husband, tried a few days ago, was before Judge McConnell, at Fargo, No. Dakota. It is our "Billy" McConnell, of Angola, and at one time prosecutor of this circuit.

IF THE new democratic tariff law favored the sugar trust as republicans are claiming, why is it that the sugar trust is kicking against the new law, and claiming its business is ruined? It did not complain of the former republican law, the McKinley law.

THE Sugar Trust imported enough raw sugar, just before the new tariff went into effect, to last several months, so that now there will be for a time, no revenue from that source. But as they got this sugar free of duty, there is no excuse for their shutting down their works.

AVILLA is looking for a new interest to be located near that place. The Sisters of St. Francis, expect to build an asylum for aged and helpless people, on a farm they own near there. We suppose, however, that the intelligent and liberal minded "A. P. A." will think this a very wicked thing to do.

ST. JOSEPH, Mich., is now the county seat of Berrien county. It had been at Berrien Springs about fifty years, but the place never grew, as did Niles, Benton Harbor and St. Joseph. It is properly located at the last named town, which is by far the earliest point occupied by white men, LaSalle established a small French trading post there in 1679

UP TO date, the Waterloo Press has not taken back that lie about Canadian hay being sold in Butler. The Butler Herald (Review) made the statement three weeks ago, that no Canadian hay had been brought there, and that hay in Detroit was higher than in Butler, so that it is not possible that hay could have been brought over to Detroit and then the freight paid to Butler.

Now the Waterloo Press exclaims against democratic management in having to borrow money to carry on the government. But this is just what Harrison would have been compelled to do, had he been elected in 1892 instead of Cleveland. Will the Press deny this? And if he had not borrowed, what would he have done, when the McKinley law failed to produce the needed amount of revenue? The people were paying just as much as ever but it went to trusts and protected industries, and in the 15 million bounty on sugar. Government did not get as much as usual, and so had to borrow. We would be pleased to have the Press give us light.

Peace Day.

Union meeting will be held in the Presbyterian church next Sunday evening, Dec. 16, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. Following you will find a program for the observance of this day:

BUTLER.

Mrs. J. A. Campbell and daughter Florence visited with her mother near Angola last Saturday and Sunday.

The events of the week have been stirring and eventful—bad roads and thunderstorms sandwiched between frosts and bright sunshine—closing with a beautiful sabbath.

The "Butler Co." are scouring the decks and clearing them for action, and within a few days the hum of busy machinery will be heard and many willing hands will again be earning bread and butter and enjoying night's repose.

Our people were shocked last Friday upon hearing of the tragical and unexpected death of George Seldenright. It appears that he had obtained employment in a Chicago hotel the fore part of the week, and had gone to the fifth floor to clean windows opening into a skylight shaft that passed through each floor to the first one, used to ventilate and light the different floors. He was alone and perhaps was standing on the inside of the window ledge in the open shaft, as we often see persons in cities on the outside of windows of high buildings when in the act of cleaning them. From some cause he lost his balance and fell to the bottom of the shaft, a distance of sixty-five feet, striking upon his head, causing instant death. His remains were brought home to his father's, Alex. W. Seldenright, last Saturday. His funeral took place from the Lutheran church Sunday afternoon, Rev. J. B. Hawkins officiating. George, who had left home about three months ago, was in his 20th year, was a bright and promising boy, and was the idol of his sister Nora, whom he seemed to have particularly remembered in his efforts to get employment.

Charles Hanes died in the city hospital at Buffalo, N. Y., last Wednesday afternoon. His remains were brought here Friday morning and his funeral took place from the M. E church last Sunday forenoon under the auspices of the Odd-fellows, of which order he had long been a member, Rev. Cain of the M. E. church officiating. Mr. Hanes was among the best known men of our community, coming here with his parents in 1838, when but five years old, and settling one mile east of Butler, there growing to manhood, and for many years being engaged in teaching school. He afterwards became a stock merchant and followed this business in our vicinity until a few years ago, when he moved to Buffalo, N. Y., and became connected with a firm of wholesale stock men. He was a member of the Methodist church for many years. He leaves his wife (Sarah J. Altenberg) whom he married in 1857, two sons, one daughter, one brother, William, who lives two miles west of town, and one sister, Mrs. Bates, of Kendallville. Mr. Hanes was an honest, upright business man, well liked by all his business and other acquaintances, a faithful member of the church of his choice, he departs regretted by all who knew him.

Still in the Saddle.

Ex Sheriff Ralston finds it hard to quit arresting criminals while any remain at large. He landed a new one in jail here last Friday morning, fresh from Ohio. It appears that Sherman Knisely, who has a saloon at Ashley, was burglarized some time ago. Someone broke into his saloon and took two good shotguns and also a set of billiard balls valued at about $70. Knisely at once suspected a man named Wm. VanWagner, who had tended bar for him, and had been similarly employed at Butler and other places. He put the matter into Sheriff Ralston's hands, but election coming on delayed the matter some. After the office had been turned over, however, Mr. Ralston was free to resume the job. He located his man near Plymouth, O., but just over the line in Crawford county. He next proceeded to get a requisition from Gov. Mathews on Gov. McKinley, so as to make sure of getting his man home when he should catch him. Then he went to Plymouth and satisfied himself that VanWagner was there. Without giving himself away, he went on to Columbus to present the requisition to the governor and get the proper papers to secure the help of the sheriff at Bucyrus, in Crawford county. On coming to Bucyrus, the sheriff and his deputy went with Mr. Ralston, as the deputy knew VanWagner. When they reached the place, they saw VanWagner and his father driving some hogs toward the house, evidently getting them up to drive to market. The officers at once separated and surrounding the men, they easily got VanWagner. He at first tried to deny all knowledge of the matter. One of the shotguns was found, but he claimed to have bought it at a pawnshop in Toledo. The billiard balls were not found. But he was brought back here as stated, reaching Auburn Friday morning about three o'clock. Knisely came and identified the gun and we are told VanWagner owned up to him that he had stolen it. The case will come up when court sets.

OBERLIN COLLEGE GLEE CLUB.

The Junior Class of our High School has assumed the responsibility of bringing to Auburn a great musical treat. In securing the Oberlin College Glee Club they feel they have secured the best of its kind that this country affords as the best critics pronounce the Oberlin Club the most excellent organization of its kind sent out from any American university. This is not a troupe of professional musicians singing for hire, but twenty young men the representatives of a great college and conservatory, out for a three week's holiday tour singing for their own and the delight of their audiences.

They will travel and live in a special car chartered for the entire trip, and give concerts in the following places: Toledo, Detroit, Grand Rapids, South Bend, Chicago, Muscatine, Burlington, Washington, Des Moines, St. Joseph, Lawrence, Springfield, Kansas City, St. Louis, Terre Haute, Indianapolis, Auburn, Norwalk, Elyria and Cleveland. To show the high estimate in which this club is held we copy a few of an unlimited number of press notices they have received

Speaking of the Yale, Harvard, Princeton and Oberlin Glee Clubs, the Chicago Inter Ocean says:—"The Oberlin club is first in point of musical merit."

The audience was enraptured, each number being received with a tumult of applause Every number was presented with vim and brilliancy. Their voices are strangely sweet and well balanced. They have an established position in the great number of concert companies and are receiving much merited praise. They are favorites wherever they go.—Des Moines Daily Capital, Dec. 23, 1893,

Regarding the concert in Indianapolis, The Advance says:—"It was their first appearance in this city, both the Yale and Princeton Clubs having preceded them, but the Oberlin easily bore off the palm."

Their chorus work is magnificent. Possibly a better selected choir of voices is not known. Their training is what would be termed perfect. Everything about their singing is so exact that we cannot help pronouncing them wonders their line—Peoria Transcript, Dec. 28, 1893.

These are a sufficient guarantee that the entertainment will be first class. We predict that music lovers, and we all love music will not miss attending this concert. Its excellence merits a full house and the Junior Class deserve our patronage. Remember the date Wednesday evening, Jan. 2, at the Methodist church.

Two young men were before his honor "Squire" Walborn yesterday, for looting a Lake Shore car at Butler about ten days ago. A detective and Deputy Sheriff Blum had them in charge. They had taken about sixteen suits of clothes overcoats and underwear, valued at $200. They waived examination, and were bound over to court. Not having the $200, they are now stopping at Sheriff Stroh's Hotel. Prosecutor West says he will reach them about next Tuesday.

We greatly regret that we mislaid, and so overlooked a full account of the burning of Wm. Walsworth's barn last week, although a brief note of it was in our Concord items, as well as a mention in another column. The roaring of the flames awakened Mr. Walsworth, and he hastened out and found the entire structure in flames. He then worked to get out the stock. The stock were so frightened and the flames having reached them it was very difficult and dangerous. He at last got the halters cut, and with the help of Mrs. Walsworth, got all out but one calf, though several were burned. All the sheep, 23, perished. It was a fearful thing to hear their cries as the fire reached them. Everything was lost, including his agricultural implements and those of his son Amos, and each lost a buggy. It was partly insured, but as Amos had been moved from his own home to his father's, we do not know whether he will get his money. Mr. and Mrs. Walsworth were nearly prostrated, and she still remains in a critical condition. We give this late account, as our paper goes to many of their distant friends and relations. It is believed to have been the work of an incendiary.

Among the many things the editor's family had cause to be thankful for, was the gift of Mrs. Fremont Smith formerly Mrs. Shunk. She had fattened a fine chicken "on purpose" for us,and delivered it the night before thanksgiving. The gift was all the more appreciated, coming as it did from a former neighbor. The COURIER hopes they had as happy a day Nov. 29 as we did.

Saturday forenoon, in the sudden shower that came up, a team was taking a load of chairs from the M. E. church basement to the Armory, for the use at the Jarley Wax Works that evening. As they passed near the COURIER office, a pile of the chairs tumbled over into the mud, while the team went on without them. But the small boys were happy enough to make up all the losses.

George Picker, at Coffeyville, Kansas, served the printer a mean trick last week, by paying his COURIER up into '97. This brings him a month ahead of Ab Kelly, with Harry Rush, at Spokane, close up to him. Mr. Picker has an interest in a large brick factory, which is doing a good business, running night and day a part of the time. In this, their first year, they have made and sold over two millions. They make of shale and burn with natural gas, and can turn out 30,000 a day.

Mr. Colvin preached one of his best sermons last Sunday forenoon It was especially prepared for young men, and the Young Men's Athletic Club were present in a body. We were greatly pleased to see the long lines of neatly dressed and gentlemanly young men, listening to the words as they fell like bright coins from the minister's lips. He is himself a young man, thus having a special gift to speak to them and for them. We feel that no young man can afford to omit Sunday services, as a part of the way in which to pass the day. Surely no one ever regretted the hour spent in this manner. There are empty pews in all our churches, that would look more encouraging if filled each Sabbath with bright young faces.

Last Thursday, Miss Alma Thomson the cook at the Swineford House was suffering from severe toothache,and went to the drugstore to get some remedy she had often used before. She had been using a medicine that contained morphine and other ingredients, and without stopping to think that the clerk would not understand what she wanted, she asked for morphine. It was put up for her,and on going home she took it, not noticing but it was the usual prescription. She soon became sick, and Mrs. Forkner asked what was the matter. The girl explained, when a doctor was sent for, and remedies given. She was also kept hard at work at a washing that was being got out, one of the other girls watching her and making her work when she was inclined to go to sleep as she stood at work over the tub. She finally came out safe, but it was a very close call. She will be more careful the next time she has a prescription put up.

'Squire John Clark, the newly elected justice in Smithfield, was here the other day. There was a queer thing in his election. He just had a tie vote with his republican competitor, but it happened that the populists had put him on their ticket, and the 37 votes they gave him settled the matter.

Some "jokes" are so utterly bad that they are actually good.

One of the sweetest things in neckties is a true love knot made by the girl's own hands.

An honest man is the noblest work of God; but many that pass as such are the products of the penal code.

It now appears that Holmes, the insurance swindler, has three wives. Hasn't he been punished sufficiently?

When a man makes a success of anything, the conceit of other men is so great that they think they can do just as well.

A cart-driver ought never to assume that because he hasn't any feeling, the horse that he is lashing unmercifully is similarly fixed.

One of the most useful of woman's modern rights is her right to own her husband's property when the sheriff wants to seize it for his debts.

No one will be surprised to learn that prize-fighters consider foot-ball brutal. It requires a prize-fighter's intellect to make these delicate distinctions.

A Pole named Szynkow Ugdozcjkowski has induced a Pittsburg girl to marry him and take his name. Probably she took the latter in installments.

A Kingfisher, O. T., dispatch says: "It is reported that the Cook gang is lying in wait near this city." Why not let the correspondents do all the lying.

That Oklahoma girl who was hugged by a bear and sustained a fracture of three ribs ought to have known that there can be too much of a good thing.

Indian civilization in the Choctaw nation is a queer thing. The man condemned to death is permitted to go at large, but comes in promptly to be executed, and after execution his friends murder the Sheriff.

When a Chinese soldier makes his escape from the wars he is promptly put to death by his fellow-countrymen. We have wondered why so many Chinese stayed at home; the explanation is here: they are needed to kill the stragglers.

In Mexico, Romero and Verastagin had hate between them, and "picked a quarrel about a woman for whom neither of them cared," to hide the true cause of quarrel. Other countries, other manners. In some countries men really quarrel about women, and then they pick a quarrel about something else that the woman's name may not be brought in. They are not so delicate in Mexico.

Those who complain that the country is being filled up, should note the statement of Edward Atkinson, to the effect that there is enough first-rate wheat land, at present unoccupied, in the single State of Texas to produce all the wheat now grown in this country. Some one else figuring on area and population says that, with the same number in proportion to area that New Jersey counts, Texas would be supporting 63,800,000, or more than all counted in the last census for the United States.

Paper, being nearly air tight, will exclude cold, and should be used more than it now is. Some builders place paper between the boards of a house, and we should do well to follow their example in smaller matters. Farmers have found that the extra warmth secured by tacking several thicknesses of newspapers around the inside of henhouses, etc., has saved extra food. A layer of paper under a carpet is preferable to cotton, which is sometimes used, and if the paper made for the purpose cannot be obtained, several layers of newspapers will do nearly as well. Papers spread between bed coverings will take the place of extra blankets.

There was consternation in one of the Astor families the other night, because they found a tramp in bed on the fourth floor. Well, where did they want to find him in bed? Not on the first floor, we hope. What, by the way, are beds made for? Surely as places of nestling and repose for weary humanity. And is not a tramp weary humanity? Isn't he, in fact, the weariest kind of humanity going? Here, then, was produced a condition equivalent to great success in the enterprises of life, for the things best suited to one another came together as if by natural affinity. Yet the Astors were not satisfied. Truly the possession of great wealth makes people unreasonable. On this famous occasion the tramp, by going to bed when he found a bed, and going promptly to sleep, did just the right thing. And they sent for the police. What would they have done if the tramp had found that there were peas under the mattress and called for new bed furniture?

It is to be hoped that the death of prize fighter Con Riordan in Syracuse, N. Y., from a blow given by Bob Fitzsimmons, will put a stop to this brutalizing sport. The fighters were only sparring for pleasure, but Con Riordan had been drinking very heavily, and when he received a blow on his chin he fell never to rise again. There were two clots of blood on his brain, one of which weighed 4½ ounces. Fitzsimmons has been held to bail in $10,000, on a charge of manslaughter in the first degree. If this occurrence stops the business of prize-fighting for amusement it may be the best use to which the life that has been lost could be put. If there were no prize-fighting the lives of all would be safer than any skill in fist-fighting can render any person while the brutalizing sport is practiced.

The death of Robert C. Winthrop will hardly call to mind a distinct personality out of the State in which he lived. Not at one time he was one of the foremost men in the United States. He was Speaker of the House of Representatives while the argonauts of California were driving oxen across the plains, fighting mosquitoes on the Chagres River or facing gales off Cape Horn. He was deemed a worthy successor in the Senate to Daniel Webster when Webster became Taylor's Secretary of State. He was a young man at a time when men now well along in the sixties were making faces at a world they knew nothing of. Mr. Winthrop was much the same type of man as Edward Everett. He was born rich and always moved in the most exclusive society of Boston. He was distinguished rather for culture than for originality or robust thought. As Everett's polished oration at Gettysburg was obscured by a few remarks Abraham Lincoln made on the same occasion, so was Winthrop submerged when the storm of the civil war shook the community in which he lived. But he went down gracefully and uncomplainingly, occasionally appearing afterward to give one of his polished orations at college commencements or other similar occasions. He was a learned man; in fact he knew about all a man could be taught in one lifetime, but there was always a question if he would ever have been heard of had his lot been cast among either hand or brain toilers. But he was a man of high personal character and his influence was always thrown on the side of a controversy which he believed to be right.

LATEST FROM THE LIARS' CLUB

Three Indigestible Yarns Told by Its Most Veracious Members.

In a Virginia forest the other day, says the New York Recorder, a very large tree was cut down, near the heart of which was found a lock of hair, or rather two, intertwined of darker and lighter meshes. By carefully splitting the wood the initials "I. S." and "P. P." were discovered, faintly legible, in what must have been the bark several hundred years ago. By carefully counting the rings which covered the initials they were found to support the theory that the mystic letters stand for I-o-h-n, or "John Smith" and "Pocahontas Powhatan," whose locks of hair had been in some romantic mood intrusted to the keeping of the cleft bark.

Not content with slaughtering wild ducks in the usual method, Henry Jones, of Currituck, procured a Gatling gun and loaded the cartridges with bird shot. Concealing himself, he waited until a large flock approached him at great speed with a favoring wind. When they had nearly reached him he opened fire. The destruction was terrible, but such was the impetus of the birds and the force of the wind that almost the entire flock which he had slaughtered flopped dying upon his hiding place, and beneath their mangled bodies Jones perished miserably by retributive suffocation.

A lady in Thomaston, Me., has a cat—Fanny—which had kittens, as cats so named frequently do. Hearing her mistress remark that the kittens must all be drowned Fanny removed them one day to a safe hiding place. After a day or two she brought them back to the mistress with an air of triumph. It was then seen that she had with teeth and claws torn to pieces an old canvas and cork life-preserver and had fastened a piece of cork around each kitten's neck. Moved to pity by the sight, the mistress said: "Fanny, not one of your kittens shall ever be hurt." At this the intelligent mother took off the bits of cork and went to sleep in perfect confidence.

TRADER'S TOKENS.

Issued in Consequence of the Scarcity of the Authorized Coinage.

During the sixteenth century the national coinage was so unsatisfactory and inconvenient that large numbers of private traders and merchants were impelled to have halfpence and farthings manufactured for themselves, says Chamber's Journal. These "tokens," as they were called, were made of lead, pewter, latten, tin, and even leather, and could only be made use of as currency at the shops or warehouses of their respective issuers.

Notwithstanding the endeavors made during several reigns to put a stop to the circulation of this unauthorized coinage, traders' tokens continued to multiply to an astonishing extent, until in 1672 a proclamation was issued prohibiting their making or use under severe penalties. From that date until 1787 the issue of private tokens entirely ceased, but in the latter year, owing to the great scarcity of Government coin, the Anglesey Copper Mines Company struck and put into circulation some 300 tons of copper pence and halfpence. The bold example thus set was speedily followed by other trading firms all over the kingdom, and again the Government found it necessary to take action in the matter, which it did by issuing a new national copper coinage from the Soho works, Birmingham.

For some years the issue of private tokens was thus effectually checked, but in 1811, the authorized coinage again getting scarce, the copper companies and others recommended the issue of batches of tokens. This went on until the 27th of July, 1817, when the manufacture was prohibited by act of parliament, and all tokens in currency were ordered to be withdrawn from circulation by Jan. 1, 1818.

American Athletes from Hawaii.

Hawaiian boys are still at the front in athletics. In the Morgan Park Academy of the University of Chicago, H. W. Dickey, of Maui, is a successful athlete. He took the first on Field day, won the championship in the tennis tournament, took the first prize in jumping at the firemen's tournament July 4, and a beautiful silver cup from the tennis tournament at Kewanee, Ill. Taking the record of all the Hawaiian athletes in the States, no one dare say that the white boy doesn't flourish in the tropics. Here is the sanitarium for developing athletes.—Honolulu Advertiser.

Salt.

The necessity of procuring salt had much to do with the migration of interior tribes. In the folk-lore of the Zuni there is a salt goddess, who is the daughter of the ocean, and salt itself, they believed, was derived from the sun.

It is always exasperating to meet a man who says exactly what he thinks when we want to praise something.

A philosopher knows how contemptible the people are, because he knows how contemptible he is himself.

QUEER DWELLINGS.

HOMES OF MEN IN MANY DIVERSE LANDS.

A National Museum Exhibit Showing the Process of Evolution—Caves and Trees Man's First Abiding Places—Lake Houses of Switzerland.

The authorities of the new National Museum at Chicago have lately begun a most interesing collection. They are arranging a set of models of houses which will illustrate the progress of mankind in various countries from the earliest times Several of these models have been already completed and pictures of them are given in this column. It is not believed, however, that the collection will be completed entirely for some years yet.

The first idea in this exposition will be the influence of climate—the primary factor in the production of dwelling structures. The tropical man, as far as climate is concerned, needs take account only of the wealth of physical energy which floods about him, and he builds chiefly for shade and protection from the tropical rains. One flat roof-like structure in the collection, supported by poles, typifies this class of abodes, and a more elaborate example is the Samoan house, with thatched roof, post supports and raised floor.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA.

The needs which prompt to house building in temperate climates are varied. One day will be cold, another warm, and rain and snow add to the variety. Safety is also to be considered, and the provision of a defense against wild beasts and hostile men—the habitation is not only a house, but a castle, especially as seasonal changes require that it be furthermore a store house, containing objects of temptation to the covetous or needy. The house of the Arctic man is a burrow, like the home of his neighbor—the fox, wolf and bear. In this region he does not attempt to build, but crawls under ground. Where he cannot do this, he imitates the burrow with the snow hut.

Resources will be another point of view in this study of dwellings. In those Arctic regions where driftwood abounds an underground house is made by the building of wooden frames which, covered with turf, form the igloos of the Eskimo and the yourts of the Siberian native. Whale ribs in places are used to form arches, over which earth is spread, and the entire lack of timber, or its substitute, compels the circumpolar man to use snow. Both the turf and the snow types of dwelling are attractively represented in the case, and added interest is given to the snow house by a presentation in section, showing the long entrance passages and the skin beds and fireplaces of the interior.

IN ALASKA.

The cave is conceded to be the primitive form of abode. Simple cave dwellers still live in the deep and torrid canons of the Sierra Madre, in Mexico. They were recently visited by a learned traveler, Carl Lumholtz, who finds them a very crude race (the Tarahumari), going about almost entirely naked, except in cold weather, and seldom adding anything in the way of improvement to the natural recesses in which they seek shelter. The cliff dwellings of the United States are quite different, being pretentious structures akin to the Pueblo town houses, which are well represented by extensive models in the museum.

SOUTH AFRICAN RESIDENCE.

On the plains of the temperate zone the absence of forest materials makes residence in a tent imperative. In the Allegheny region the rectangular log cabin prevailed. Many people are under the impression that the red man learned of the invader to erect dwellings of timber, but if any imitation was practiced it was on the part of the white man, for the Indians used this form of shelter and protection before the advent of the Europeans.

On the west coast the big trees were split in the construction of the great communal places of abode peculiar to these residents in North America.

Many of the Chinese live in boats, and in the Malay archipelago houses are built on great bundles of bamboo which float in the water—a model of one of these is contained in the collection.

Tree dwellers are found wherever danger from animals or water makes desirable an elevated domicile. Several models represent houses of the lowlands of India perched on stilts, as a protection against poisonous insects, venomous snakes and dangerous quadrupeds.

The house is the product of environment in some way or other; there is always a connection between them. One of the most interesting results of environment were the lake dwellings of prehistoric Switzerland. It was a social environment, for nothing but a desire for safety from human foes can be regarded as a motive sufficient to induce a people to move from the abundant land to habitations erected over the surface of a body of water. Although some reference to these tribes were made by the ancient classical writers, it was only in comparatively recent years that a somewhat thorough knowledge of their habits of life and status of civilization was obtained through archaeological study, following upon the discovery of the submerged remains of the ancient piles. Industrious search made known the existence of great numbers of these, and the ethnologist at work in the deposits under the long since destroyed platforms found that these lake dwellers made use not only of many of the domesticated animals and cultivated plants, including some cereals, that are in present use, but also the flesh of wild animals that long ago ceased to be included in the fauna of Southwestern Europe.

A POISON SIGNAL.

A Little Bell Fastened to the Bottle's Stopper.

A novel and simple device for the prevention of accidental poisoning is shown herewith, and it appears to very effectively answer the purpose for which it is intended.

It consists, as will be seen by the accompanying illustration, of a bell so fastened to a capped cork that, it is claimed, the bottle cannot be taken up, much less the cork removed, without producing a tinkle, just loud enough to warn the nurse, but not loud enough to disturb the patient Obviously such a signal would be as effectual in the dark as in the daylight A cord is attached to the bell with which it is tied to the neck of the bottle

Those who know how many lives are lost yearly through accidental poisoning will appreciate the value of this safeguard It has been submitted, we are informed, to most of the coroners in the country, and most of them, besides expressing the fullest approval of it to the patentee, have publicly recommended its use

THE POISON SIGNAL.

Chinese Boats Have "Eyes."

Chinese junks and boats have eyes carved or painted on the bows, which are usually supposed to be a mere fanciful form of ornamentation. But they have a real meaning, as a recent traveller found. In going up one of the rivers from Ningpo he was startled one day by seeing a boatman seize his broad hat and clap it over one of the "eyes" of the boat, while other boats on the stream were similarly blinded. Looking about for an explanation, he saw a dead body floating past, and he was told by the boatman that if the boat had been allowed to "see" it, some disaster would surely have happened either to passengers or crew before the voyage ended.

ABOUT 40,000,000 feet of timber are annually made into matches in this country.

OLDEST HOUSE IN THE UNITED STATES.

The Quarterly Illustrator, a magazine devoted to art, prints the above picture and designates it as a sketch of the oldest dwelling house in the United States. The house stands near North Adams, Mass., and was built by Darwin Boyd, who settled there in 1521. It is therefore nearly four centuries old.

CAUSE OF THE SLUMP.

HARD TIMES AND DEMOCRATIC STAY-AT-HOMES DID IT.

What the Analysis of Election Returns Shows—All Talk of Repealing the Income Tax Is Pure Vaporing—Cleveland and the Bond Issue.

Vote Will Return in '96.

The vote in the recent State elections has been sufficiently canvassed so that it is possible to make comparisons and arrive at somewhat definite conclusions in regard to the causes of the country's apparent backslide into protectionism. The greatest changes occurred in the Northern and Eastern States, and it is in these States that we can see most clearly the general causes of the changes. In many of the Southern and Western States one or the other of the two great parties was to win votes by borrowing planks from this party's platform. Hence the changes in the results are more irregular and uncertain than in the North or East. Comparing the results in 1894 and 1892 in the more important of the Northern and Eastern States, and including Maryland, Delaware, Virginia and West Virginia, we have:

	Dem. Loss.	Pct.	Rep. Gains.	Pct.	Dem. Stay-at-home vote.

*Gain. ?Loss.

The Democratic loss in these fifteen States averages 22 per cent., and the Republican gain 8 per cent. It is the almost unanimous opinion of those who have studied the history that "hard times" always causes a loss of votes to the party in power no matter which party was responsible for the "hard times." Though the Democratic party may have been partly responsible (because of a few black sheep) for their duration, no sane person whose opinion is worth anything will deny that the "hard times" was a result of Republican legislation or lack of legislation. The Republicans had been in power for thirty years. Not only did the panic begin before a single Republican law had been changed, but the financial stringency was felt so much before the close of Harrison's administration that his Secretary of the Treasury had made preparations to issue bonds. Five per cent. is a low estimate for the Democratic loss and Republican gain because of hard times. There is then left a Democratic loss of 17 and a Republican gain of 3 per cent. to be explained by other causes.

Aside from State and local causes, which cut no small figure in the general result, it is probable that after "hard times" the four most important causes were Democratic delay in Congress, the sugar scandal, conservatism of Democratic Senators and Congressmen on the tariff question, and changes of belief as to the benefits of protection. The first three of these causes operated in keeping Democrats at home, and the last in changing Democratic (formerly) into Republican votes.

Had it not been for the Democratic voters who staid at home, the result in most States would have been very close. Add to these non-voting Democrats those who in New York, Ohio New Jersey and Maryland voted the Republican ticket, in order to "turn down" some of the Democratic traitors who blocked tariff legislation, and it becomes evident that there are to-day enough Democrats left to carry a majority of the Northern States on the tariff issue. The result, then, is neither a Republican nor a protectionist victory, but merely a Democratic slump.

Comparatively few of the voters have actually become afraid of tariff reform and voted the Republican ticket because they wished to return to McKinleyism. Some of these, and most of the five per cent. who changed sides blindly because of hard times, will return to the Democratic party by 1896, if this party rids itself of those who have betrayed and disgraced it. Let the Democratic party stand by tariff reform and tariff reformers and the people will stand by the party.—Byron W. Holt.

A Tax to Stay.

The talk about repealing the income tax or preventing its collection by withholding the appropriation necessary to its collection is pure vaporing. The income tax is here to stay. The Treasury is in need of the revenue it will yield. Its principle is just. It will oppress none and relieve many. No Republican leader of prominence ventured to denounce it during the late canvass.

As for the voice of the people, what was the verdict in the States whose Democratic Senators and Representatives declaimed and voted against the income tax. Senator Hill was the most bitter and persistent opponent of this just tax. Senator Murphy joined with him and insisted furthermore upon McKinleyizing the Wilson bill for the benefit of his own home and pocket. If the people of New York approved of this course of their Senators they took a queer way of showing it in burying Mr. Hill under more than 150,000 majority.

Senator Smith, of New Jersey, himself a member of the plutocratic class that believes in taxing everybody rather than itself, was likewise very hostile to the income tax. New Jersey repudiated him by more than 40,000 majority. Senator Brice, of Ohio, was a leading spirit in the combine of false Democrats who held up the Wilson bill and tried to defeat the income tax. Ohio served notice to quit on Brice by a majority so big that the Democrats were glad to stop counting it.

There were other causes at work, of course, but no warrant can be drawn from the election in any State that the people are dissatisfied with the income tax. It may hereafter be graded and otherwise improved, but it will not be repealed.—New York World.

A College President's Opinion.

And here comes President Seth Low of Columbia College, who says he is and has always been a Republican, but that he has voted twice for Mr. Cleveland on the tariff issue. Interpreting the late election, he remarks that it would not be candid to pretend that there has been no reaction against tariff reform. There has been such a reaction, and President Low seems to agree with Chairman Wilson that it reflects an unreasoning consideration of the question rather than deliberation by the people. He is a pretty good tariff reformer yet, and he is confident that there will be no step backward.—New York Times.

Cleveland on Bond Issues.

The President's statement in regard to the issue of bonds is not all in the nature of an apology. It is simply to the effect that the gold reserve was so much reduced and its further reduction in the near future seemed so certain that its replenishment became necessary in order to maintain the public credit. It would have been well if Congress had made provision for such an emergency by authorizing the issue of low-rate, short-time bonds. But Congress had not done this, and nothing was left but to sell bonds again under the resumption act. This was done on terms which reduced the rate of interest on the money actually borrowed below 3 per cent.

That is the whole story. But the President proceeds to show how, under existing laws, the same greenbacks can be used again and again to clean out the reserve. "We have an endless chain in operation," as he aptly puts it, "constantly depleting the treasury's gold and never near a final rest." And in addition to the obligation to redeem greenbacks in gold as often as they may be presented we have the obligation to maintain the silver circulation at par with gold, and this subjects the reserve to another drain. There is no other way to maintain the reserve than by the sale of bonds; "and yet Congress has not only thus far declined to authorize the issue of bonds best suited to such a purpose but there seems a disposition in some quarters to deny both the necessity and the power for the issue of bonds at all."

And yet the President does not repeat his request for authority to issue suitable bonds or to retire legal tenders when they are redeemed. Instead of that he simply says that so long as no better way is provided the authority conferred by the act of 1875 "will be utilized whenever and as often as it becomes necessary to maintain a sufficient reserve, and in abundant time to save the credit of our country and make good the financial declarations of our government." He has called the attention of Congress to the subject with all due respect heretofore, and it has done nothing. It has left him under a very disagreeable necessity, and he may be excused if he does not mince matters in stating the situation and his duty in circumstances for which Congress and not he is responsible.—Chicago Herald.

Free Fuel a Necessity!

It should go without saying that every bushel of coal which Americans directly or indirectly use is now taxed.

"Protectionists" intimate that because there is no duty on anthracite coal it is not affected by the tariff. But it is certain that if the present tax was taken off bituminous coals the prices of anthracite would come down. The tariff on imported soft coals tends to exclude them from many markets, and thus to give anthracite a virtual monopoly.

The tax on all coals is, moreover, complex. It is repeated every time we buy any article in making which coal is used. And this oft-multiplied tax greatly increases the cost of living to every one in America.

Free coal is a pressing necessity to our manufacturers—to enable them to produce their fabrics cheaply enough to compete with foreign goods in both the home and foreign markets. It is necessary to lighten the cost of transporting farm products to market, which cost is deducted from the very slim profits now realized by our farmers. It is a necessity for our steam-shipping. Free coal would also be an inestimable boon to all householders, especially to the poor.

The Senate should pass the free coal bill next week, before winter's blizzards begin to blow.

Hard Times and Parties.

Not even McKinley proposes to re-enact the McKinley tariff. There is no talk of renewing the silver-purchase act. If a new force bill is to be passed, the Republican leaders are keeping their intentions from the public. What, then, was the cause of the Democratic overturn? Will not the "hard times," for which the parties in power are always held responsible, sufficiently account for the remarkable voting of 1894? The hard times were felt in every part of the country, and in every part of the country there was the same story of Democratic disaster. This is nothing new. No matter what party in power, nor what causes at the root of trade depression, it is as natural for the voters to seek for a remedy in a change of administration as it is for a drowning man to grasp at straws.—Philadelphia Record.

Tariff Reform Stands.

It is hard to understand how Republicans can have the nerve to declare that they will not bother with the tariff, after their calamity howls to the workingmen in the last campaign.

But they have; and as abandonment of McKinleyism is a good thing in any party, all we can say is: Push it along.

William L. Wilson has been defeated. Grover Cleveland has been abused and caricatured. They can smile, for the mighty deed of tariff reform stands.

Republicans know that tariff reform will not now go backward. They are cunning enough to see that after the new tariff is tried business and industry will forbid a reversal to trammeled trade.

It is a glorious victory and the temporary defeat of Democratic candidates is nothing in comparison.

From a Republican Authority.

The Chicago Tribune predicts that "when the Republican National convention meets in June of 1896, to tell the voters what the Republican party will do if successful in the fall, neither Senator Cullom nor any other man will demand that the McKinley bill be made the issue of the campaign, and that the people be asked to vote, not against the Wilson-Gorman bill, but for the McKinley bill. Not one of them will dare to do it. He will remember 1890 and 1892, and will refuse to blunder a third time."

Helpless Ten Weeks

"I was attacked with acute rheumatism and was laid up in the house ten weeks. My right arm was withered away to skin and bone, and I had almost lost the use of it. A friend advised me to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, which I did, and by the time the first bottle was used I was feeling a little better. I could see and feel a great change. The flesh was returning to my arm and the soreness was leaving my body and limbs. Every spring and fall since, we have used from three to six bottles in our family. I find to use Hood's Sarsaparilla is cheaper than to pay doctor's bills. I am thankful that I have found a medicine which will help a man who has rheumatism. It keeps me in good health." Sunday Drinking in Scotland.

I heard the other day of a novel method of evading the Sunday-closing act which has come into favor in Scotland. The would-be evader of the law goes to an inn Sunday night and books a bedroom. He pays his half-crown, or whatever it may be, and departs. No law compels him to sleep in the bed he has engaged. On the Sabbath morn he returns to take his ease in the inn. He does not come alone, but brings with him other thirsty souls to spend the day with him, and then it is a case of "Willie brewed a peck o' maut." In some localities the hotels are crammed to overflowing on Sunday with "bona fide travelers" of this new type and their equally bona fide guests. So difficult is it to make people sober by act of Parliament!—London Truth.

THE WRITING WOMAN.

A Delightful Comparative Study with the Writing Man.

When a man writes he wants pomp and circumstance and eternal space from which to draw. If he writes at home he needs a study or a library, and he wants the key lost and the keyhole pasted over so that nobody can disturb him. His finished products are of much importance to him, and, for a time, he wonders why the planets have not changed their orbits or the sunshine acquired a new brilliancy because he has written something by a cast-iron method.

A woman picks up some scraps of a copy book or the back of a pattern, sharpens her pencil with the scissors or gnaws the end sharper. She takes an old geography, tucks her foot under her, sucks her pencil periodically, and produces literature.

She can write with Genevieve pounding out her exercises on the piano, with Mary buzzing over her history lesson for to-morrow, Tommy teasing the baby, and the baby pulling the cat's tail. The domestic comes and goes for directions and supplies, but the course of true love runs on, the lovers woo and win, and the villains kill and die, among the most commonplace surroundings.

A man's best efforts, falling short of genius, are apt to be stilted, but the woman who writes will often, with the stump of a pencil and amid the distractions above mentioned, produce a tender bit of a poem, a dramatic situation, or a page of description that, though critics rave, lives on, travels through the exchanges, and finds a place in the scrapbooks of the men and women who know a good thing when they see it, whether there is a well-known name signed to it or not.—Boston Advertiser.

THE ISLAND OF CORFU.

Where It Was Hoped the Czar Might Regain His Health.

During the last sickness of the Czar one of the places where it was hoped he might recover his health was the Island of Corfu, one of the Ionian group, belonging to Greece. A magnificent palace was there offered to him by his brother-in-law, King George. The Czar, however, who knew that the end was near, declined the offer, preferring to die in his own land.

THE ROYAL PALACE, CORFU.

Corfu is the most northerly of the Ionian islands and has an area of 227 square miles. The climate is dry and healthful and the valleys are very fertile. Many centuries before Christ Corfu was a leading maritime power and disputed supremacy with the Corinthians, by whom it was originally colonized. In 229 B. C. the island fell into the hands of the Romans and afterward belonged successively to the Eastern Empire, the Normans, Venetians, French and English. In 1864 it was ceded to Greece and has since been a nomarchy of that kingdom.

"ACHILLEION," THE PALACE OF THE EMPRESS OF AUSTRIA AT CORFU.

There are numerous palaces on the island, several belonging to the King of Greece and one to the Empress of Austria. The capital of the island is beautifully situated on a promontory, and has a population of 20,000. It is the seat of a Catholic and a Latin bishop. Off this city a naval battle was fought 666 B. C., and this is said to be the first naval engagement on record.

Music and Science.

Sir Charles Lyell, that devout man of science, used to say that he liked music, for it allowed him to go on thinking his own thoughts. So it evidently did, for Frances Power Cobbe writes of him that, at a great musical party, he sat beside her and conversed thus in every interval in the music of Mendelssohn and Handel:

"Agassiz has made a discovery. I can't sleep for thinking of it. He finds traces of the glaciers in tropical America."

Here intervened a sacred song, but at the moment it was ended he began, as if he had not once taken his mind from the class of subjects he loved most:

"Well, as I was saying, you know 230,000 years ago the eccentricity of the earth's orbit was at one of its maximum periods, and we were 11,000,000 miles farther from the sun in winter, and the cold of those winters must have been intense, because heat varies, not according to direct ratio, but the squares of the distances."

"Well," said Miss Cobbe, "then the summers were as much hotter?"

Here came a sacred song, and with its last note Sir Charles began again: "No, the summers weren't. They couldn't have conquered the cold."

"Then you think the astronomical 230,000 years corresponded with the glacial period? Is that time enough for all the strata since?"

(Another selection from Handel.)

"I don't know. Perhaps we must go back still farther."

And so the strange medley of astronomy and music continued. It was easy to see which was Sir Charles' darling!—Youth's Companion.

Cost of Running Trains.

Probably few travelers, even those who daily have occasion to use the railways, have any adequate idea of the cost of running trains. The cost may differ, and doubtless does differ greatly with the varying conditions, but the recently published figures of one of the extensive Western systems are instructive. The Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway, operating 6,147 miles of road, has made public an analysis of expenses per revenue train mile run for the past two years, the total miles run being 31,750,418 in 1893, and 29,692,470 in 1894.

The items include repairs to locomotives and cars, station service, train service, locomotive service, train and station supplies, fuel, oil and waste and miscellaneous expenses. The total operating expenses were 96.46 per cent. per revenue train mile in 1893, and 92.67 cents in 1894. The revenue from passengers, per train mile run, was only 91.51 cents in 1893, and 90.32 cents in 1894, or less than cost. But there was a profit on freight, the revenue per mile run being $1.5701 in 1893, and $1.5834 in 1894, and out of this margin between receipts and expenditures per mile has to come the return for the enormous investment in road rolling stock, structures and other property. Stated in a general way, it costs about a dollar a mile, actual operating expenses, to run a train, without allowing any return on cost of road or equipment.—Providence Journal.

LIKED HIS PREACHING.

He Had Heard Him Often and Enjoyed His Supper.

A hard-featured man, dressed in a new suit of very cheap black, called at the house of a well-known clergyman, and upon giving his name was invited to take a seat in the gentleman's study.

"I have a few days to spend in town," said the visitor, "and I did not want to leave without calling and paying my respects to you. I have heard you preach many a time."

"Yes," said the parson, beginning to take an interest in the visitor.

"I like your preaching, and, though I do not belong to your church, yet I must say you preach the best sermon I ever heard. There are so very few good preachers now, very few in whose uprightness we can place trust, that when we meet one of the right kind we like to express our appreciation."

"Yes," the good man repeated, and as the bell tinkled he rose and said, "Come, my friend, and take some lunch with me."

The visitor was only too happy, and, seated at the table, began to eat with an avidity that attracted the host's attention.

"You say that you have heard me preach many a time," remarked the minister.

"Oh, yes," the man replied, conveying an ample allowance of mashed potatoes into his mouth.

"I don't remember seeing you at my church. I suppose you have heard me in the country?"

"No," said the visitor, helping himself to beans; "not in the country."

"Certainly not in town?"

"Well, sorter yes and sorter not. You know you preached at the prison for some time. I was there for stealing a horse and cart, and finished my time today. Thank you for the bread."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

At Play.

It is good to read of great men at their playtime. Southey, when asked to write in an album, set down at once:

Birds of a feather
Flock together,
Vide the opposite page;
But do not thence gather
That I'm of like feather
With all the brave birds in this cage.

A lady who saw him when she was a child was always proud to remember that he made "a poem" for her. She was about 3 years old, and her besetting sin, grammatically considered, was saying I are. Southey took her on his knee, and would not let her go until she had learned these lines, made up on the spur of the moment:

A cow's daughter is called a calf,
And a sheep's child a lamb,
Little children must not say I are,
But should always say I am!

This was afterward repeated to Southey, but doggerel though it was, he had too much common sense and real dignity to be ashamed of it.

"When my children were little," he said, laughing, "I used to make such things daily. There have been hundreds such forgotten."

A novelty being placed upon the market is a new adaptation of the incandescent light for the purposes of the desk. Upon the top of the desk is a sliding frame which allows the light to be placed in a desirable position. The light is placed longitudinally in a horizontal cylindrical ground glass frame. Over this is placed upon top a sheet of perforated metal. This is for the purpose of protecting the hand or other substances from the heat common to the incandescent lamp. In front is a bronze apron which completely shades the eyes from the light; the results being that the full volume of light is thrown down upon the desk, and a full utility in the way of effect is thereby realized.—Hardware.

Why Shoes Are Cheap.

Not only is the old-fashioned shoemaker disappearing from New York, but even the retail shoedealer is being squeezed out. Instead one finds the wholesale shoe manufacturer vending at various shops his own product. The result is cheaper shoes to the consumer, and probably nowhere on earth does one get better wearing or better looking shoes for the money than the ready-made shoes of this town.—New York Sun.

Unrecognized Languages.

Young people are prone to form languages for their own use; and of 150 specimens of the kind published by the "Am Ur-quell," a German folk lore journal, a large portion are those of boys and girls; while others were collected from thieves, peasants, and secret societies. For example, there is "Medical Greek," used by medical students; "Dog Latin" or the speech of a baby learning to talk; "Crane language," used in Denmark; "Sa-la language," used in China; "Robber language," "B-language," "Language of the Cat's Elbow," and so on. Many of them are the ordinary language of the neighborhood, modified by the insertion of syllables, a plan which schoolboys often follow. A case in point is the "Gibberish, or Hog Latin, of American children;" for instance, "Willus yoovus govus withusmeevus?" for "Will you go with me?" Others again are formed by replacing the letters of a word by others, as in the "Tut language" of Texas, and the "Guitar language" of Hungary.

Phases from Scott and Others.

In spite of Scott's continued popularity, few people remember that from "Old Mortality" we have "A sea of upturned faces," and Byron is never thanked for "Flesh and blood can't bear it." The "most humorous and least exemplary of British parsons" is known to have thought "They order things better in France" and "God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb," but we seldom credit him with "I saw the iron enter into his soul." Yet that keen image of grief, so often on our lips, may also be found in the "Sentimental Journey."

Cowper is comparatively little read—the immortal "John Gilpin" always excepted—therefore we may be forgiven if the source of "hand and glove" or "Her dear five hundred friends" has slipped our memories. The same may be said of Rogers' "To know her was to love her," Congreve's "Married in haste and repent at leisure," Farquhar's "Over the hills and far away," and Southey's "March of intellect." Sir Philip Sidney, who was poet, philosopher, and, best of all, hero, should share a better fate. How many can tell that it was he who first said in English, "God helps those who help themselves?"—The Cornhill Magazine.

Half Girl, Half Fish.

In the Swiss colony, near St. Floren, Ala., can be seen a beautiful young girl wheeled around in a perambulator, the lower portion of which is covered. She has never been seen outside of this buggy except by her own parents, although she has enjoyed perfect health during the sixteen years of her life. She is unusually bright and intelligent, and from her carriage thoroughly enjoys the society of young people of her age. The reason that the girl is doomed to spend her days in the confines of her buggy is that she is a realistic mermaid. Before her birth her mother was badly frightened by a shark while crossing the Atlantic Ocean, and the lower part of the child's body is that of a fish. Her father, Anton Zimri, is a highly successful grape grower and has become well off as wealth is counted in this section, but no surgical treatment has yet been found that can devise a means for correcting the deformity of his daughter. She has none of the characteristics of a fish, and has no more fondness for water than is usually possessed by girls of her age.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

They Were Numbered.

The Sulten poured forth the tender old story in passionate phrases. "You are the—" He paused and pressed his hand to his brow. Turning to his faithful attendant he whispered hoarsely: "I'll trouble you," he said, "for the reading of the turnstile. How? Oh, yes Thank you. You are—" Again he addressed the blushing maiden he had asked to share his fortune. "The one hundred and twenty-seventh girl I ever loved." Which goes to show that all things may be reduced to a system.—Detroit Tribune.

An Artist's Peculiar House.

Meissonier's house in Paris, built on his own designs is being pulled down to give place for a six-story dwelling. It was unlike any other house in Paris, and yet was original without being eccentric. Its windows on the street were only loopholes and within was a court in the Renaissance style which was the real front. The effect was that of a slight contempt for the world and a tendency toward seclusion. Meissonier had hoped that his house might be made into a public museum after his death.

Women in the World.

A French scientist figures that the number of women in the world is nearly equal to that of men. In France the numbers approach more nearly to equality than in any other country, there being 1,007 women for 1,000 men. For 1,000 men in Sweden there are 1,004 women, and in Greece only 933 women. In the French colony at Reunion there are 957 Creole women for 1,000 provisional Frenchmen, colored men included. In Hongkong there are 1,000 men for 336 women.

A Gross Act of Cruelty.

Why should we be cruel to ourselves? It is a piece of senseless inhumanity, for instance, for any one of us to inflict upon his bowels and stomach the convulsive, griping, violent action of a drastic cathartic. Many people enamored of pills, powders, and potions are continually doing this. They are only "keeping up the agony," perpetuating the disturbance by this foolish course. Why don't they take Hostetter's Stomach Bitters and get thoroughly and promptly set right? This supreme laxative never gripes, never produces violent effects of any sort. Yet it is very effective and brings about permanent results. For liver complaint, dyspepsia, nervousness, lack of vitality, rheumatic and kidney complaints, it is eminently serviceable. In old age and to accelerate convalescence it is strongly to be commended. Use it for malaria.

Something That Won't Do at Whist.

Oh, no, it would never do to have a husband and wife partners at the whist table. It is a well-known fact that people who have played partners at whist are forever after either open or covert enemies. Think, then, of the terrible consequence in case the partners were man and wife! The wife would lecture her husband all night and every night on how he ought to have played, and the husband would make a bear of himself, and all because she happened to trump his trick or failed to return his lead. Oh, no, 'twould never do. The divorce courts are overworked as it is.—Boston Transcript.

THERE is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from ten drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address, F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O. Sold by Druggists, 75c.

Odd Phases of Sunstroke.

"A peculiar phase of sunstroke," said one of Philadelphia's most eminent physicians, "is that a subject does not succumb to the attack till some hours after it occurs. The only explanation that medical science can give is that a sunstroke consists in a disintegration of the blood corpuscles, and considerable time elapses before the disintegrated blood reaches the little nerve center in the brain which acts as a governor on the heat system of the body. The flow of blood finally paralyzes the heat center, and the heat runs riot, raising the temperature of the body to a fearful height within a few minutes." As an instance of heat prostrations the doctor cited the statistics of the British army in India, where the great majority of sunstrokes take effect between 7 and 9 o'clock in the evening.—Philadelphia Record.

Fatal Scratch of a Rose Thorn.

Mrs. Mary Bannon died recently at the home of her son, John Bannon, about fourteen miles north of Nevada, from the scratch of a rose thorn. She was 92 years and 6 months old, and was up to the time of her injury in good health. She was working in her rose bed and scratched the back of her finger on the right hand on a briar. The hand soon became swollen, which spread to the shoulder, and the hand and arm became discolored. She lingered in great agony from that time until her death. Mrs. Bannon lived out of any church up to about one year ago, when she united with the Christian Church. This fact created such a sensation that the neighbors for miles around turned out to witness the immersion in Tucker Lake, near her home.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The Late Editor Walters.

The third of the Walters, the great family of London newspaper publishers, has passed away. The grandfather of the dead John Walters founded the London Times over one hundred years ago. The father made the journal a power in the land, and his eldest son made it famous all over the world as "The Thunderer." The prosecution of Parnell upon the strength of the forged Piggot letters almost wrecked Walters' fortune and prestige; but by his wonderful alertness and vigor he regained very nearly all his old influence. He was throughout his lifetime an uncrowned sovereign of the English public, and in his death there has been silenced one of the most commanding voices of liberal British Toryism—Philadelphia Record.

THE BUSINESS MAN'S LUNCH.

Hard Work and Indigestion go Hand in Hand.

Concentrated thought, continued in, robs the stomach of necessary blood, and this is also true of hard physical labor.

When a five horse-power engine is made to do ten horse-power work something is going to break. Very often the hard-worked man coming from the field or the office will "bolt" his food in a few minutes which will take hours to digest. Then too, many foods are about as useful in the stomach as a keg of nails would be in a fire under a boiler. The ill-used stomach refuses to do its work without the proper stimulus which it gets from the blood and nerves. The nerves are weak and "ready to break," because they do not get the nourishment they require from the blood, finally the ill-used brain is morbidly wide awake when the overworked man attempts to find rest in bed.

The application of common sense in the treatment of the stomach and the whole system brings to the busy man the full enjoyment of life and healthy digestion when he takes Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets to relieve a bilious stomach or after a too hearty meal, and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery to purify, enrich and vitalize the blood. The "Pellets" are tiny sugar-coated pills made of highly concentrated vegetable ingredients which relieve the stomach of all offending matters easily and thoroughly. They need only be taken for a short time to cure the biliousness, constipation and slothfulness, or torpor, of the liver; then the "Medical Discovery" should be taken in teaspoonful doses to increase the blood and enrich it. It has a peculiar effect upon the lining membranes of the stomach and bowels, toning up and strengthening them for all time. The whole system feels the effect of the pure blood coursing through the body and the nerves are vitalized and strengthened, not deadened, or put to sleep, as the so-called celery compounds and nerve mixtures do—but refreshed and fed on the food they need for health. If you suffer from indigestion, dyspepsia, nervousness, and any of the ills which come from impure blood and disordered stomach, you can cure yourself with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery which can be obtained at any drug store in the country.

Deshler, the strangers came in again and a few minutes after starting, demanded their money. They were answered that they had but little money, but would give up what they had. But the robbers, with revolvers drawn, swore they would not take their word for it, but would kill them and be sure of all they had, and began firing. One of them stood at the open door with revolver to prevent escape. Reesch reached for his revolver, but before he could shoot, the one-eyed man struck a match so he saw the revolver and knocked it from Reesch's hand. It went off as it fell, the ball going into the floor. It was picked up and Reesch was shot with it. They kept firing at Reesch and Brown, striking matches to see by. Harris tried to escape, but was prevented by the man at the door. If he had had a revolver, he could easily have killed this man by the flashes of guns and the matches. Reesch died, and Brown, shot full of holes, went next, and the murderers went for Harris. They lit another match, so as to see him and one said, "You s-n of a b—h, you've got to go too," put the revolver close to him and fired, striking near the right breast, the ball going clear through He was knocked down wit a club. But he got up and tried to get out, when they shot him again. Then the tall man with the fur collar shot him and he fainted and fell. He became conscious as he felt them going through his pockets. His hand was lying over his heart, and helplessly fell off, which the one eyed man, who had hit a match just then, saw and said, "The d—d s-n of a b—h is not dead yet. Give him s me more," and they shot him more, and he lost consciousness again. He remembers dragging himself from where he fell near the door, to the corner where Brown lay. Then he came to, and was found, as stated before, by the train men seeing a hat at the car door. He has eight wounds made by six shots. Four were by the two that went clear though the body, the second being from the back. Three are in the head and another in the back. Two bullets, a 44 and a 38, have been taken out, and two more 38's taken from his clothes. He don't know when the murderers got out of the car, but supposes it was soon after they gave him the last shots.

Yesterday, the officers at Fostoria thought they knew where the four men lived, at a town not far away, and the marshal from Garrett went up to help identify them. Ex Sheriff Ralston also stood ready to go if needed. There is hope that they may be caught.

IN MEMORIAM.

Winifred and Edna Hebel.

Winifred, daughter of Michael and Sophia Hebel, was born May 18, 1894. She was a most lovable child, but was a sufferer nearly all her short existence, though carefully watched by loving parents. She died Nov. 8, 1894, at the age of 5 months and 21 days.

Little Edna, the second child, died of diphtheria, though every effort by anxious parents was made to save her tender life. The Lord deemed it best, according to His infinite wisdom, to take her away, just one week after the death of her baby sister, Nov. 15. She was born Jan. 14, 1891, her age being 3 years, 11 months and 1 day.

Forever here our rest shall be,
Jesus, close to thy bleeding side;
This all our hope and all our plea,
For us the Savior died.

To the grieving parents: "Cast thy burdens upon the Lord and He shall sustain thee: He shall never suffer the righteous to be moved." Psa. 55, 22.

Still on the Lord thy burdens roll,
Nor let a care remain;
His mighty arm shall bear thy soul,
And all thy griefs sustain.

Obituary.

Mrs Ella Mardick Hoffman was born in Indianapolis Sept. 12, 1867, and died at Auburn, Ind., Nov. 23, 1894, at the age of 27 years, 2 months and 11 days. She grew to womanhood in Indianapolis, receiving her education in the public schools. She graduated in the city high school in February, 1887, standing highest in a class of fifty. For two years she was employed as a copyholder on the Indianapolis Daily News. She was married to Luther Hoffman, Aug. 7, 1889, when they removed to Minneapolis, where for four years Mr. Hoffman was engaged in teaching, then spent a year at Ithaca, N Y., where he was attending Cornell University. They resided here during the past summer. Mrs. Hoffman was the mother of three children, two girls and a boy. The last, Harold Alexander, died Nov. 20, being only 12 days old. Of course it was a great shock to the mother in her weakened condition, and three days later, she passed from earth. Her remains were taken to the old home at Indianapolis, where they rest beside those of her father, in the beautiful Crown Hill cemetery. Ten days later, Nov. 30, the second child, Urania, died at the age of 2 years and 5 months. Both little ones rest in Evergreen cemetery. The young wife and mother and the two little ones so suddenly snatched away, are a bereavement of more than ordinary weight and sadness and Mr. Hoffman has the sympathy of all.

Washington Letter.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3, '94.

No message ever written by President Cleveland was more attentively listened to than that sent in to-day. The general topics treated by the message, including the foreign relations of the government, were all that any democrat could desire, and the financial recommendations cannot be fully understood until considered in connection with Secretary Carlisle's annual report, to be sent to Congress to-morrow, which contains the details of the plan for a reform of the currency of the country, which the President so strongly endorses in his message. What will be the result of these financial recommendations it will be impossible to say until the sentiment of the democrats has had time to become apparent.

Speaker Crisp looked quite as good-natured when he rapped the House to order as he could possibly have looked had a majority of the house been as fortunate as himself in getting re elected, and his own re-election to the speakership been assured. Indeed, the most noticeable feature on the democratic side of the House, aside from the entirely too numerous empty chairs, was the prevailing good nature of those who were defeated last month. If the republicans expected to see an array of long faces they were disappointed.

There have been a number of informal conferences of democratic senators and representatives for the purpose of discussing the probability of reaching an agreement on a program for the session, and there is some talk of holding a joint caucus and requiring every man who attends to pledge himself to stand by whatever program the caucus adopts. If pledges could be secured from a sufficient number to control both House and Senate that would be an excellent idea, but it is certain that there are six or more democratic senators who would not pledge themselves.

Like numerous other fake stories, that asserting that President Cleveland was offended with Admiral Walker because of the report he made on affairs in Hawaii, has been disapproved in a striking manner by the official order placing Admiral Walker at the head of the Light House Board, a position that is considered by naval officers on of the most desirable under the government. The President seems to have a special liking for this method of knocking out silly stories. It is much better and far more convincing than a stereotyped denial.

Treasury officials take no stock in the stories that Congress will refuse to appropriate the money needed to put the income tax into operation, for the very simple reason that there are no more opponents of that tax in either Senate or House than there were when it was incorporated in the tariff bill. That is the common sense view of the matter. If the opponents of the tax could not prevent its being included in the tariff bill, they certainly cannot prevent an appropriation to put it into effect. There is reason, too, for the belief that Senator Hill, who led the fight against the income tax in the House, will not only refuse to aid in trying to defeat the appropriation but will himself vote for it, as he is on record as opposing any and all attempts to embarrass officials by withholding appropriations asked for, to be used in carrying out existing laws.

Representative Cooper, of Florida, thinks the proper way to fill the office of postmaster is to have him elected by the voters of his town or township, and he proposes to push a bill providing the reform. He is also strongly in favor of the adoption of some system of currency, either that proposed by Secretary Carlisle or something else upon which a majority can get together, and of a bill provididg for the building of the Nicaragua canal. He says that if he could have his way he would make this session of Congress, short as it will be, memorable in the history of the democratic party. It's a pity there are not more democrats of the same mind.

Although nothing can be officially stated, because no official action has yet been taken, there is little room for doubt that the sub-committees which were sent to Cleveland, Ohio, to investigate charges against Judge Ricks, of having appropriated fees properly belonging to the government to his own use, will in its report to the full Judiciary Committee of the House take the ground that the charge was proven, in fact, virtually admitted by Judge Ricks himself. It is thought that the question of whether impeachment proceedings shall be instituted will be left for the full committee to decide. The committee will make its report to the house before the holidays, unless something not now expected shall occur to prevent, and it is expected to favor impeachment.

The sugar scandal has raised its ugly head again, and the same democratic senators whose names were most conspicuously smirched during the prepanation of the sugar schedule of the tariff bill are again figuring in the rumors in a manner that is decidedly unpleasant to democrats generally, however the trio of senators may look at the matter. Many democrats are in favor of settling this business for good and all by just putting all sugar on the free list.

Two Lives Saved.

Mrs. Phoebe Thomas, of Junction City, Ill., was told by her doctors she had consumption and that there was no hope for her, but two bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery completely cured her, and she says it saved her life. Mr Thomas Eggers, 139 Florida St., San Francisco, suffered from a dreadful cold, approaching consumption. He tried without result, everything else, then bought one bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery and in two weeks was cured. He is naturally thankful. It is such results, of which these are samples, that prove the wonderful efficacy of this medecine in coughs and colds. Free trial bottles at Robbins & McCord's drugstore. BLISS STILL WHINING

Bliss is still whining about the election, the source of all his trouble being the cold fact that he once got one-third enough votes to give him an office, while the other fellows got a thousand or two more. So he got mad and charged the election officers with counting him out. We explained to him how impossible this was, for Bliss is a comparative stranger, not having been here more than about long enough to give him a chance to vote for himself. Besides, no matter how long he had been here, he has always shown a lamentable degree of ignorance. So we set about explaining to him that Indiana election laws were perfectly fair, with no chance for "counting out" anybody. Besides the inspector, who may be either a republican, a democrat or a populist, there are two judges of opposite politics, and two poll clerks, also of opposite politics. Then when the counting begins, the two election sheriffs, also of opposite politics, are allowed to go into the polling place and see that there is a fair count. The ingenuity of man could not devise a fairer method. But Bliss says they cheated him. How could they? If a republican counted a vote wrong, the democrat would catch him at it, or in the case of Jackson township, a populist might catch him, for we gather from what Bliss says that all populists are honest.

We explained this all fully, and he has not been able to find a flaw in either the facts or the argument, But still he whines, for what would Bliss be, if deprived of his whine? So last week he slides off onto other corrupt election methods, including the use of money, and talks as if we had also denied that money was used. This, we never denied. All parties, including the populists, used money in the campaign just past. But it is not easy to use as much as formerly, for the democratic Australian law makes it more difficult, Bliss goes on to call up a number of cases to prove that we had lied in what we said, But he includes only things we did not mention, such as the "blocks of five" under the old law. All the matters we touched on were those of "counting out" and the work and make up of election boards. If we made one error in what we did say, let him show it.

Again, after setting up a man of straw, in order to appear to have something that he could knock down, then he turns back once more to the question of "watchers," and repeats his former silly statement that "under the old election law, all parties had watchers at the polls, but the legislature, fearing that populist watchers might count someone out, had the law changed so as to exclude the populist watchers." The weakness of the man here shows to good advantage. There were no populists in 1889 when the new law was made. So, of course, the legislature did not "exclude" them. Neither did the "old law allow all parties to have watchers." The old law is the same as the new on that point, as we showed him before, the only difference being that in the old law, the "watchers" were picked up at the time and chosen to go in and "watch" while under the new law, we have "election sheriffs" to do the watching This is fairer than the old way, for these sheriffs are legally recognized officers and are paid by the public for doing this work. In both laws, the men were of "opposite parties" and taken from the two parties that cast the highest vote. "All parties" were never allowed watchers. Bliss is ignorant

He then says, "Barns believes that the dishonest men and fools are in the populist party." What did we ever say to carry this idea? He cannot give a word. We would as soon have an intelligent populist count our vote, as a member of any other party. We would as soon have our vote counted in Jackson where the law gave them a half of the election board and "watchers" as in any other precinct. Bliss must display less ignorance and less disregard of truth if he wishes to maintain the respect of the voters of any party.

Then comes a flat falsehood, aimed at the board of commissioners. He says, in speaking of the recount by the board, of the contested trustee vote in Jackson township, "The board threw out six populist votes because they were stamped wrong, for they ruled that to stamp the plow and hammer was illegal." Bliss knows this is not so, for he stood by when this recount was made, and saw how these irregular ballots were stamped. There were republican and populist votes thrown out, because the voters had stamped twice or more on the eagle or the plow. Such ballots have been repeatedly declared illegal and Bliss stood by and made no protest. What reason can he then give for this assertion, except a malicious desire to tell a falsehood about the board? And how could they rule that "to stamp the plow and hammer was illegal?"

He says of our remarks about Sim Coy, "Barns would lead us to believe that these men (Coy and Bernhamer) were imprisoned unjustly." Here, we cannot excuse him for ignorance. for we distinctly spoke of this as "good work" in the article he claims to be discussing and spoke in praise of the two DeKalb U. S. jurors who voted to convict. The rest of his article is even sillier than what we have mentioned—too silly to notice.

Ate Raw Goose.

A strange case is reported from Jackson township by M. A. Carnahan. On Friday a strange man was seen at the Dutch Ridge school house, picking up and eating the crumbs scattered by the school children. He appeared thin and weak, like a man half starved. Later in the day, he was seen going across Jim Rowley's fields with a goose under his arm, and he was picking it, letting the feathers fly about. At one place he appears to have stopped to finish this part of the job, for Mr. Carnahan found a big pile of feathers at the side of the road. After getting the feathers off, the man went into Stone's swamp, and was seen eating away at the raw goose. That evening Mrs. Carnaham found him in the straw stack, where he had crawled in and tried to cover himself up. She and some others tried to find out who he was, but he gave them no satisfaction. They told him if he needed help, they would get him to some place where he could be cared for. But he did not seem to want help, and finally dug his goose out from under the straw and chaff and went away with it under his arm. Mrs. Tucker, who lives on the Charley Glazier farm, saw him in the morning and spoke to him and he answered her salutation, but to the others he did not seem inclined to talk. Mrs. Freeman, among others, saw him carrying the goose under his arm, and thought he had a pig he was taking away. It was Jim Rowley's goose, as he missed one from his flock that day. He was seen gathering crumbs that evening at the Freeman school house and it is believed he staid that night in Prine Ferguson's barn. The people think he is some crazy man who has wandered from his home, or escaped from some asylum. If so, the officers should look into the matter, and get him back. If he were a sane man, he would likely ask for food and even accept shelter, and the good people down there would see that he had both. But if insane, he may wander about in this severe season till death ends his sufferings.

THAT'S QUEER!

You say a collar and cuff that are waterproof?

Yes.

And perspiration will not affect them?

Yes.

And when dirty you need only wipe them off with a wet cloth or sponge?

Yes.

Wonderful! How are they made?

A linen collar covered on both sides with waterproof "CELLULOID." Looks exactly like a linen collar.

Is it the only waterproof collar and cuff made?

No, but it is the only one made with the linen interlining and consequently the only one that can give entire satisfaction, because it is the best.

How can I know that I get the right kind?

Because every piece is stamped as follows:

TRADE CELLULOID MARK.

Inquire for that and refuse anything else, or you will be disappointed.

Suppose my dealer does not have them?

He probably has, but if not, send direct to us, enclosing amount. Collars 25c., Cuffs 50c. State size, and whether collar wanted is stand-up or turned-down.

SCENES OF BEAUTY.

LOVELY DISPLAYS OF HOLIDAY GOODS IN AUBURN'S SHOW WINDOWS.

We last week mentioned briefly the fact that many of our business men were displaying lovely things in their windows. Since then much improvement even on these has been made by the enterprising proprietors. It would be but justice to give a sketch of some of them. We should say in advance that Bishop & Lackey have a far more beautiful and extensive display than is seen in many of the larger cities.

BROWN, CULBERTSON AND BOLAND

DISPLAY in lovely style, cutlery, granite ware, teapots and coffee pots in fine ware, knives, shears, guns, revolvers, beside a store full of stoves and all sorts of hardware goods. They keep the best. If that gun the hunter started to shoot the deer with had been bought of them, it wouldn't have gone off half cocked, away above the deer, who merely stuck up his head, sniffed the air and fled. If you want venison for dinner, buy your guns of B., C. & B.

G H. YESBERA.

SOMEBODY has said that it takes nine tailors to make a man, but G. H. Yesbera is a tailor, who can make a man look like a gentleman. Our artist caught the man's picture just as he was coming out of this popular establishment. He had come to town to trade and the ad. in the COURIER made him go over to Yesbera's to see how things looked. The lovely dislay in the window pleased him. He went in. He went in plainly dressed, but now he will carry his old suit home in a new "telescope," for he is going home around by where SHE lives.

F. J. YESBERA.

MUSIC hath charms for all, but good music cannot be driven or dragged out of a poor instrument. At Fred Yesbera's you find a large assortment of almost every popular instrument and of the latest and best kinds. Fancy this sweet-voiced lady singing to the accompaniment of an old, cracked and discordant violin. She couldn't do it. She wouldn't do it. And if she were foolish enough to try, she certainly would not receive such a shower of bouquets. No. Before she started in on the program, she would find out whether the instrument came from Yesbera's. The lovely Ferris wheel in this window was made by Will Champion, assisted by Fred, and it goes its rounds loaded with fine jewelry and silverware.

BISHOP AND LACKEY.

AMONG the many lovely things in their big show window that we did not have space to speak of fully last week, was the parlor scene in which were a bride and groom. They looked happy and had a cozy home, and everything, apparently, that heart could wish. They have just got all the lovely curtains and carpets they need at Bishop & Lackey's, and are starting out to get such other articles as they need to begin housekeeping. They have looked over the COURIER and found where they can get most of these, including those lovely ranges at Beuret's, but they have looked in vain for an ad. for furniture. So conclude they will get along with something cheap.

YEARS HAVE ROLLED BY

HERE they are again, a little older, but still happy, and still discussing the unsolved problem of where to get the best furniture for their money. We leave them to discuss it.

JONES & SON.

HERE'S good tidings for you. In this show window are always beautiful and useful things, furnishing goods for ladies and gentlemen, more than we can remember. They have dress goods, hosiery, underwear, corsets, gloves, cuffs, collars and everything fresh and neat, as well as of the latest styles. Prices are right up to the times.

ROBBINS & M'CORD.

THIS lad is happy! Look at that drum, that gun, and the armful he carries But above all, look at his face! Did you, kind father, loving mother, ever see a young, bright face kindle up and glow into broad smiles like that? We know you have, and we know you will see it again, and make some little one glad till it beams out into his face like this, if you have been able to save enough to spare from real needs. Few such stores of toys have been seen here as this popular firm has. We think our artist hit a good subject, too, in this picture. Do you recognize it? Maybe it is the good natured little lad his playmates call "Doctor Jim," little Jimmie Bowers. Watch the stream of young people go to Robbins & McCord's and you may recognize him—or some others like him—all admiring the "merry-go-round" in the window.

D A HODGE.

ON THE night before Xmas many scenes like this will occur all over the country, and many a little boy and girl will put up the little stocking at night and awake the next morning to find it full. Hodge, the jeweler, will do his share toward making them happy, though perhaps the fineness and beauty of his silverware and jewelry will appeal more strongly to the young men and young women, and to parents who wish to make a fine gift to their children.

OLDS BROTHERS.

THESE gentlemen deal in crockery, lamps, glassware, fine china, bric-a-brac and notions. In fact, more things than we can remember. This picture will give an idea of the quaint and beautiful things that go to make up a part of their varied stock. Go and see them. That is the only way to get a fair idea of what they have.

W. H. KIBLINGER CO.

CUTLERY by the bushel, and such fine cutlery and nickel and silver-plated ware. The big show window is full, making a glittering display. This lady, no doubt, has a fair amount of such articles already, but she is "just a thinking" how much nicer those articles in the show windows are than any she now has, and cost only half what she paid a few years ago.

SCHAAB BROTHERS.

AFTER the fur business. That's what this dog is after—the fur of the rat. And Schaab & Bro are after the fur trade of their patrons. For besides a big stock of carpets, dress goods and general lines of dry goods, and such, they are the leading dealers in furs of all the fashionable kinds now so popular. Look in their show window and see.

SCHAAB & MURPHY.

HOT after him is this firm, for wherever a competitor tries to climb over into their business lot, they get after him with head down, and he is glad to let them have their way. No firm in North Indiana gives better bargains, on same grade of goods, than this firm. Second door north of the Swineford, and there you are. Call in and see their goods and get prices.

F. E. DAVENPORT.

THIS WINDOW, crowded "to the gunwales" with toys and trinkets, books and albums,—with everything that makes glad the heart of the little boy or girl, as well as of older ones—this is the Davenport corner. How natural it looks! Our artist caught it just at the moment when one of the hundreds who go there to admire and to buy, had stopped, spell-bound with its beauties. There we will leave him, for we have not the heart to entice him away. We are all young when it comes to admiring the beautiful things so appropriate for Christmas gifts to those who are really young. We will not disturb him. Let him be young again himself, even in his memory. He will carry some of those gifts away to gladden the heart of some dear one.

The State Commander writes us from Lincoln, Neb., as follows: "After trying other medicines for what seemed to be a very obstinate cough in our two children we tried Dr. King's New Discovery and at the end of two days the cough entirely left them. Anyone who has children will rejoice with L. B. Mulford, of Plainfield, N. J. His little boy, five years of age, was sick with croup. For two days and nights he tried various remedies recommended by friends and neighbors. He says: "I thought sure I would lose him. I had seen Chamberlain's Cough Remedy advertised and thought I would try it as a last hope and am happy to say that after two doses he slept until morning. I gave it to him next day and a cure was affected. I keep this remedy in the house now and as soon as any of my children show signs of croup I give it to them and that is the last of it." 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Robbins & McCord. 52

THAT OCCURRED DURING THE PAST WEEK.

Bastardly Attempt to Wreck a Pennsylvania Train—Clergymen of San Francisco Will Attempt to Improve the Municipal Morals of That City—Gompers Defeated for President of the Federation.

GOMPERS REBUKED.

He Was Defeated for President of the Federation.

The delegates to the convention of the American Federation of Labor, in session at Denver, who felt aggrieved at the rulings of President Gompers and his attacks upon others while presiding over the convention, secured complete revenge by causing his defeat for re-election as president.

The election of a president was quickly done, John McBride of Columbus, Ohio, President of the Mine Workers, having received a vote of 1,162, Samuel Gompers receiving but 987 votes. Vice presidents selected were P. J. McGuire of Philadelphia, James Duncan of Baltimore, Roady Kenehan of Denver, and T. J. Elderkin of Chicago.

A. McCraith of Boston, was elected Secretary, the other candidates being James J. Linehan of Chicago, J. Mahlon Barnes of Philadelphia, and R. H. Metcalf of Cleveland. John B. Lennon of New York, was re-elected Treasurer.

The delegates decided to hold the next convention in New York city.

Samuel Gompers and P. J. McGuire were selected as fraternal delegates to the trades union congress of Great Britain. The headquarters were located in Indianapolis by a vote of 1,299, Washington receiving 726 votes. Brooklyn, Detroit, and Louisville had been named, but were later withdrawn.

A Bread and Coal War.

Port Huron (Mich.) special: A bread and coal war is on in this city, and for poor people it is a "merry war" indeed. Eight of the twelve large bakeries are selling bread at the rate of two loaves for 5 cents. This is to meet a cut made by the others, who last week reduced the price from 5 to 3 cents a loaf. Hard coal in stove size is selling at a price unheard of in Port Huron heretofore—$3.50 per ton. A short time ago the local dealers tried to raise the price from $5.50 to $5.75. One dealer refused to raise and the cut was made to bring him into line. He refused to be brought to time, however, and it is expected that coal will be down to $2 if the war is not settled soon. One Lapeer avenue baker is selling bread at 2 cents a loaf.

Attempt to Wreck a Train.

A dastardly attempt to wreck No. 5, the fast New York-Chicago limited on the Pennsylvania railroad, was made near Kirby, Ohio. Spikes were pulled, angle bars were jammed in a frog, a switch was turned and the light extinguished. This tampering was all in one place near the tower east of Kirby. Freight train No. 80 was also on the siding and was also tampered with, pins being pulled in four different places and thrown away. A track walker happened that way, thirty minutes before No. 5 was due, and discovered the damage. The frog was ruined and a new one will be required. There is no clue, but Detective Harley is investigating and is of the opinion that the deed was committed as spite work.

Municipal Morals.

San Francisco special: The clergymen of this city are arranging for the organization of a movement in this city similar to the Lexow plan, for the improvement of municipal morals. Rev. J. Cummings Smith, pastor of Trinity Presbyterian Church, who has had verbal and written communication with Dr. Parkhurst, took the initiative. A union movement has been inaugurated by the local organizations of Presbyterian, Methodist, and Baptist ministers to take concerted action. If the California Legislature does not appoint an official purification committee, the ministers will conduct the investigation themselves with the aid of the citizens generally.

A Bold Theft.

A robbery with most sensational details is reported from the town of Edinboro, Pa., to have taken place within two miles of that place. David Slocum and his wife have a reputation of being miserly. About midnight four men heavily armed entered the house and demanded their money. In spite of threats of torture, the old couple refused to reveal its hiding place. After a long search the robbers discovered the money in an old trunk. They secured nearly $10,000. There is no clew to the perpetrators of the crime.

Drowned in a Bath Tub.

Terre Haute (Ind.) special: William A. Peele, ex-Chief of the Bureau of Statistics of Indiana, was found dead in a bath tub at the Visitor's Home of St. Mary's Institute. His death was caused by drowning, as when found he was lying in such a position he could not extricate himself. Peele's home is in Indianapolis.

Mayor Hopkins.

Friends of Mayor John P. Hopkins of Chicago, are alarmed by a serious ailment affecting his throat. Arduous work during the campaign a year ago aggravated it and this has made it difficult to conquer the disease. Hoarseness has increased to such an extent that he will go East to consult specialists.

Train Robber Goes Up for Life

Los Angeles (Cal.) special: Johnson, the young rancher who pleaded guilty to complicity in the two train robberies near Roscoe, in one of which a brakeman and a passenger were killed, was sentenced to life imprisonment at San Quentin penitentiary.

Death of a Journalist.

Joseph L. Shipley, ex-president of the New England Associated Press, died of heart failure at Springfield, Mass.

Counterfeiters Captured.

William Strasbaugh and John and William Bowers were arrested at Tiffin, Ohio, for counterfeiting. They were caught in the act of making spurious coin and the entire outfit was secured. Much of the spurious coin has been circulated in the neighboring towns.

She Will Recover.

At Chicago, Celia Werthimer was caught by the hair in the shafting of a laundry and her scalp was torn off. It was at once replaced and she will recover.

Stole Her Trunk.

A great, morbidly curious throng of people crowed in front of the building at 2115 State street, Chicago, attracted by the grewsome spectacle of a man hanging from a second story window, head downward, with blood pouring from a bullet wound in his body, just above the heart, and forming a pool on the sidewalk. The man was Charles Miller, aged 20 years, who lived there and who had just been mortally shot by Maggie Tilier. He died at the Provident Hospital three hours after being shot. The body hung from the window fifteen minutes before the police came to remove the dying man. The murderess said that Miller and Freda Huntington, with whom he was living, had stolen her trunk and pet dog in Milwaukee. She demanded their return, and she claims to have shot in self-defense. All are colored.

IS SHOT DEAD.

William H. Price of Cleveland, Killed by House-Breakers.

William H. Price, the well-known member of the firm of printing press manufacturers, Chandler & Price, was almost instantly killed by a burglar at his home, 124 Hawthorn avenue, Cleveland, Ohio, at 2:30 o'clock Thursday morning. Just what occurred between the burglar and Mr. Price will probably never be known. Shots were heard, and a minute later Price was found by his son, lying with his face downward on the floor and rapidly expiring. The son, who is 17 years old, hurriedly put on some clothing and ran to the home of Dr. Jewett, on Cedar avenue, who responded to the call. Before he arrived, however, Mr. Price was dead. He had been shot through the body three times. When Price was first awakened by the burglar, he got up without disturbing any other member of the family, and on going down stairs found the rear kitchen window open. No burglars were to be seen, and he returned to his room, thinking that the burglars had been frightened away. On getting back into bed Mr. Price found his wife awake, and the two talked the affair over. After awhile all was quiet again and then Price and his wife, who were still awake, saw two men standing near a dressing case in their bed room. The men were of medium height and wore white handkerchiefs over their faces. They had on dark clothes and wore black derby hats. Price sprang from his bed, and as he did so one of the burglars shot at him three times, all of the bullets taking effect, one in the right leg near the knee, one in the stomach, and the third in the region of the heart. Price fell, and as he did so the two burglars ran out of the room. Mrs. Price was so frightened at the appearance of the burglars that she was unable to make an outcry. She is now suffering under such a nervous strain that she is unable to remember whether there were any words exchanged between her husband and the murderers or not. Mrs. Price's son heard the shots in an adjoining room, and, as stated, jumped from his bed and rushed into the room of his father and then for the doctor.

THE DIVORCE MECCA.

Fargo the Retreat for the Unhappy Married People.

Edmund Stover, of Fargo, N. D., who has reported more celebrated divorce cases during the past year than any other man in the country, is touring in the northwest. "Fargo," he says, has grown to be the "Mecca which the unhappy married people of the country seem bent on reaching." Talking on the subject of divorce in North Dakota, he said: "The general public has little idea of the magnitude of this infernal business. The number of pilgrims reaches a big figure. A careful estimate made recently, after a visit to all the lawyers in the city, places the total number who are serving time preparatory to filing actions for separation at upward of ninety. These people are mostly residents of the East, New York and Boston furnishing the largest contingent. Naturally they are all possessed of wealth and prominence who prefer to journey to the frontier to wash their linen. The constitution of North Dakota requires but three months' residence prior to the commencement of an action for divorce.

"Several ultra fashionable hotels and boarding houses of Fargo accept no patrons who are not members of the colony. The money spent in this city by these seekers after single blessedness reaches many thousands of dollars annually. Among the many cases soon to be heard there is one which will shake New York from center to circumference. A prominent State official is the plaintiff, with Burke Cockran as his counsel, and many leading New Yorkers are implicated."

COMPARISONS

As Given and Shown by the Weekly Review of Trade of R. G. Dun & Co.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade, says: By the kindness of several thousand manufacturers who forwarded statements of their pay roll for November, this year, in 1893 and 1892, to make a comparison for the earnings for that month, there is shown an increase in total payments of 15.2 per cent. over last year, but an decrease of 8.3 per cent. in comparison with 1892. A statement of hands employed shows that in the same establishments 10.2 more persons were employed than a year ago, but 8.6 per cent. less than in 1892. The average of earnings for over 250,000 hands is 4 per cent. larger than in 1893, but 13½ per cent. less than in 1892, and this statement takes no account of the hours of work in the month compared or of establishments not working at all this year. In some industries more hands are at work than in 1892, but in others the decrease is large. Contradictory changes in business are quite in order at this season. Neither larger orders in some branches nor the depression of prices in others afford a safe indication of the general movement; but the working force does not lessen more than is usual for the time of year, the demand for goods does not seem to diminish, though in most departments it is considerably below the capacity of the works in operation, and the volume of business transacted is somewhat larger in comparison with last year than in November.

A Train Robber Confesses.

Los Angeles (Cal.) special: Alva Johnson has confessed to having participated in both the Roscoe robberies of the Southern Pacific express trains. The old ranchman has been subjected to the pleas of his family and friends who hope that by confessing he may save him from the gallows. The persuasions have been kept quiet for several weeks, but he was recently led to believe that the officers had enough evidence to convict and that it meant death. So in the presence of District Attorney Dillon, one or two deputies and detectives, he left no detail untold and went over the whole crime, including both robberies at Roscoe, at one of which the fireman and a passenger were killed and several thousand dollars obtained. Johnson says that Kid Thompson was his accomplice. He told where part of the treasure was buried and the detectives dug up a box containing $505 in silver.

Cruel Fate which Befell an Old Man.

Mrs. Winslow Shearman and her daughter Mrs. Clinton Davis, who lived on a farm near Jamestown, N. Y., were murdered by unknown persons. Mrs. Shearman's husband had gone to attend the funeral of his son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Myron C. Shearman, who were killed by a train a day or two since. He returned home and was horrified to find his wife and daughter lying dead in the house. There is no clew. It is apparent that the motive was robbery, for the house was in confusion, bureau drawers having been ransacked, as if a search for money had been carried on. The murder, following so closely the violent death of two other members of the family, has nearly unseated the reason of Mr. Shearman, who is about seventy years old.

Hart's Parents Suffer.

An attempt was made to blow up the house of David Hart, father of the murderer of the Good children at Paulding, O. Three dynamite cartridges were used, but only one exploded. Had all gone off the house would have been wrecked. Hart and his family are terribly frightened, and left to go to relatives in Indiana. The Common Pleas Court at Paulding is now being adjourned from day to day, so that the murderer—Charles Hart—may be arraigned without it being publicly known in time to attempt a lynching. If he pleads not guilty his trial will take place in some neighboring county.

A Modest (?) Demand.

Senator Blanchard has introduced a bill directing the Secretary of the Treasury to refund to the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana $257,013, the amount illegally exacted of the bank in 1862 by Gen. B. F. Butler, commanding the United States Army at New Orleans at that time; $60,000 exacted in like manner by Gen. Banks in 1863, and $1,242,777 exacted by Gen. Canby in 1866, with interest on each sum at the rate of 6 per cent.

A Gruesome Find.

Some hunters in the Cherokee strip have discovered the remains of two men and a boy in a cave several miles north of Ætna, Barber County, Kan. In the pocket of one was an envelope addressed to Julius Vigiland, Hermann, Mo. All three had been shot, and their clothes had evidently been rifled, as nothing else was found on them. The condition of the bodies indicated that they must have been there for several months.

Should Say Not.

At Kokomo, Ind., a man, disguised as a Chinaman, for a joke applied for a job with a bridge gang a few miles up the Wildcat Creek. The boss, who was into the scheme, pretended to hire him. The workmen, with hammers and picks, fell on the supposed Celestial and almost killed him. He defended himself with a knife until he could throw off his disguise. He will not play Chinaman again.

All Resign.

At the meeting of the regents of the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, Michigan, the entire homeopathic faculty, consisting of Profs. D. A. MacLachlan, C. S. Mack, Hunt and Eggleston, handed in their resignations to take effect when the board desired. The resignations will not be acted on until the plan of reorganization of the homeopathic school is determind upon.

Propects for a Strike.

Springfield (Ill.) special: A secret meeting of the principal coal operators of this district was held here. It has leaked out that the meeting was for the purpose of making a reduction in the price of mining coal from 40 cents to 35 cents per ton. If the cut is made the prospects for a strike of large dimensions will be bright, as the miners say they will stand no further cut.

Howard Resigns.

George W. Howard, Vice President of the American Railway Union, has resigned and severed his connection with the union. None of the officials of the union would say what was the reason of Mr. Howard's withdrawal from the organization further than that there had been some friction between Mr. Howard and other members of the Board of Directors.

Shelbyville Murder.

R. H. Capehart, justice of the peace at Velpin, Pike country, Ind., while trying a railroad man, name unknown, for some minor offense, was struck on the head by the prisoner and almost instantly killed, the murderer escaping in the confusion. The sheriff has left in pursuit of the murderer.

The Pension Came Too Late.

Presley Orr, an old soldier of Chillicothe, Ohio, died under sad circumstances. Orr had been ill for some time and in great need. He had long been an applicant for a pension. Five minutes after his demise a mail carrier brought to his door a notification that a pension had been granted him.

Drawn Into the Knives.

John Wright, a farmer near Tappon, Ohio, while feeding a steam feed cutter undertook to pull the stalks out. The machine started, the knives catching his hand and slicing his arm in small pieces almost to the shoulder before he could extricate it. The shock may prove fatal.

Restore Alsace to France.

Washington special: The Universal Peace Union has forwarded to the Emperor of Germany a petition urging his consideration of the proposition that Germany restore to France the portion of Alsace-Lorraine whose occupants speak French.

George (Kid) Lavigne of Saginaw, Mich., knocked the pugilistic aspiration of Andy Bowen of New Orleans, into the proverbial cocked hat, in the eighteenth round, in the presence of 2,500 sports, at the Auditorium Club, New Orleans.

HOGS AND CHOLERA.

REPORT ON TREATMENT AND PREVENTION OF DISEASE.

Bureau of Animal Industry Gives the Result of Long and Thorough Investigation of Swine Plague and Other Epidemics.

Strict Quarantine Necessary.

With estimated losses of between $10,000,000 and $25,000,000 from hog cholera and swine plague in the United States, the discussion of the treatment and means of prevention of these diseases in a bulletin issued by the Agricultural Department is of great value to the farmers of this country.

The Bureau of Animal Industry has been conducting an exhaustive investigation of this subject and finds that the agents which destroy the germs of one of these fatal diseases, are also effective in the destruction of the germs of the other. Both are spread by infection and their course varies from one day to three weeks. Both are caused by bacteria. The germs of hog cholera, says the report, are very hardy and vigorous, while those of the swine plague are very delicate and very easily destroyed. The latter are found to be present in practically all herds of swine, but the former must be introduced from infected herds.

The most efficient virus remedy tried by the Government's agents is the following: Wood, charcoal, sulphur, sodium sulphate and antimony sulphide, one pound each; sodium chloride, sodium, bicarbonate and sodium hyposulphite, two pounds each. These are to be completely pulverized and mixed, and a daily dose of a large tablespoonful for each 200 pounds weight of hogs given. The medicine may be used also as a preventive of these diseases. It should be put in the feed of the whole herd. To insure more successful treatment the animals should be kept in dry and comfortable quarters away from drafts of air. Five or six months should be allowed to elapse after an outbreak before new hogs are purchased or any of the old herd sold.

The report recommends a rigid quarantining of newly-bought hogs and the prevention of their joining those already on the farm for at least six weeks. During the warm months of the year the swine should have plenty of young grass or clover; crushed or rolled wheat should be fed to the growing animals.

CORN UP, WHEAT DOWN.

The Average Farm Price of Various Agricultural Products.

The returns to the statistical division of the department of agriculture for December relate principally to the average farm price of the various agricultural products on the first day of the month. By farm prices is meant the price at the farm or at the nearest local or railway market. In comparison of these prices with commercial quotations allowance must be made for cost of handling, transportation, profits of dealers, etc. The farm price of corn averaged 45.6 cents per bushel, which is 9.1 cents higher than the corresponding price of last year, which was 36.5 cents per bushel. This price was 6.3 cents per bushel higher than the average price for the decade 1880 to 1889, and is just 4 cents higher than the average for the four years, 1890 to 1893. The average price of wheat is 49.8 cents per bushel, the lowest price in the past twenty-five years. This price is 33.9 cents less than the average for the ten yars, 1880 to 1889, and 22.1 cents less than the average for the four years, 1890 to 1893. The returns make the general price per bushel of rye 50.5 cents, which is 1.3 cents lower than the price at the same date last year. The average farm price of oats as returned for Dec. 1 this year is 4.1 cents higher than for the corresponding date last year, being 32.9 cents per bushel, against 28.8 Dec. 1, 1893. The average farm price of barley is 44.3 cents per bushel against 40.6 cents for the year 1893, or a gain of 3.7 cents. The price for 1892 was 47.24 cents. The average price of buckwheat is 56.2 cents per bushel, against 59 cents for the year 1893, or a decline of 2.8 cents. The returns show the average price of hay to be $9.18 per ton, while that of last year on the farms was $9.12.

The average condition of corn is 45.7. The condition of winter wheat on Dec. 1 averaged 89, against 91.5 in 1893 and 87.4 in 1892. In the principal winter wheat States the percentages are as follows: Michigan, 92; Indiana, 88; Illinois, 91; Kansas, 72; Nebraska, 76; California, 92. The returns of correspondents of the department make the acreage of winter wheat sown last fall 103 per cent. of the final estimate of the area harvested in 1894, which was 23,518,796 acres, a larger figure than the preliminary estimate given out in June last, which upon further investigation was found to be too low. This preliminary estimate therefore makes the area sown for the harvest of 1895, 24,224,000 acres.

A GERMAN OFFICER

Has Recently Been Put in Command of the Chinese Navy.

Among the leaders of the war in the East none is more interesting than Capt. von Henneken, the successful German officer, who, it is reported, has been put in complete command of the Chinese navy. For the past twenty-five years he has held a prominent position in the Chinese service, previous to which he was an officer in the German army. He has served as aide-de-camp to Li Hung Chang. He was on board the Kow-Shing at the time it was sunk by the Japs, and was picked out of the water. He has done good work for the Chinese in the present war, and was recently decorated in recognition of his valuable assistance.

CAPTAIN VON HENNEKEN.

HIS NOD IS LAW.

The Sultan of Turkey and How He Rules His Barbaric Land.

One of the most interesting personalities in the world just now is the Sultan of Turkey, Abdul Hamid, who stands responsible for the recent horrible massacre of from 6,000 to 10,000 Christians in Armenia. He has been Sultan since 1876, when he succeeded his brother, Murad V., who became insane and was deposed. The Sultan is a striking character. He never writes and he never reads, and despite the large number of ministers, secretaries and counselors who dance attendance on him he rarely consults. He just sits down, nods or shakes his head, and these dumb rulings of his carry power in every section of the Ottoman empire.

ABDUL-HAMID.

The Sultan is an absolute autocrat. Standing himself in eternal fear of assassination, he thinks nothing of having 10,000 men, women and children butchered if his own life and comfort may be insured thereby or if the massacre promises to guarantee the safe collection of taxes in the future or the payment of overdue moneys owing to the soldiery and army officers. The harem under Abdul Hamid is not the festive institution of old. Quality has given away to quantity even in the selection of odalisques. The Sultan has one real wife—the Sultana—who is the mother of seven children. The quantity of the odalisques kept for his benefit varies between 150 and 200—all extremely young. When they reach their 16th summer Abdul has no further use for them, and either sells them or presents them to his friends or officials. The chief objects of interest that enter into Abdul Hamid's official life are: European politics, fires in Constantinople and keeping cholera at a distance.

THE GIBBONS RESUSCITATOR.

Designed to Revive Those Apparently Dead from Electrical Shock.

Dr. P. J. Gibbons, of Syracuse, N. Y., who applied to Governor Flower for permission to use his apparatus for resuscitating victims of electricity on Murderer Wilson, who is to be executed in Auburn prison, speaking of his attempt to try the apparatus on Wilson, said that the Attorney General had notified him that neither the Governor nor the superintendent of prions nor the warden of Auburn prison had authority to grant the desired permission. Dr. Gibbons added:

DR. P. J. GIBBONS.

"My apparatus is designed to resuscitate people who have undergone electrical shock, taken poison, been long immersed in water, or have suffered from similar misadventure. To resuscitate people it is necessary simply to restore breath into them. There are a number of methods now in use for this purpose. My instrument is designed to restore suspended animation more expeditiously and more certainly than any method now in use."

Dr. Gibbons' invention is a simple double bellows. The end of the long tube is inserted in the mouth of the patient, or if this be closed, in an opening made in the throat. The patient's nose is closed, and when the handle of the bellows is raised the air rushes from the patient's lungs into one apartment of the bellows. Simultaneously the other apartment is filled with fresh air through a tube on the reverse side. This air is forced into the lungs by the compression of the handles. This is all there is to it.

THE GIBBONS RESUSCITATOR.

Dr. Gibbons says a large percentage of deaths from electricity are not instantaneous, and could be averted by using his invention. The voltage necessary to kill is not a fixed quantity. In State executions from 1,200 to 1,800 volts are used, whereas, he says, he is acquainted with one case where a man operating an electric dynamo received a shock from a current of 4,600 volts strong, and was resuscitated by ordinary methods after seven minutes. In another case Dr. Gibbons' own assistant, a Mr. Greenwood, received 1,500 volts and was restored. D'Arsonval reports a case where a man received 5,000 volts and was resuscitated after half an hour.

HEAD OF THE SYNDICATE.

John A. Stewart Organized the Purchase of the Recent Bond Issue.

John A. Stewart, sponsor of a great syndicate, who organized the purchase of the most recent bond issue of $50,000,000, is 72 years of age. His early education he received in the public schools of New York, and he was graduated from Columbia College when he was 18 years old. For ten years he was clerk of the New York Board of Education. Then he accepted a position as actuary of the United States Life Insurance Association, with which he remained eleven years. In 1864 when Assistant United States Treasurer Cisco vacated the office, Mr. Stewart was chosen by President Lincoln to fill it, which he did, discharging his duties with skill and ability. He has for many years been president of the United States Trust Company, and under his care the business of the company has grown to its present great proportions.

Canadian Fishers Expected More than President Cleveland Recommends.

According to a Victoria, B. C., dispatch President Cleveland's recommendation to Congress to pay $425,000, practically in full settlement of the claims of Canadian sealers against the United States, causes anxious speculation. When it was inofficially stated some months ago that that amount would be paid it was understood to be merely for claims presented to the Paris tribunal arising out of the seizures in Behring Sea during 1886, 1887, and 1889, there having been none in 1888. About $400,000 was the amount of claims on this account. Canadian sealers fully expect to receive large sums for the loss of prospective profits through exclusion under the modus vivendi, especially because for 1891, the first year of the arrangement, England advanced about $100,000 as indemnity. Claims of 1892 and 1893, which will be pressed against the Canadian and British Governments, amount to considerably more than $500,000.

HUSTLING HOOSIERS.

ITEMS GATHERED FROM OVER THE STATE.

An Interesting Summary of the More Important Doings of Our Neighbors—Weddings and Deaths—Crimes, Casualties, and General Indiana News Notes.

Hon. James M. Barrett.

Senator James M. Barrett of Fort Wayne, is one of the young, hustling Democrats of Northern Indiana, and is a leader among the politicians of his party. He is a member of the firm of Morris, Bell, Barrett & Morris and his ability in that line is fully attested by the success which his firm has attained in the many legal battles in which they have participated. He made his first political speech at a poll raising in the Sixth Ward in 1876, in honor of Mr. Charles A. Munson, then a candidate for Sheriff, and took an active part on the stump in every campaign since.

In 1886 he was elected Senator from Allen County by a majority of 1,937, that being the largest majority of any candidate on the Democratic County ticket. At the same election the Hon. J. B. White, Republican candidate for Congress, and the Hon. A. A. Chapin, Republican candidate for Judge of the Superior Court, were elected over their Democratic opponents. In the session of the State Senate of 1887, was Chairman of the Committee on Prisons, and a member of the Committee on the Judiciary and Cities and Towns. As Chairman of the Committee on Prisons in 1887 he made an investigation of the Southern Prison located at Jeffersonville, and made a report to the Senate of the condition, mismanagement, and corrupt practices then existing in the State prison which compelled the resignation of the warden and directors (all Democrats) and resulted in the selection of an entirely new management.

HON. JAMES M. BARRETT.

Also prepared and introduced a bill for the complete reorganization of the prison system of the State by taking the appointment of directors away from the Legislature, and putting it in the hands of the Governor with power of removal. The bill, like all other bills of that session, failed to become a law by reason of the well-remembered "dead lock" of that session. A similar bill, however, was passed by the Democratic Legislature of 1893, and is now a law.

In 1889 was made Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary—the most important and hardest worked committee of the Senate, and to which are referred all important measures. To this committee was referred the several bills of that session looking to the securing of a new election law for Indiana. As Chairman he prepared and reported a substitute bill, which was passed, and is now known as the Australian ballot law. Took an active part on the floor of the Senate in securing the passage of the School Book Law, and introduced and passed through the Senate a stringent bill against all trusts and combines, but which failed to pass the Lower House. He was author of the street improvement law, generally known as the "Barrett law," under which all street improvements in the cities and towns of Indiana have been made for the past six years, and which gave an impetus to street improvements in every part of the State, so that the principal streets of the cities may be said to be "lifted out of the mud."

After the close of the session of 1889, the Indianapolis Sentinel paid him the following compliment:

"Among the Democratic leaders of the Fifty-sixth General Assembly none have taken higher rank or wielded greater influence than Senator Barrett of Allen County. He is a young man of extraordinary ability and untiring industry, and possesses all the qualities for bold and successful leadership. His knowledge of the various departments of the State government and of the necessities and wants of the people is broad and comprehensive. He is a diligent student, an indefatigable worker, a ready debater, and an excellent parliamentarian. He is well versed in the science of government, and his ideas of public duty are of the highest. He was one of the most conspicuous figures in the session just ended, and to him, as much as to and other member of either chamber, is due the successful issue of the fight for election reform, and the rout of the schoolbook trust. Few men better equipped for legislative duties have ever sat in an Indiana General Assembly."

Senator Barrett is Chairman of the Allen County Democratic Central Committee at the present time.

His legal ability was recognized by the Commissioners of Allen County in their selection of him as County Attorney.

SENATE AND HOUSE.

WORK OF OUR NATIONAL LAWMAKERS.

Proceedings of the Senate and House of Representatives—Important Measures Discussed and Acted Upon—Gist of the Business.

The National Solons.

The Senate devoted Monday to a discussion of our foreign relations and the Nicaragua canal. The House devoted the day, under the rules, to the business reported from the District of Columbia Committee. Several bills of purely local importance were passed and a resolution was adopted setting aside the third Saturday in January for eulogies on the life and character of Marcus B. Lisle, late representative from the Tenth Kentucky District.

The House on Tuesday, after a spirited debate, passed the bill legalizing the pooling of railroads, by a vote of 166 to 110. Mr. Breckinridge of Kentucky reported the urgent deficiency bill. Mr. Dingley of Maine asked unanimous consent for the consideration of a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for information first as to whether the articles of the Behring Sea tribunal had resulted last season in saving the fur seal herds from that destruction they were intended to prevent; second, information as to the number and sex of seals killed by pelagic sealers; third, the protection of fur seal herds on the Pribyloff Islands; and fourth, the revenue derived by the Government from the seals during the past and the expenditure of the Government for the protection during the same period. The business of the Senate was confined to confirming nominations.

By a vote of 24 to 34 the Senate refused Wednesday to take up Mr. Vest's resolution for an amendment of the rules. An unsuccessful attempt was made to secure consideration of the bill to strike out the differential duty on sugar. Consideration of the urgency deficiency bill was begun by the House. A motion to strike out the appropriation for the collection of the income tax was defeated. A majority of the House Banking and Currency Committee is said to be opposed to the administration plan for currency reform. In a letter to the committee, Lyman J. Gage, of Chicago, recommended the issue of $250,000,000 in 2½ per cent. bonds and the retirement of legal tender notes.

The Senate adjourned Thursday until Monday. Practically all the time of the session was consumed in the discussion of the bill to establish a national university at Washington and the Nicaragua canal bill. The House passed three appropriation bills—the urgent deficiency, fortifications and military academy—and made fair progress on the pension bill. Mr. Cockran secured a record-making vote on the appropriation for the collection of the income tax by moving to recommit the bill with instructions to strike it out, but his motion was defeated by 120 majority, the vote standing 49 to 169. The fortifications bill as passed carried $1,879,057, $5,473,646 less than the estimates, and the military academy bill $457,678, $127,372 less than the estimates. The pension bill carries $141,381,570, $200,000 less than the estimates, and $10,200,000 less than the appropriation for the current fiscal year.

The time of the House was consumed Friday with debate on the pension appropriation bill, and although it abounded in charges and counter charges it lacked interesting detail. The bill carries $141,381,570, and was passed without amendment. The Hitt resolution of inquiry calling on the Secretary of State for the correspondence relating to the payment of $425,000 in connection with the fur seal controversy was adopted. A resolution authorizing Commander Dennis Mullen, of the United States navy, to accept a medal from the Chilean Government was adopted. The Senate was not in session.

The quick, sharp stroke of a Richerden hall bell—Roderick had started at the long familiar sound, and even changed color a little. But it was no visitors, only the post.

"Just business—Mr. Maclagan, our lawyer. He might have written sooner, if only to apologize for finding us such a wretched 'flat' instead of the furnished house I ordered." And Roderick, looking first disappointed, then vexed, was going apparently to tear up the letter, but meeting Silence's eyes, he stopped, and passed it over to her to read. "It is such a comfort to me that I can tell you everything," he said, tenderly. "You are sure never to be vexed or cross, or hurt—oh, my darling!" If she had been either of the three, that last word, and the tone of it, would have healed all.

Yet the letter, read aloud, was a little hard to bear; for both.

"'Dear Sir,' (he used to call me dear Mr. Roderick; he has been our man of business these forty years): 'Perhaps you were not aware that the furnished house you wished me to hire would have swallowed up half your income in mere rent, so I took the liberty of getting something more advisable, which I hope will please you, during the time that Blackhall is being finished. I forwarded the address, as desired, to your three sisters here, and to Mrs. Jardine in England. My wife will do herself the honor of calling on young Mrs. Jardine. I wonder how the old lady will approve of that?'"

"Of my being called Mrs. Jardine, or of Mrs. Maclagan visiting me, does he mean?" said Silence, with her smile of grave simplicity. "It is a pity for the lady to come, if she fears to displease your mother," added she, with a slight sigh, which went to her husband's very heart.

"The 'lady,' indeed!" said he, bitterly. "Oh, my mother does not know her. She does not belong to our set at all. Her calling upon my wife is quite unnecessary, rather a liberty."

"Had you many friends here? Is it I who have lost you them?" asked Silence, mournfuly, and then looked sorry she had said it. "My husband, I did not mean to regret; and it is too late to suffer you to regret. We can not alter anything now."

"We would not if we could," cried Roderick, passionately. "We know, if no other human creature does, how happy we are, how entirely we belong to one another."

"Thank God!"

"I know now, I have found that blessing which my father said was the greatest any man could get, a sweet-tempered wife," cried Roderick, fondly, as they stood together at the window, watching the rain sweep down.

"Mamma was right. And papa loved her. I mean, not exactly as you love me, because he had loved some one else in his youth; she told me that herself, one day. Still, he entirely respected and trusted her; they were very happy in their way. But, oh!" She suddenly turned to her husband with such a look in her eyes—a look that none but he had ever seen or would ever see. "My first love, my last love! God is good to have let me marry you"

"I am very cross to-day, Silence, and I know it."

"Yes, so do I," she said and smiled. "But, if you know it, it is half conquered. Go and take a good walk, and walk it off, as in the days when you were in love, you know."

"As if those days had ended, or ever would end!" answered Roderick, parting her hair and looking passionately down into her eyes. "My good angel! But don't you see how much of the devil I have in me still? How do you mean to make me good?"

"I mean us to make one another good, she answered. "My mother used to say"—it was strange and touching this way she had now of speaking of her mother, as if not dead, but only absent somewhere, and still mixed up with all their daily life—"my mother said, it is better to use one's feet or hands than one's tongue when one is vexed about anything. Therefore, go."

Roderick went, and his wife stood watching him down the rainy street with eyes he saw not, and a heart that in its deepest depths was, even to him, not wholly known—or shown.

"I think, though you had never been mine," she murmured, "so long as you were yourself, I would have loved you just the same. But, since you are mine—oh, my love; my love!"

Roderick came back in quite a cheerful mood. "My walk has done me good, spite of the rain. And I have actually found a friend—Tom Grierson, lately married too. He and his wife are going to the coast the day after to-morrow, but they insist upon 'making up a party' (that is the phrase, love) for us to-morrow. She will call first, and invite you with due ceremony. And you shall wear your wedding dress, and the diamonds Cousin Silence left to my future wife. Little she thought it would be another Silence Jardine! You will look so charming, and I shall be so proud. We must go."

"Must we?"

With the quick intuition, the instinctive thought-reading, learned by those who deeply love, and only those, Roderick detected at once the slight hesitation.

"Is it this?" he said, with a glance at her black dress. "Do you very much dislike going?"

"I dislike nothing if you like it, and it seems pleasant and good to you."

"Thank you, my darling. Yes, this will be pleasant, I think, and good also. The Griersons are among what my family"—he rarely named his mother now—"call 'the best people in the place.' Excellent people, too; intelligent, cultivated. I like them, and so will you; old Mrs. Grierson especially."

"Do they know anything? About me, I mean."

"I cannot tell; I did not ask. You see, I could not ask," added Roderick, clouding over. But immediately he drew his wife close and kissed her fondly. "It does not matter either way. Never mind, love. We will go—and for the rest take our chance. We have done the deed, we are married. No human being can ever part us more."

Still, with a curious foreboding of what might come, after the note of invitation and apology which, to Silence's evident relief, arrived next day, instead of Mrs. Grierson herself, Roderick helped his wife to choose her "braws" for this first appearance in the world—such a different world from the innocent monde of Neuchatel! then he left her to her toilet, and sat reading, or trying to read, till she appeared.

Not exactly the angelic vision of her marriage morning; "a spirit, yet a woman too." Very womanly, if not very fashionable, for the white dress was high round her throat, and the round soft arms gleamed under a semi-transparent cloud instead of being obtrusively bare.

She belonged to that class of beauties who, owing all their charm to expression, only look well when they are happy. A disappointed life might have made her quite an ordinary girl all her days; but now, when leaning on her young husband's arm, she entered the Griersons' drawing-room, there was such a light in her eyes, such a tender glow in her cheeks, and about her whole bearing that quiet dignity, ease and grace which, to natures like hers, only come with the consciousness of being loved, that very few, regarding her, would have hesitated to exclaim, "What a sweet-looking woman!"

Roderick saw the impression she made, saw indeed, for the first few delightful minutes, nothing else; until turning suddenly he perceived sitting close by, splendidly dressed and surrounded by quite a little court, his sister Bella, Mrs. Alexander Thomson.

With a bow to his sister, a mere formal bow, as to any other lady, he drew his wife's arm through his, and they passed on to the other end of the room.

It was a regular Richerden dinner, such as both had been familiar with from their youth upward, but Roderick felt like a ghost revisiting the well-known scenes. A not unhappy ghost certainly, in spite of Bella sitting there. Through all the dazzle of lights and clatter of voices (how loud everybody talked, and how sharp and shrill the Richerden accent sounded!) his eager ear listened for the occasional low-toned words spoken with a slight foreign intonation, and his eye rested tenderly on the fair, calm face of his wife. She was evidently neither shy nor strange, but perfectly dignified and self-possessed. He wondered if Bella saw her.

"My husband seems charmed with your wife; I shall be quite jealous directly," said his hostess. "Where did you find her? She looks different from our Richerden girls. Is she Scotch?"

"Of a Scotch family, but Swiss born. We were married in Switzerland. Her father was my father's second cousin, and her name was Silence Jardine. You must have heard of it before, Mrs. Grierson?"

And Roderick turned to a gentle-looking old lady on his other hand, aunt to the young people, whom he had told Silence she would be sure to like.

"I remember your father's cousin, Miss Jardine. And your wife is her namesake? What a curious coincidence! But, I understood—— However, one never hears quite the truth about love affairs; so, no matter," added the old lady, stopping herself. "All's well that ends well. Happy's the wooing that's not long a-doing."

"Ours was fully six months a-doing," said Roderick, smiling. "We waited as long as possible; on account of her mother's death, and for other reasons; and then we married. A right and wise and prudent marriage, as I think a true love marriage always is," he added, pointedly, for he felt his sister was listening to every word he said. And he knew that old Mrs. Grierson was one to whom everybody told everything, though even scandal, passing through the alembic of her sweet nature, came out harmless; she was noted for never having been heard to say an ill word of anybody.

"You are right," she answered; and her eyes, placid with long and patiently borne sorrow—she was a childless widow—rested kindly on the young bride. "By her face I should say that Mrs. Jardine was one of those rare women who are in the world but not of it."

"How well you read her. I thought you would," cried Roderick, warmly. "If ever there was a saintly creature born—— But I am her husband, and ought not to speak."

"Who is to speak for us if not our husbands, I should like to know?" said young Mrs. Grierson. "And when there are actually three brides present. By the bye, Mrs. Thomson, I did not know till a few minutes ago that it was your own sister-in-law I was inviting you to meet; but I shall learn the ins and outs of Richerden people in time. You and your brother must have married within a few weeks of one another."

"No, some months," said Roderick, with his eyes firmly fixed on his plate. Bella, with some smiling word or two, turned back again to her next neighbor, with whom she had been gayly conversing all dinner-time. So the difficulty passed, seemingly unnoticed by everybody.

When the ladies rose, and he was forced to let Silence pass him without a warning or explanatory word, catching only the bright smile which showed she was at ease and happy, because underneath this outside show was the sweet inner reality that they two were everything to one another, Roderick vexed himself with conjectures as to what was happening in the drawing-room, and blamed himself for what now seemed the moral cowardice of letting his young wife drop ignorantly into the very midst of her foes. So absorbed was he with these thoughts that he quite started when a slap on the back roused him to the consciousness of his new brother-in-law, Mr. Alexander Thomson.

"Didn't see you till this minute. Very odd—my wife never told me we should meet you here. And was that your wife?—the uncommon nice girl that sat beside Grierson? Phew!" with a slight whistle; then confidentially, "the women are all fools, we know. Old lady cuts up rough still? Never mind; what's the odds, so long as you're happy? Glad to meet you again, my boy. When are you coming to see us?"

Had it been possible to frame a speech more calculated than another to set every nerve tingling in Roderick's frame, or touch to the quick his pride, his sensitiveness, his strong family feeling, these words of Mr. Thomson would have accomplished it. He had forcibly to say to himself that they were well meant, and to shut his eyes in an agony of brotherly pity to the rapidly reddening face, thickening speech, and always coarse manners of the person—you could not say gentleman—whom Bella had chosen to marry before he could bring himself to reply. Even then it was as briefly as possible.

"Thank you. We have only just arrived at Richerden, and are going to Blackhall as soon as possible."

"But we shall see you before we go. Bella will be delighted, and if she isn't I shall; and I hope I'm master in my own house. Depend upon it," dropping his hand heavily upon the table, and looking round with a triumphant gleam in his fishy eyes, "the one thing a husband should try for from the very first is to be master in his own house."

"If he can be he will be without need to say a word about it; and if he can't be, why, it's no good trying."

The laugh went round at this naive reply of young Grierson's, but Roderick never said a word. And when the gentlemen fell into gentlemen's talk, politics and so on, though he liked it, having been long enough absent from England to feel an interest in all that was going on there, his mind continually wandered not only to his wife, whose happiness he knew he made, and felt it was in his power to make, but to the sister who had thrown away her own happiness, and over whose lot, be it good or ill, he had no longer the smallest influence.

POOR MARKSMANSHIP.

Firing in Both Army and Navy Less Accurate Than Formerly.

The training of naval artillerists has, in recent years, been given a good deal of attention, and no end of powder and shot has been expended in target practice designed to serve a more telling purpose in actual warfare should the occasion present itself. It would seem, therefore, that the floating equipments of naval powers of to-day ought to give good accounts of themselves in point of marksmanship if called into action, though, according to Cassier's Magazine, it would be presumptuous to undertake to foreshadow possible results. If, on the other hand, past experience counts for anything, there would seem to have been a notable decline in accuracy in naval gunnery, growing with successive improvements in naval architecture and naval armament. It was estimated some years ago, from data furnished by target practice at sea, that a heavy gun must be discharged fifty times to make one effective hit. The old smoothbores were credited with killing a man by the discharge of their guns weight in shot in other words, three tons of 32-pounder shot was required for the purpose. Actual service test with modern high-power guns, however—guns weighing twelve tons—has, within the past ten or twelve years, shown that it took about sixteen tons of projectiles to accomplish the same thing. It is interesting to note from what statistics are available that the introduction of rifled muskets into the armies has had a somewhat similar result. The old-time muskets, it is said, killed a man by firing at him his own weight in leaden bullets, but the modern rifle in the hands of the average soldier, so it has been figured out, does not effect a fatality until it has discharged twice the man's weight in lead. Both here, as well as in naval shooting, therefore, there has been shown to be an important demand for greater skill and care. Whether this has been met in any measure, future hostilities only will tell.

Sowing Plants with Gunpowder.

Alexander Nasmyth, the landscape painter, was a man fruitful in expedients. To his mind, the fact that a thing could not be done in the ordinary manner was no reason why it should be given up. His son relates the following interesting example of his ingenuity:

The Duke of Athol says he consulted him as to some improvements which he desired to make in his woodland scenery near Dunkeld. Among other things, a certain rocky crag needed to be planted with trees, to relieve the grim barrenness of its appearance. The question was how to do it, as it was impossible for any man to climb the crag in order to set seed or plants in the clefts of the rock.

A happy disastrous accident struck my father. Having observed in front of the castle a pair of small cannon used for firing salutes on great days, it occurred to him to turn them to account. A tinsmith in the village was ordered to make a number of canisters with covers. The canisters were filled with all sorts of suitable tree seeds. The cannon was loaded and the canisters were fired up against the high face of the rock. They burst and scattered the seed in all directions. Some years after, when my father revisited the place, he was delighted to find that his scheme of planting by artillery had proved successful, the trees were growing in all the crevices of the cliff.

BEER is more dangerous than whisky. That is the verdict of the Scientific American, which sets forth that the use of beer is found to produce a species of degeneration of all the organs, profound and certain fatty deposits, diminished circulation, conditions of congestion and perversion of functional activities, local inflammation of both liver and kidneys are constantly present. A slight injury, a severe cold, or a shock to the body or the mind, will commonly provoke acute disease ending fatally in a beer drinker.

SAVED GRANT'S LIFE.

End of the Heroic Career of Lizzie Bryan—Dying in a Poorhouse.

There lies, dying in the poorhouse, Lizzie Bryan, a woman of remarkable history, who acted as a union spy and who saved the life of General Ulysses S. Grant, says the New York Recorder. Years ago, when her father died, she inherited a small fortune of $18,000, but in her eighteenth year, her fortune had dwindled to only $5,500. With this she came to New York, to friends, and just before the war bought two of the famous horses of Dan Rice's circus. These horses were named Starface and Rudolph.

Then the war broke out and she enlisted as a nurse to go to the front, and when she did so Starface accompanied her. She did not remain long at the hospital as a nurse, because more daring work was suggested to her, and she freely placed herself under orders in the fighting contingent, and from that hour was a freebooter. She donned male attire, wore boots and spurs, acted as orderly and carried dispatches until the close of the war. She was three times wounded, but with no serious result. She wore a false sole in her boot, and in it were carried the dispatches.

Many times she carried these dispatches during an action, riding across or around the lines amid the flying shots. She was attached to General Grant's headquarters, and is enthusiastic in speaking of him even to-day, as the kindest and best of generals, often telling how she amused him by her dancing in the camp. The most remarkable night for her was one when she was crossing the grounds and heard behind a clump of trees voices—recognizing one as that of General Grant. Closer she crept and managed to get nearer him. There was an angry debate going on, and just as she neared the general the man with him made a peculiar movement with his hand, and as he did so she sprang forward and struck a revolver out of his hand. The man made all sorts of denials, but six months afterwards General Grant personally presented her with a gold watch, telling her he believed she had really saved his life that night. The greatest personal loss she suffered during the war was the shooting of her beautiful horse Starface from under her at Antietam. Once she was captured and spent a few days at Libby prison.

So Lizzie Bryan, after her career of fighting for the Union like a man, when she could have lived in luxury, is now lying deaf and crippled in a county poorhouse, waiting for the angel of death to write finis to as remarkable a career as a woman has had in our day.

A HISTORIC MONUMENT.

Erected in Honor of Major Andre by Cyrus W. Field.

A curious and anomalous spectacle is presented by the voluntary restoration a few weeks ago of the Major Andre monument, erected in Tappan, N. Y., by the late Cyrus W. Field. At Tarrytown, only a short distance away, directly across the Hudson, stands the shaft that perpetuates the memory of Andre's captors—John Paulding, David Williams and Isaac Van Wart. Almost in sight of each other are these memorial tablets. One to the spy, who planned with the traitor, Benedict Arnold, what might have proven a disastrous blow to American liberty. The other commemorates his capture and the brave, patriotic fellows who so luckily accomplished it.

The monument to Major Andre in Tappan was placed there by Cyrus W. Field. Mr. Field's motive has frequently been questioned, but there does not appear to be any ground for believing that the great American was moved by other than a sentimental impulse.

Two weeks after the monument was placed on the hill there was an explosion in the night time heard by a few, and when the sun rose next day, Major Andre's monument, although not entirely destroyed, lay chipped and overthrown on the ground. Then Mr. Field discovered that the spirit of '76 was still abroad in the land, but he was not daunted in his pet project. He restored the stone to its former position and a wicked looking fence with iron spikes surrounded it. But the patriotic blood of the "Tappan Zee" did not falter. The monument again fell. It lay where it had been pitched nearly nine long years until recently. Mr. Field has himself passed away in the meanwhile. While living he never found out who dismantled the monument, or, if he did, he never disclosed the names of those engaged in the affair. He was much incensed at the time, and threatened prosecution against the perpetrators of what he called "the outrage."

"MY OWN THINGS."

This Is an Age of Individual Environment.

"Sam, mamma, John's got my spoon. Can't I have it? It's mine."

"Oh, just look! Susan's playing tea-party with my dessert plate. Make her stop. She'll break it."

I wish you'd find my pepper box. This isn't mine," proclaims the head of the house. It's mighty queer these servants can't ever remember my things."

In the library Uncle Jim is twisting and turning and looking daggers at the unconscious caller who is sitting in his special chair. One member of the household is on the wrong side of the table, and the right paper-knife is on the left magazine. He always sits on the other side for reading. From the drawing-room the voice of the elder daughter is heard, saying, "Oh, no; I couldn't endure these portieres. The colors do not suit my style, you know." I made a fuss, and mamma took them in her room. I feel color in every nerve."

Such is what the fashion for having individual things has brought upon the household. We have individual furnishings, the schemes of hanging to bring out the individual beauty of my lady's eyes, the tint of her hair, or the gleam of her shoulders, and on the other hand—perish the thought!—to sink the indivual in the useful! Have we not the special chair and footrest, candlestick and cushion?

Small wonder, then, that the practical, prosaic housewife exclaims: "I wish we could go back to those early Christian days when they had all things in common. I believe I could bear it even with towels."—New York Times.

She Wedded Them All.

Hengrave Hall, near Bury St. Edmunds, which has been sold for over ninety thousand pounds, at one time belonged to Penelope, a daughter of Earl Rivers. Of this fair aristocrat an amusing story is told. She had three suitors at the same time, Sir George Trenchard, Sir John Gage and Sir William Hervey, and to keep peace between the rivals she threatened the first aggressor with her perpetual displeasure, telling them that if they would wait she would have them all in turn—a promise which she actually performed. The gentleman first favored was Sir George Trenchard. He died shortly afterward, and it was not long before she became Lady Gage. Sir John, by whom she had nine children, died in the year 1633, and two years later his widow was led to the altar by Sir William Hervey. The lady survived all her husbands.

Smoke 'Em Through Tubes.

The late Sir Morrell Mackenzie told his cigarette-smoking patients that they they should smoke their cigarettes through a tube, when he promised that "the smoker will get all the good effects of the soothing plant without the bane which lurks in it." The cigarette tube, in fact, acts as a condenser of the nicotine alkaloid. It has ben found, however, that a small plug of wool inserted in the mouth end of a cigarette has the same effect, while a piece of natural straw around the mouth-piece keeps the cigarette so cool that, while the woolen anti-nicotine plug effectually guards the throat, chest, lungs and general health, the lips are also protected from poison, swelling, inflammation, blistering, burning, smarting, irritation and other injuries medically traced to cigarette smoking.

Legacy Tax in Massachusetts.

From Treasurer Phillips' accounts the legacy tax of Massachusetts will probably be an important item in the whole State tax. Since the Supreme Court decided that the act passed in 1891, imposing a tax on collateral legacies and succession, was constitutional, the receipts from this taxation have been surprisingly large. During 1892 the commonwealth received about $12,000 from the tax. In 1893 there was about $59,000 received. Up to date, during 1894, the commonwealth has received from the legacy tax $127,723.84. During the last session of the Legislature a bill was prepared to reach direct inheritance as well. This bill will be presented at the next session of the general court.—Boston Transcript.

Dentists Like Damp Weather.

"I can always tell," said a dentist, "when a storm is coming without consulting either a barometer or the weather forecasts. My patients are the best barometers in the world. The teeth are peculiarly affected by damp weather, particularly bad teeth. When strangers begin flocking to my office complaining of toothache and pains in the jaw I know that we are going to have a spell of bad weather. A good bit of it is neuralgia, but it is a sure sign. This rush of business keeps up until the stormy weather sets in, and when business falls off I know the storm is abating and that we will have fine weather. When toothache patients are few and far between you can rest assured that a season of pleasant weather is at hand."—New York Tribune.

THURSDAY.....DECEMBER 20, 1894

CALIFORNIA republicans will contest the election of Budd, the democrat who was elected govetnor by small plurality. That is pretty hoggish, as so few democrats got anything.

THE Dispatch, speaking of the proposed gerrymander of the state, says, "To the question as to whether it is the right time or not, let them (the legislature) pay no attention." In other words. "Let us not only break the laws, but defy the constitution of the state." And yet the Dispatch claims to be a law abiding institution.

DUN'S REVIEW of Dec. 15, shows an increase in manufacturing business of 15 per cent, as compared with the same week last year. There is an increase in the number of persons employed, and in the average wages paid over the report of last year. But in all cases the rates and smount of business were still a little below two years ago.

IN THE next congress, the populists will have only 5 members. In the present congress they have 11, In other words, they lost over half their members at the recent election. So it will be seen, that their claim of great gains, turns out to be great losses. The democrats at the last election lost 51 per cent of their members; the populists lost 54 per cent of theirs. The democrats have 106 members left; the populists have only 5. Yet they go about talking of the dead old parties.

REPUBLICAN papers say that under the McKinley law, the beet raisers of California got $5 a ton for beets, but will now get but $4. Then they say this decrease of price is due to "free trade." We presume some of their readers are deceived by this statement. What are the facts? The tariff on sugar is 40 per cent under the new law, while under the McKinley law, it was lower, and in case of raw sugar, it was free, So the McKinley law was nearer "free trade" than the present one. Will they deny it?

Court.

Work began early Monday, the bell ringing at nine, and by the time the attorneys from the north could reach here, everything was ready. There was a little delay in getting all the members of the grand jury in, but when they had arrived, Judge Peofield gave them their "charge" and general instructions They must weigh all matters carefully, must not bring indictments in trivial cases, or where there was nothing but a petty quarrel or spite work, must not bring before the court anything that could as well be tried before a justice, as court is more expensive. Yet there are cases where it should come before court rather than a justice in cases in which the court has better means of securing the ends of justice. Girls under 15 and boys under 16, if found indictable for serious offenses, should be sent to the reformatory institutions rather than punished by court and sent to jail or prison. He made C. S Clark foreman of the grand jury and Frank Jones their bailiff. The jury itself, on being sent to their room, made Mike Kiplinger their secretary or clerk C. H. Crew is courtroom bailiff. The court started out with a full corps of attorneys. From this place all were there, McClellan, Garwood, Brown, Baxter, Emanuel, Welsheimer, J. E and J. H. Rose, E. D. Hartman, Tefft, Husselman From Waterloo were W. H. Leas, Gen Blair, C. M. Phillips, J. F. Shuman, who has also his office here. From Angola were Prosecutor Butler and Frank Roby. From Butler were Fosdick, Baxter, Brink, and Coats. That day and Tuesday cases were called and time set for trial.

Obituary.

Clela B., Daugter of Rev J. Daniel and Nora Brosy was born Sep. 15, 1890, and departed this life Dec. 10, 1894, aged 4 years, 2 month and 26 days. Clela was a lover of the beautiful; though young, yet had a childish knowledge of Jesus. She was a member of Mrs Bolender's Sabbath school class in the infant department. She could scarcely consent to the idea of staying at home after her health had failed. The funeral services were largely attended at the Lutheran church Dec. 12. The services were conducted by Rev. W. D. Trover, assisted by several of the brother ministers of town. The sermon was based on Christ's words in reference to the children; Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me for of such is the kingdom of heaven. Clela was unselfish and kind, and by her loving ways won the affection of many. Though a great sufferer, never complained—teaching us the great lesson of patience. We grieve that the frost of life, blighted our little blossom, but Christ in his infinite wisdom and goodness, transplanted our precious treasure in his own garden of eternal sunshine, where the blights of disease and death are not known, but the light of his glory makes all perfect.

DOCTOR DAVID.

You wanted to know, Tom, why I go to the trouble each year at Christmas time to make up a wreath of laurel and holly and express it to that little town way over in Canada. Well, I've done it for years, Tom, and I expect to repeat the act with each recurring December so long as I live. I'm not sure but that I shall leave a provision in my will for its continuance after I am gathered to my fathers. Light your pipe afresh, my boy, and I'll tell you the little story, for I am in a reminiscent mood to-night.

Poor, dear old Doctor David! How often in boyhood have I sat by the cheerful kitchen fire and listened with wrapt attention and unfeigned admiration to his quavering voice as he rocked and sang to sleep my peevish baby sister, when even mother was unable to soothe her.

The doctor was not called so because he was one, but because he believed he was. Some unappreciative grown people and even a few of the ruder boys spoke of him as old Dave, but to us who better knew him he was always Doctor David. He was an old man. To us children he seemed a very Methuselah. There was a tradition that at one time he had had a wife and children, but to any but the very oldest inhabitant of the village little credence was placed in the story. For more than a score of years he had been spoken of as old Dave or Doctor David, according to the speaker.

His home was a little hut on the bank of the river near the grist mill. Only a favored few of us were ever honored with a glimpse of the interior. I was his especial favorite—perhaps because my mother was always kind to him—and I have sat for hours at a time in the dark little cabin, my hands clasped across my knees, and watched him as he sat patiently making ax-helves or splint-brooms from sticks of ash. At such times I stealthily studied the mysteries of the black roof and sides of the cabin, not daring to ask him concerning the rifle, the shotgun, the ax, the assortment of knives, the skins, the roots and seeds and bunches of dried leaves which were hung in ghostly array in the gloom. Not even I was allowed within the mysterious room when he was concocting his medicines. His "roots and yarbs" and his methods of converting them into salves and bitters were too sacred for even me to know anything about.

occasional making of an ax handle, a barn broom or some medicine could be called work. And yet he rarely went hungry. More than our home was always open to him, and at more than our table did the old man always find a welcome. Shiftless and lazy all the villagers pronounced him. Everybody knew he was incapable of doing any great wrong, and no one dreamed that lurking in his peaceful soul there was a drop of the heroic; but let me not anticipate my story.

There had been a long spell of cold weather, and the river had frozen over so that there had been good skating above the milldam. But a few days before Christmas there came a thaw, with a great deal of rain, and we boys were disconsolate, fearing there would be no skating Christmas. For an eighth of a mile above the dam, where the current was more swift, the ice broke and went down stream, tumbling over the twenty-foot dam and pounding itself to bits in the churning, rocky rapids below. But higher up, just beyond the bend, the ice seemed firm, and Christmas morning, despite threats and warnings, half a dozen of us boys smuggled our skates past our mothers' wachful eyes and stole off to the river. Soon we were enjoying the intoxication of smooth ice, new skates and crisp air, and not a thought of danger was permitted to interfere with our sport.

One of my skates became loose and I sat down to tighten the straps, not observing that I was but a few feet from the edge of the ice bordering on the open water. Suddenly there was a cracking sound, a chorus of cries, and before I could get to my feet I saw that a great section of ice had cracked off, broken into two pieces, and was floating down stream, the smaller piece bearing me with it. Instantly I realized my peril. My very blood seemed to freeze in my heart, and for a moment I could not even scream. I was drifting slowly, but I carried gently along in the center of the the current and that my velocity would increase with every moment. To my ears the roar of the fall and the awful rapids below sounded louder and more dreadful than they ever had before. I knew the course of the current perfectly, for I had stood on the bridge many times and watched the sawlogs in the spring carried gently along in the center of the river, going ever faster and faster until as they neared the dam the current coursed shoreward toward the left bank and then plunged downward, flinging the logs half their lengths in the air as they went over the watery precipice. I pictured myself going over the fatal fall, and then my tongue loosed and I added my cries to those of my terrified playmates, who until now had not had the presence of mind to run for help.

In an incredibly short space of time the banks were lined with excited villagers, helpless to render any aid, but each shouting useless directions to the others. I could see my mother running frantically along the the bank and then, sinking upon her knees in the snow, turn her white face to heaven. The terror of my situation had quieted my cries and I was trying to decide whether it would be less painful to plunge into the icy water and drown than to cling to the frail piece of ice and be dashed to pieces below the dam. I had seen one woman go over that dam the summer before, and the memory of her poor bruised and battered body as it was drawn to the shore half a mile below haunted me for a month. The awful picture came before me again, and I had closed my eyes and was about to jump into the water, when I heard a shout so different from the medley of cries along the shore that I looked to my right, toward the bank across from that on which was my mother.
